The conviction of Mrs. Florence E. S. Knapp, former secretary of state in New York, who was charged with grand larceny in handling the State census funds, has been generally accepted as just. Apparently the presiding justice was judicial and able, and the trial proceeded to logical conclusions from the evidence—largely evidence given reluctantly by Clara Knapp, Mrs. Knapp's stepdaughter. The offense was serious—appropriation of census funds by Mrs. Knapp's indorsement of a check for $2,875 made out to Clara Knapp, which the young woman, a college teacher, testified that she never earned and never saw. Though Mrs. Knapp denied the charge, her stepdaughter's testimony carried conviction. This charge was but one of several of the same nature. And however sorry for Mrs. Knapp one may be, anyone who is concerned about the future of women in politics and public life must be satisfied with the verdict. Had Mrs. Knapp escaped because she is a woman, should she now escape some punishment, however slight, women would suffer, not gain. Appointment or election of women would be less likely. The tendency to hold all women responsible for what Mrs. Knapp has done would be strengthened.

But there remains something unsatisfactory about the Knapp case, and a feeling has been expressing itself throughout the State that justice was not fully done. The census was a political grab bag. Thousands of jobs were turned over to party bosses for distribution as part of the rewards for the success of the party in the last election. Is it likely that Mrs. Knapp was the only one to secure some graft from the big sum expended? There were notable absences from the witness chair. One gets the impression that, though probably guilty of inexcusable graft, Mrs. Knapp, out of party loyalty, may have allowed men grafters to hide behind her petticoats. The feeling grows that there may have been others who should have been tried with her and who, under the same persistence, would have been found equally guilty. This explanation of the public sentiment in the State of New York concerning this memorable trial of a woman in public office is due the women of the Nation.

[From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, Monday, February 11, 1929]

THE 100,000 CENSUS JOBS

The 100,000 appointees required in taking the next Federal census will receive pay ranging from $5 and $8 a day to $3,000. Distributed as election spoils, it must not be supposed that these places are the less esteemed because the work and pay last in most instances not more than four weeks and in a few other instances six weeks.

It is just such jobs as these that are highly appreciated as enabling a myriad of political debts to be paid. Local workers whose ordinary activities would not permit them to take a permanent official appointment are provided with appreciated recognition, and the pay, being fairly good while it lasts, is received with the gladness with which unexpected windfalls, pin money, and modest strokes of good fortune are received.

The amendment to the census bill of Senator BRUCE, of Maryland, requiring the appointments to be made under the Civil Service Commission's regulation, hits Congress with a chill. The points he makes are not answered by pleas that his amendment would only introduce red tape, complicating the work of making the selections, and that these 100,000 temporary jobs are aside from the scope and purpose of the elaborate merit system.

As a matter of fact, the laws under which the Civil Service Commission operates are framed to cover census jobs of this precise kind. They are "emergency" appointments for which full provision is made. The adoption of his amendment would not mean a full compliance with all the conditions as to competitive examination required in the case of permanent appointments. Only qualifications showing a fitness for "emergency" jobs would have to be determined, and the procedure would be correspondingly informal.

A fitness certified to on that basis surely would be preferable to a fitness graded down to the standards of the spoils principle. Mr. BRUCE is correct in saying that the 1910 census was taken under a provision of law identical with his amendment and that the plan worked satisfactorily.

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Wednesday, February 6, 1929]

CENSUS AND CIVIL SERVICE

Senator BRUCE, of Maryland, has offered an amendment to the census bill, now before Congress, providing for the appointment of special agents, supervisors, supervisors' clerks, enumerators, and interpreters subject to the civil service law. Its purpose is to remove the 1930 census from partisan politics and to insure an accurate count.

In its present form the census bill makes possible an orgy of patronage dispensing. Approximately 100,000 workers are needed in the field force and, unless some safeguard is placed in the law, the Director of the Census and his aids may make appointments for political purposes without any regard for qualifications for the work.

According to the National Civil Service Reform League, a reliable census was obtained in 1910, when, at the request of the Director of the Census, supervisors of the census were selected through the machinery of the United States Civil Service Commission. For the law to give the director such wide discretion might have less happy results next time.

Previous census takings, notably that of 1890, have been scandalously conducted. In 1890 Republican Members of Congress were permitted to choose the field force. A check of its work showed that in New York City large numbers of residents, often entire houses, had been omitted. The inference was that Republican census takers had deliberately underestimated the population of a Democratic city to reduce its membership in Congress. In 1900, in Maryland, graveyards were canvassed to obtain additional representation in the house of delegates for the party in power.

Past experience has abundantly proved the desirability of Senator BRUCE'S amendment, not only to assure an honest and reliable count but to prevent the wasteful use of census funds.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS, January 3, 1929.

Senator BRUCE,

United States Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BRUCE: It appears that you are backing up the common-sense proposition that the employees of the Census Bureau shall be selected in accordance with the civil service law. One of the long-standing abuses of our National Government is the selection of persons not qualified for the tasks of making the decennial enumerations for the United States census. The qualifications are not severe, but it is essential that the enumerators should be accustomed to figures, competent to carry on simple accounts, intelligent, and honest. The breakdown of the census in New York State was principally through the appointment of incompetents, as well as a scandalous waste of public money, which could have been prevented by the appointment of well-qualified persons.

Business men the country over ought to stand for that principle because of the immensely important decisions that must be made upon the basis of the movement of population from decade to decade and from place to place. Though not a Baltimore constituent, I am a United States constituent of yours in the satisfaction I take in your effort for the public welfare.

Cordially yours,

ALBERT BUSHNELL HART.

GODFREY L. CABOT (INC.),
Boston, Mass., February 5, 1929.

Senator W. C. BRUCE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BRUCE: I beg to express to you my personal appreciation of your action in introducing an amendment to the census bill placing the employees under civil-service rules. I don't know of any bunch of employees where this rule can be applied with more benefit or less inconvenience to the departmental heads. They are obliged to select a great number of men in a hurry, and this will enable them to select the best men under circumstances that will minimize the personal annoyance to them from the unsuccessful applicants.

Secondly, during the comparatively short time of employment these employees are not likely to seriously deteriorate in mind or body, as inevitably happens with the lapse of time in the case of permanent appointments. Therefore the problem in getting rid of an undesirable employee against whom, however, no serious charges can be made is much less likely to present itself in temporary than in permanent appointments, and the difficulty of doing so is not likely to be nearly so great, because such incumbents are much less likely to put up a hard fight for reinstatement in a temporary job than in a permanent one.

Hoping this will find all well with you and your family, and begging to be warmly remembered to Mrs. Bruce, I am,

Yours very sincerely,

GODFREY L. CABOT.

BUFFALO, N. Y., February 5, 1929.

Hon. WILLIAM C. BRUCE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I observe that you propose to amend the census bill by providing that those who shall take the next Federal census shall be selected by examinations under the national civil service law, and thus that census will be taken and prepared in a businesslike way, as I understand the last one was, instead of the old political job way, that used to disgrace our Federal census just as it disgraced our last State census in this State. While I do not belong to your political party, I do belong to any political party for the time being that thus proposes to substitute patriotism, common sense, and economy, and the reign of law for plain old fashioned political jobbery. More power to your elbow, and especially to your brain.

Sincerely your friend,

ADELBERT MOOT.

NEW JERSEY SENATORIAL ELECTION (REPT. NO. 1861)

Mr. McNARY. From the Special Committee Investigating Expenditures in Senatorial Primary and General Elections, referred to as the Reed committee, I submit a report on the New Jersey senatorial contest. I ask that the report may be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report (No. 1861) will be printed and lie on the table.

PENNSYLVANIA SENATORIAL ELECTION (REPT. NO. 1858)

Mr. REED of Missouri. On behalf of the Special Committee Investigating Expenditures in Senatorial Primary and General Elections, I submit a general report touching the Vare case, and merely make the statement that the report is unanimous by the committee upon the record as it stands. The junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has expressed his views in a separate document, which is appended to and made a part of the report. I ask that the report of the committee may be printed and lie on the table. I will ask the senior Senator from Utah how many extra copies should be printed?

Mr. SMOOT. That would have to be estimated for. I can not tell the Senator how many could be printed under the law.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I think, Mr. President, that a thousand copies will be first and last demanded.

Mr. SMOOT. I think, under the law, a thousand copies may be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report (No. 1858) will lie on the table and a thousand copies will be printed.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I have one word further to say. I wish to give notice that on to-morrow I intend to call this report to the attention of the Senate as a privileged matter.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WALSH of Montana, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, to which was referred the bill (S. 5482) to authorize the disposition of unplatted portions of Government town sites on irrigation projects under the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1857) thereon.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15723) authorizing an appropriation of Crow tribal funds for payment of council and delegate expenses, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1859) thereon.

Mr. EDGE (for Mr. EDWARDS), from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16533) to authorize the American Legion, Department of New Jersey, to erect a memorial chapel at the naval air station, Lakehurst, N. J., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1860) thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, from the Committee on Pensions, reported an additional amendment to the bill (H. R. 16878) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, etc., and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, and submitted a report (No. 1727, pt. 3) thereon.

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 5555) to provide more effectively for the national defense by increasing the efficiency of the Air Corps of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1862) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

Mr. GREENE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that to-day that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

S. 1530. An act for the relief of Gilpin Construction Co.;

S. 3881. An act to provide for the paving of the Government road, known as the Dry Valley Road, commencing where said road leaves the La Fayette Road, in the city of Rossville, Ga., and extending to Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, constituting an approach road to said park;

S. 5179. An act to improve the efficiency of the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 213. Joint resolution to provide for extending the time in which the United States Supreme Court Building Commission shall report to Congress.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRATTON:

A bill (S. 5861) granting a pension to John L. Tenney; and

A bill (S. 5862) granting an increase of pension to R. L. Baca; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GILLETT:

A bill (S. 5863) for the relief of Isabel Alger; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 5864) to provide for the study, investigation, and survey, for commemorative purposes, of battle fields in the vicinity of Richmond, Va.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOWELL:

A bill (S. 5865) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1887; and

A bill (S. 5866) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1887; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 5867) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Chattanooga and the county of Hamilton, Tenn., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near Chattanooga, Hamilton County, Tenn.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana:

A bill (S. 586[illegible] granting a pension to Virgil H. Effinger; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WAGNER:

A bill (S. 5869) to authorize the cession to the city of New York of land on the northerly side of New Dorp Lane in exchange for permission to connect Miller Field with the said city's public sewer system; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 5870) to amend an act regulating the height of buildings in the District of Columbia, approved June 1, 1910; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 5871) granting relief to disabled ex-service men in submitting final proof on homestead entries; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 5872) for the relief of Indians, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 17223, the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 80, line —, insert the following:

"Salt Lake City, Utah, post office, courthouse, etc.: The authorization for the acquisition of additional land and the commencement of extension and remodeling of the post office, courthouse, etc., at Salt Lake City, Utah, contained in the act approved May 29, 1928, making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and for other purposes, is hereby amended so as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, either to carry out the above authorization or to enlarge and extend the present Federal building so as to provide in part for the required additional accommodations, and also to acquire a site with the building thereon and to remodel and extend said building as an annex to the post office, courthouse, etc., to provide the further necessary additional accommodations, and the appropriation contained in said act is hereby made available for providing the required accommodations under such method as the Secretary of the Treasury may select: Provided, That the total limit of cost for providing for all the accommodations required shall not exceed the limit of cost fixed in said act."

Mr. HAYDEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 17223, the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 84, line 2, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"NOGALES, ARIZ., INTERNATIONAL STREET

"For grading and paving of the Federal strip of land known as International Street, belonging to the United States, along the international boundary line between Mexico and the United States and adjacent to the city of Nogales, Ariz., said paving to extend from the east side of Nelson Avenue to the top of the hill beyond West Street, with the necessary fence, retaining walls, storm sewers, the installation of an ornamental lighting system, and other items necessary in connection therewith, $30,000, and in addition the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $40,000 under this heading in the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1928, approved May 29, 1928, is continued and made available until June 30, 1930, for the purposes of this paragraph."

Mr. NORBECK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 17223, the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

"To carry out the purposes of the act approved ———, entitled 'An act creating the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission and defining its purposes and powers,' toward the one-half cost of the memorial and landscaping to be borne by the United States, $100,000, to be immediately available."

RESTRICTIONS ON EXPORT OF ARMS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the following articles from the New York Times of February 11, 1929, relative to Senate Joint Resolution 215, declaring it unlawful to export arms and other articles for use in war to any country violating the provisions of the multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MOVE TO BACK PEACE PACT WITH TRADE EMBARGO ON VIOLATORS, ASKING LIKE PLEDGE OF OTHER NATIONS

(Special to the New York Times by Richard V. Oulahan)

WASHINGTON, February 10.—A movement to put teeth in the Kellogg multilateral treaty renouncing war as an instrument of national policy, otherwise known as the pact of Paris, recently ratified by the Senate, will be started to-morrow when Senator ARTHUR CAPPER, of Kansas, a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, will offer a joint resolution designed to authorize the employment of nonforcible sanctions or disciplinary measures against any adhering government which violates the pact.

The Capper resolution, the text of which was made public to-night, provides, in effect, that this Government shall establish an economic boycott against any such nation and invests the President with authority to issue a proclamation forbidding the export of munitions of war to any offending government. This approximates the economic boycott provisions of the League of Nations covenant. No resort to force by the United States is contemplated in the provisions.

The fundamental principle enunciated and the authority conveyed in these resolutions are contained in the following provision:

"That whenever the President determines and by proclamation declares that any country has violated the multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President, to export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war until the President shall by proclamation declare that such violation no longer continues."

From this it will be seen that the authority to be conveyed to the President may be qualified or withdrawn if Congress enacts a law to that effect or the President himself issues a proclamation declaring that the economic boycott is not to be employed.

Another provision states it to be the policy of the United States that its citizens shall not be protected by the Government if they give "aid and comfort" to a nation which violates the pact. The resolution also requests the President to negotiate treaties with other adherents of the treaty to insure that their nationals will not be protected by their governments if they give assistance to an offending nation.

It is provided, however, that the policy of refusing protection to American citizens in such circumstances shall not apply against a violating nation which has failed to make a declaration that it will not protect its citizens when engaged in similar practices.

Senator CAPPER stated to-night that he had no expectation of obtaining action on his resolution in the present Congress, which will come to an end three weeks from to-morrow, or in the extra session, which is to convene in April. His idea in offering the measure at this time, he explained, was to allow discussion of the proposal and the forming of public opinion, so that its purpose would be thoroughly understood when Congress assembled in regular session in December, at which time he would press for its adoption.

In making public the text of his resolution, Senator CAPPER gave out a statement explanatory of his purpose.

WOULD "UNDERWRITE THE PEACE PACT"

In his statement of explanation Senator CAPPER said:

"The purpose of this resolution is to put the Government of the United States on record, in response to an insistent and well-nigh unanimous public demand, by taking the next step toward safeguarding international peace, following the ratification of the pact of Paris.

"This resolution renews in substance a proposal contained in my resolution of December 9, 1927, that any nation signatory to the pact of Paris which breaks its word shall not be aided directly or indirectly by our nationals in carrying on its war.

"My resolution also contemplates that our Government shall at once negotiate treaties or understandings with other signatory powers for similar action on their part.

"The moment it becomes clear that a nation which has solemnly promised to renounce war as an instrument of national policy, but which nevertheless provokes or invites a war, will not be able to buy munitions or supplies from the American people with which to carry on the war, then that war will come to a sudden end. In fact, I doubt whether it will ever be begun.

WOULD "UNDERWRITE THE PEACE PACT"

"In other words, I believe the adoption and effectuation of this resolution will tend to make the peace pact effective. It will in a measure underwrite the peace pact without compelling us to police the world.

"I hope and believe that public opinion will approve this resolution and that before long it will receive the overwhelming, if not unanimous, approval of both Houses of Congress. It is not expected that action will be taken at this session, but the introduction of the resolution, it is hoped, will bring about discussion and consideration which will result in action at an early date in a succeeding session.

"The full import and implications of the pact of Paris have not yet been recognized by many persons, including not a few of those who write on such subjects for periodicals.

"The peace pact, or multilateral treaty, marks a new era in international relations and international law. In this new era we must learn to think and to speak in terms of realities, not in terms of worn-out and abandoned policies which the pact of Paris openly and emphatically renounces.

"Fortunately, as our own record shows and as Sir Austen Chamberlain recently has stated in the House of Commons, there are no reservations on the part of nations signatory to the pact. It is an absolute renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy.

"Therefore it is not only logical but necessary that a nation like our own, which intends solemnly to keep its word in this respect, shall not aid any other nation that may prove faithless, either directly or indirectly.

"Let that once become known and announced to the world and any government will hesitate a long time before it violates the pact of Paris.

"The enthusiasm which greeted the conclusion of the pact of Paris, in foreign nations as well as in our own; the readiness with which arbitration treaties are being concluded between the United States and other nations; these give testimony to the strong popular support of the movement against war.

"The people and the peoples of the world want peace. They want the assurance of peace, if that is possible.

"In face of the engagements of the pact and in face of the widespread treaties of arbitration and conciliation, it would be anomalous, to say the least, for the people of the States which have bound themselves by the terms of the pact to encourage its breach by permitting the shipment of arms and munitions of war to the treaty breaker. It would be a breach of faith on the part of a signatory to encourage their nationals by contributions of goods or money, to sustain an offending nation and aid that nation in striking down the defenders of the pact.

"It is in defense of the honor of this Nation that it should not give aid and comfort to a treaty-breaking State. It is of vital interest to this Nation that it should seek to prevent the outbreak of war by warning possible treaty-breaking nations of the attitude the United States will take.

SEEKS TO CHECK TRAFFIC IN ARMS

"What is proposed in the new resolution is simply to carry out the spirit of the Briand-Kellogg past, to prevent conscienceless nationals from making a profit out of aiding and abetting nations that violate the pact.

"The spirit of the pact should be borne in upon the mind of the citizens as well as that of the statesman. It should be impressed that war will not be a means of carrying on a profitable trade with the belligerent nations, a profitable trade that in the end will cost the lives of our own youth and saddle another tremendous war debt upon the surviving people of the Nation.

"Rather it should be impressed upon the consciousness of every citizen and every statesman that the effect of the pact will be to diminish or cut off that trade, so that it will no longer be in the interest of armament makers or the private traffickers in blood money to connive with a government which in defiance of its obligations lets loose upon the world the pestilence of war."

That purpose, he said, was to have the United States Government go on record in favor of refusing to aid any nation signatory to the multilateral treaty which broke its word, "directly or indirectly," by violating the covenant. In his opinion, any war undertaken by a signatory would end when that nation found it would be unable to buy war supplies from the United States. "In fact," added Senator CAPPER, "I doubt whether it will ever be begun."

CARRIES OUT SPIRIT OF TREATY

The outstanding feature of Senator CAPPER'S statement is the explanation that his resolution "is simply to carry out the spirit of the Briand-Kellogg pact, to prevent conscienceless nationals from making a profit out of aiding and abetting nations that violate the pact."

To understand that purpose better, it is necessary to have in mind the essential provisions of the treaty renouncing war. These features are stated in the following articles:

"Article 1. The high contracting parties solemnly declare that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another.

"Article 2. The high contracting parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts, of whatever nature or whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them shall never be sought except by pacific means."

This treaty was the result of a statement made by Aristide Briand, Foreign Minister of France, on April 6, 1927, the tenth anniversary of the entrance of the United States into the World War, that "France would be willing to subscribe publicly with the United States to any mutual engagement tending to outlaw war," and proposing that the two countries agree to renounce war "as an instrument of national policy."

In the following November Senator CAPPER announced that when Congress assembled in December he would offer a resolution designed to carry out the purposes of the Briand proposal. By that time it had become clear that the Coolidge administration did not favor making with France alone a treaty renouncing war and believed any such agreement should include all nations. Senator CAPPER'S resolution provided that the pact should take the multilateral form. It contained, however, a provision under which this Government would regard as "an aggressor nation" any government which violated the agreement.

TEXT OF THE CAPPER RESOLUTION TO ENFORCE WORLD PEACE

(Special to the New York Times)

WASHINGTON, February 10.—The text of Senator CAPPER'S resolution in support of the Kellogg peace pact and supplementing the international effort to outlaw war is as follows:

"Whereas the Congress of the United States on August 29, 1916, solemnly declared it 'to be the policy of the United States to adjust and settle its international disputes through mediation or arbitration to the end that war may be honorably avoided'; and

"Whereas the United States, in pursuance of this policy, has concluded with a number of countries and is negotiating with many others a treaty of arbitration and conciliation in a new form under which the parties agree to submit to arbitration all differences relating to international matters in which they are concerned by virtue of a claim of right made by one against the other and to submit to a permanent international commission for conciliation any dispute not submitted to arbitration, and has thus shown its intention to carry out on its part the policy of the United States; and

"Whereas the United States has taken a further step in advancing its policy by ratifying the multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war in which it is declared that the contracting powers are:

"Persuaded that the time has come when a frank renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy should be made, to the end that the peaceful and friendly relations now existing between their people may be perpetuated:

"Convinced that all changes in their relations with one another should be sought only by pacific means and be the result of a peaceful and orderly process, and that any signatory power which shall hereafter seek to promote its national interests by resort to war should be denied the benefits furnished by this treaty; and

"Whereas it is a breach of its obligations with the United States for any country which is a party to the multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war to have recourse to war as an instrument of national policy in its relations with any other party to the treaty; and

"Whereas the governments which have associated themselves by the treaty 'to the end that peaceful and friendly relations between their peoples be perpetuated' should not permit their nationals to encourage a breach of the obligations of the treaty by exporting to a government which has committed such breach arms, munitions, or implements of war, or other articles for the support of such government; and

"Whereas the declaration of its policy by the United States to prevent such encouragement by its nationals of a breach of the treaty would have a great effect in accomplishing the object of the treaty, that war may be honorably avoided: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, etc., That whenever the President determines and by proclamation declares that any country has violated the multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war, it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President, to export to such country arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war until the President shall by proclamation declare that such violation no longer continues.

"SEC. 2. It is declared to be the policy of the United States that the nationals of the United States should not be protected by their Government in giving aid and comfort to a nation which has committed a breach of the said treaty.

"SEC. 3. The President is hereby requested to enter into negotiations with other governments which ratify or adhere to the said treaty to secure agreement that the nationals of the contracting governments should not be protected by their governments in giving aid and comfort to a nation which has committed a breach of the said treaty.

"SEC. 4. The policy of the United States as expressed in section 2 hereof shall apply only in case of a breach of the said treaty by war against a government which has declared its adherence to a similar policy."

[From the New York Times, February 11, 1929]

EDUCATORS, CHURCH, CIVIC, AND POLITICAL LEADERS SUPPORT STRENGTHENING OF PACT

Senator CAPPER'S proposal of an arms embargo against any nation violating the Kellogg pact received the indorsement yesterday of several civic and political leaders, as well as authorities on international affairs.

Some commentators qualified their opinions, however, regarding the power conferred upon the President and the general effects of the plan.

Among the expressions of opinion were the following:

"Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt: I have only heard the very interesting proposal of Senator CAPPER over the telephone and can, therefore, say nothing more on the spur of the movement than to reiterate my previous statements that the Kellogg treaties, while excellent in themselves, need additional agreements both for the elimination of war causes and for giving the treaties themselves more authority than they have now."

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University: "Senator CAPPER'S proposed new joint resolution is of very large importance and points the way to the next step to be taken by our Government, under the guidance of American public opinion, along the path to peace. The action which it proposes is the logical consequence of the pact of Paris itself, which the Senate ratified by a practically unanimous vote on January 15 last.

"Despite the cynics and the legalists, both in Senate and out of it, who do not seem to understand in the least what has happened in the world, the pact of Paris marks the opening of a new era in international relations. It substitutes a declaration as to national policy, made on the highest moral ground, for the usual and conventional treaties and arrangements to advance the peace of the world by constantly preparing for war.

"American public opinion is in dead earnest in this matter and will hail Senator Capper's resolution with great enthusiasm. The resolution, in its impressive preamble, summarizes once more the established policies of the people and Government of the United States, and then simply provides that no nation which breaks its word in respect to its renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy shall be supported or aided in its war-making efforts by citizens of the United States who may be ready to provide such pledge-breaking nation with munitions and supplies for material gain.

"This joint resolution should be adopted as speedily as may be. It should be widely discussed and debated throughout the land until its meaning is clearly understood and appreciated. The President should quickly enter into negotiations with the other signatories of the pact of Paris to induce them to adopt a like policy. In other words, let no nation which has signed the pact of Paris allow its nationals to aid any other nation in breaking the moral promise and pledge of that pact.

"Recent debates in the Senate on the pact of Paris and on the so-called cruiser bill, like much that is written in the periodical press, show no realization whatever of the fact that there is no longer any such thing as neutrality in war and that the words, freedom of the seas, are an empty name of historical significance only.

"Neutrality and freedom of the seas have meaning when war is an established institution. When, however, war is renounced as an instrument of national policy, neither neutrality nor freedom of the seas has any meaning whatever.

"The hand of every pledge-keeping nation must be raised against that nation which breaks its pledges. Just so soon as this fact is understood in all its bearings, there will be no nation left so valiant or so mad as to violate the pledge which it has solemnly given in signing the pact of Paris.

"Senator CAPPER'S joint resolution, introduced to the Senate in December, 1927, and its nation-wide support were then herald of the pact of Paris and led the way to its negotiation and almost unanimous ratification. Let us hope that this second Capper joint resolution will have an equally happy result.

"Prof. James T. Shotwell, of Columbia University: Senator CAPPER'S resolution is a notable effort to solve the question of naval armaments along the only line which promises real hope, namely, a limitation upon the use of navies, which would automatically call for a limitation in their size.

"If in time of war the United States does not insist to the full upon the historic privilege of neutrals but recognizes that neutrality has acquired a moral character, now that war is no longer the free prerogative of sovereignty, then those nations which under the covenant or treaty of Locarno are obliged to maintain peace by pulling down the aggressor nation will be relieved of their greatest anxiety, which is the maintenance of America's rights to trade with the aggressor State.

"Senator CAPPER'S resolution deals with one of the most real elements in the problem of national security, and it allies the United States with the forces of international law and order without involving us automatically in police measures against the violating state. It is a well-conceived and necessary policy. It has history behind it.

"The first to point out the need of the restatement of the rights of American neutrality was Mr. David Mitrany in his short but compact volume, 'The Problem of International Sanctions,' published in 1925. In that same year, at the one hundred and twenty-second annual meeting of the Massachusetts Congregational Conference a resolution was passed and forwarded to the fellow member, President Coolidge, along substantially the lines of the second clause of Senator CAPPER'S resolution, although at that time there was no Kellogg-Briand treaty to which to attach it.

"For the last three years this idea has been advanced from time to time in meetings throughout the country and has never met with any serious opposition. It was left, however, for Senator CAPPER to crystallize this sentiment into a definite proposal for action by the Senate. The seriousness of the armament question may now secure for it the attention which it deserves."

FORT DOUGLAS MILITARY RESERVATION

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, from the Committee on Military Affairs I report favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 14924) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant to the city of Salt Lake, Utah, a portion of the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, Utah, for street purposes. I understand the senior Senator from Utah desires the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. I do not think it will lead to a moment's debate. The bill has a favorable report accompanying it from the War Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant and convey to the city of Salt Lake, a municipal corporation of the State of Utah, for street purposes, the land within the extension of Fifth South Street on the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, Utah, more particularly described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the intersection of the north line of Fifth South Street produced and the west line of Fort Douglas United States Military Reservation, said point being 391.48 feet east and 63.37 feet north of the city monument at the intersection of Thirteenth East and Fifth South Streets, thence east 1,320 feet, thence south 131.01 feet, thence west 1,320 feet, thence north 131.01 feet to place of beginning: Provided, That the city of Salt Lake shall construct and maintain a street thereon without expense to the United States: And provided further, That when said land shall cease to be used and maintained as a street it shall revert back to the United States and the instrument of conveyance shall recite such reversionary condition.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I wish to say now that I shall not object to the request of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], but for the remainder of this session I shall object to the immediate consideration of any bill or any joint resolution that may be brought before the Senate unless preceding that a quorum call of the Senate shall be had. There are Senators here who object to certain measures. This maner of legislating may give some one who wishes to do so the opportunity of catching a certain Senator out of the Chamber and asking unanimous consent to have a measure passed.

I do not wish to be discourteous. Therefore, I give public notice that for the remainder of this session, if I shall be in the Chamber, I shall object to the consideration of any bill or any joint resolution unless first a roll call of the Senate be had.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WAGNER obtained the floor.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the Senator from New York yield to me to submit another report?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

PILGRIMAGE OF GOLD STAR MOTHERS

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, from the Committee on Military Affairs I report favorably and with amendments the bill (S. 5332) to enable the mothers and unmarried widows of the deceased soldiers, sailors, and marines of the American forces interred in the cemeteries of Europe to make a pilgrimage to these cemeteries. It is the so-called Gold Star Mothers' bill. I had intended to ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration, but in view of the statement just made by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE], and of the fact that I do not desire to take the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] off his feet for a roll call, I shall not do so. I, however, give notice that I shall call the bill up at the first available opportunity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

MOUNT RUSHMORE NATIONAL MEMORIAL COMMISSION

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I submit a conference report, to which I call the attention of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3848) creating the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission and defining its purposes and powers having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 2, line 3, insert in lieu of the matter stricken out by the House amendment the following: "Provided, That the secretary may be paid such salary for his services as may be determined by the commission. The commission is also authorized to pay such actual and necessary expenses as the secretary may incur in the performance of his duties. Such salary and expenses shall be paid by the treasurer of the commission upon the order of the secretary thereof and then only when approved and countersigned by the chairman of the executive committee"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 3, line 5, strike out all of the last sentence of the said House amendment; and the House agree to the same.

SIMEON D. FESS,
F. H. GILLETT,
KENNETH MCKELLAR,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
ROBERT LUCE,
JOSEPH L. HOOPER,
A. L. BULWINKLE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I rise to move that the Senate agree to the conference report on Senate bill 3848, an act creating the Rushmore National Memorial Commission, and defining its powers and duties.

Again we have listened to the reading of Washington's Farewell Address, which gives new inspiration to meet every national problem and combat every difficulty. I believe it especially fitting in connection with this anniversary to state, Mr. President, that to-day there is being carved on the sides of Mount Rushmore, in the Black Hills of South Dakota, the loftiest elevation of solid granite between the Rocky Mountains and the Atlantic seaboard, a colossal memorial statue of the first President of the Republic. The completed plan comprises a heroic group of our Nation's builders, to commemorate the founding, expansion, preservation, and unification of the United States, in the form of statues of Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and Roosevelt, carved on a scale several times greater than that wonder of the ancient world, the Great Sphinx of Egypt, together with a vast entablature 80 feet wide and 120 feet high, bearing deeply incised in imperishable stone the story of our country written by Calvin Coolidge.

The design is by the well-known artist, Gutzon Borglum. It is believed this will be one of the great works of art of this continent.

Rushmore Mountain, a prominent peak of the Harney Range, is a huge granite upthrust of excellent texture, having a sheer precipice of more than 300 feet, below which the mountain gradually slopes. Each figure of the memorial group scales to the proportion of men 465 feet high, fading into the ledge at the waist line, the tops of the heads being upon the sky line. All are in the round.

This mountain is in the heart of a rugged, strikingly scenic, and beautiful mountain range rising to a height of over 7,000 feet. The work was begun and the mountain dedicated to the memorial by President Coolidge, with suitable ceremonies, on August 10, 1927. Considerable progress has since been made on the Washington statue, which it is expected can be completed this summer.

The bill provides that one-half the cost of the entire work shall be borne by the United States. It carries an authorization for the appropriation of not exceeding $250,000 for this purpose. No part of the appropriation shall be expended, except to match funds received from other sources by the commission, or already expended by its predecessor. The entire undertaking will be under the control of a commission of 12 members to be appointed by the President of the United States. Proper safeguards to the Government are provided. The commission is to make annual report to Congress. The memorial will be open to the public at all times without admission charge.

The association has already secured from popular subscription in cash $53,000 and donations of machinery and equipment to the value of $17,500, or a total of $70,500.

The friends and promoters of the undertaking, I am pleased to say, have met a splendid response on the part of the public and they believe that the raising of the balance required by subscription will not be long delayed.

South Dakota has undertaken the construction of a highway to the memorial wholly for tourists and pleasure traffic, without any commercial implication whatever. This road is in process of construction and will cost approximately $200,000; $65,000 has already been expended upon said highway.

The following is the dedicatory address of President Coolidge delivered at Mount Rushmore on August 10, 1927:

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE'S ADDRESS

We have come here to dedicate a corner stone that was laid by the hand of the Almighty. On this towering wall of Rushmore, in the heart of the Black Hills, is to be inscribed a memorial which will represent some of the outstanding events of American history by portraying with suitable inscription the features of four of our Presidents, laid on by the hand of a great artist in sculpture. This memorial will crown the height of land between the Rocky Mountains and the Atlantic seaboard, where coming generations may view it for all time.

It is but natural that such a design should begin with George Washington, for with him begins that which is truly characteristic of America. He represents our independence, our Constitution, our liberty. He formed the highest aspirations that were entertained by any people into the permanent institutions of our Government. He stands as the foremost disciple of ordered liberty, a statesman with an inspired vision who is not outranked by any mortal greatness.

Next to him will come Thomas Jefferson, whose wisdom insured that the government which Washington had formed should be intrusted to the administration of the people. He emphasized the element of self-government which had been enshrined in American institutions in such a way as to demonstrate that it was practical and would be permanent. In him, likewise, was embodied the spirit of expansion. Recognizing the destiny of his country, he added to its territory. By removing the possibility of any powerful opposition from another neighboring State, he gave new guaranties to the rule of the people.

After our country had been established, enlarged from sea to sea and dedicated to popular government, the next great task was to demonstrate the permanency of our Union and to extend the principles of freedom to all the inhabitants of our land. The master of this supreme accomplishment was Abraham Lincoln. Above all other national figures, he holds the love of his fellow countrymen. The work which Washington and Jefferson began, he extended to its logical conclusion.

That the principles for which these three men stood might be still more firmly established, destiny raised up Theodore Roosevelt. To political freedom he strove to add economic freedom. By building the Panama Canal he brought into closer relationship the east and west and realized the vision that inspired Columbus in his search for a new passage to the Orient.

The union of these four Presidents carved on the face of the everlasting hills of South Dakota will constitute a distinctly national monument. It will be decidedly American in its conception, in its magnitude, in its meaning, and altogether worthy of our country. No one can look upon it understandingly without realizing it is a picture of hope fulfilled.

Its location will be significant. Here in the heart of the continent, on the side of a mountain which probably no white man had ever beheld in the days of Washington, in territory which was acquired by the action of Jefferson, which remained an almost unbroken wilderness beyond the days of Lincoln, which was especially beloved by Roosevelt, the people of the future will see history and art combined to portray the spirit of patriotism. They will know that the figure of these Presidents has been placed here because by following the truth they built for territory. The fundamental principles which they represented have been wrought into the very being of our country. They are steadfast as these ancient hills.

Other people have marveled at the growth and strength of America. They have wondered how a few weak and discordant colonies were able to win their independence from one of the greatest powers of the world. They have been amazed at our genius for self-government. They have been unable to comprehend how the shock of a great civil war did not destroy our Union. They do not understand the economic progress of our people. It is true that we have had the advantage of great natural resources, but these have not been exclusively ours. Others have been equally fortunate in that direction.

The progress of America has been due to the spirit of its people. It is in no small degree due to that spirit that we have been able to produce such great leaders. If coming generations are to maintain a like spirit, it will be because they continue to study the lives and times of the great men who have been the leaders in our history, and continue to support the principles which those men represented. It is for that purpose that we erect memorials. We can not hold our admiration for the historic figures which we shall see here without growing stronger in our determination to perpetuate the institutions which their lives revealed and established.

The fact that this enterprise is being begun in one of our new States not yet great in population, not largely developed in its resources, discloses that the old American spirit still goes where our people go, still dominates their lives, still inspires them to deeds of devotion and sacrifice. It is but another illustration of the determination of our people to use their material resources to minister to their spiritual life. This memorial will be another national shrine to which future generations will repair to declare their continuing allegiance to independence, to self-government, to freedom, and to economic justice.

It is an inspiring phase of American life that men are willing to devote their energies to the erection of a memorial of this nature. Money spent for such a purpose is certain of adequate returns in the nature of increased public welfare.

The people of South Dakota are taking the lead in the preparation of this memorial out of their meager resources because the American spirit is strong among them. Their effort and courage entitles them to the sympathy and support of private beneficence and the National Government. They realize fully that they have no means of succeeding in the development of their State except a reliance upon American institutions. They do not fail to appreciate their value. There is no power that can stay the progress of such a people. They are predestined to success. Our country is fortunate in having the advantage of their citizenship. They have been pioneers in the development of their State. They will continue to be pioneers in the defense and development of American institutions.

In conclusion, Mr. President, permit me to say that this anniversary of the birthday of George Washington is very significant to the people of South Dakota. It was just 40 years ago to-day that the so-called enabling act was approved admitting South Dakota to the Union.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

SINKING OF STEAMER "VESTRIS"

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, 100 precious days have passed since the whole American Nation was shocked to its very depths by the tragic loss of life which accompanied the foundering of the Vestris. One hundred and ten lives were lost. The lives of all of the children on board were snuffed out like so many candles in a blizzard. What cause did these unfortunate ones serve by their death? To what ideal were they sacrificed? Can we or their families derive the meager consolation that those who died laid down their lives to increase the portion of human happiness?

Two investigations have already been had. Both loudly testify to the shameful fact that innocent men, women and children have been sacrificed to greed and incompetence. Reading that sorry tale of downright stupidity, incompetence, and reckless disregard of the most elementary rules of seamanship and safety, I can not avoid expressing the fear that if that condition prevails even to a limited degree, then the sea is not safe.

We know that the science of shipbuilding and the art of seamanship can make the ship lanes of the ocean safer than our city streets. The question naturally occurs to me just as it has occurred to millions of others in the United States: Has the Congress done all that it could and all that it should to make the sea safe? We have no right to assume that what happened on the Vestris is not the result of causes permeating the whole ship business. The Congress has no right to rely on the guess that the Vestris is the exception. Let us hope that investigation will prove that to be the case; but an investigation there must be, for there is an abundance of evidence that all is not well on board ship.

Immediately upon convening of Congress in December I submitted Senate Resolution 272. It was the first resolution offered in Congress for an investigation not only of the Vestris but of all the conditions that make for safety on the seas.

I ask unanimous consent that the resolution introduced by me and to which I have referred may be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 272) submitted by Mr. WAGNER on December 5, 1928, is as follows:

Whereas on November 12, 1928, the steamship Vestris, outbound from the port of New York, foundered at sea with the loss of many lives; and

Whereas it is imperative that life and property be accorded the utmost attainable degree of safety from the perils of the sea: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a special select committee of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, is authorized and directed (1) to collect, collate, coordinate, and make available to the Senate the results of the inquiry into the loss of the steamship Vestris conducted before Commissioner Francis A. O'Neill, of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, and the inquiry conducted by the Secretary of Commerce through the Steamboat Inspection Service of the Department of Commerce, (2) to make such further investigations of the sinking of the steamship Vestris and the rescue operations carried on in connection therewith as the committee shall deem advisable and necessary for the purposes of this resolution, (3) to investigate the adequacy of the present legal standards of safety of ship construction and operation, (4) to investigate the adequacy and efficiency of the Steamboat Inspection Service, (5) to investigate whether the laws governing liability for loss of life and property at sea, the laws and usages of salvage, and the laws, usages, and practices of the business of marine insurance tend to encourage the installation and utilization of devices and practices conducive to safety, and (6) to make a preliminary report of the results of its investigations as soon as practicable, to make further reports from time to time but at least once during each regular session of the Senate until it has completed its investigations, and to submit a final report to the Senate together with its recommendations for necessary legislation. The President of the Senate shall appoint members to fill any vacancies that may occur in the committee.

For the purposes of this resolution such committee or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventieth and succeeding Congresses until the final report is submitted, to employ such counsel, experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpœna, or otherwise, the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony and make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of such committee, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, when that resolution was submitted the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who was very much interested in the matter, did me the honor to withhold a resolution he had prepared because he felt the subject was adequately covered in my resolution. He expressed himself on that occasion very emphatically in favor of an investigation. In the House of Representatives, too, one or more resolutions calling for investigations were submitted. What heartened me particularly was to see the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] introduce a similar resolution. I read in his act an implied promise that these resolutions would receive the consideration of the committee in whose charge they are to-day so peacefully slumbering.

What has happened to chill the enthusiasm of the chairman of the Commerce Committee? Have the events of the last 100 days demonstrated that such an investigation is no longer necessary? Have the reports of the two official bodies that have looked into the Vestris disaster made superfluous any further investigation of the problem of safety at sea?

Mr. President, the reports of these two inquiries expressly recommend a congressional investigation along the lines outlined in my resolution. The Seventieth Congress is about to expire. It will not have done its duty by the American people if it permits these resolutions to go unconsidered. The valuable interval between the Seventieth Congress and the Seventy-first Congress should be put to use. The investigation which is proposed can not be completed in a day or a month. No time should be lost in getting started.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Before what committee is the resolution pending?

Mr. WAGNER. Before the Committee on Commerce, where it has been referred to a subcommittee.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Is it not possible under the rules of the Senate for a committee such as the Committee on Commerce to make an investigation of such a subject without action by the whole Senate?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not know, but absolutely no action at all has been taken, and that is my complaint.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It is my impression that the rules of the Senate permit a committee which is dealing with a subject such as commerce, and which may have to recommend legislation upon it, has authority to make an investigation into a matter of this kind independent of action by the Senate as a whole. I appreciate that there is much more latitude given to the committee if they have the specific authority of the Senate for a particular investigation, and I assume that the resolution asks for a wider investigation than any committee could make, even if so disposed.

Mr. WAGNER. My complaint, I repeat, is that nothing has been done.

Mr. President, I shall try as briefly as I can to establish a prima facie case in favor of the investigation which I propose.

On the 10th day of November, 1928, the steamship Vestris sailed from the port of New York bound for South America. It was a vessel of about 17,000 tons displacement, built in Belfast, Ireland, in 1912, operated by the Lamport & Holt Line, and flew the British flag.

On this particular voyage, according to the report of Commissioner O'Neill, it carried 129 passengers and 209 members of the crew. According to Mr. D. N. Hoover, it carried 127 passengers and 198 members of the crew. Precisely what happened between the time that the boat left its berth in New York Harbor and the moment of the final tragedy is still largely a mystery. On Monday, November 15, at 9.58 in the morning, when the ship was in a hopelessly sinking condition, lying on its beam's end, an S O S signal was sent. At 2.15 p. m. on that day, about 300 miles east of Cape Henry, the vessel sank. In the ensuing rescue operations 77 per cent of the crew were saved, but only 46 per cent of the passengers survived. There were 21 children on board. Not one came through the ordeal alive. Twenty of the 27 women on board perished.

Two inquiries were at once instituted. One was conducted before United States Commissioner Francis A. O'Neill by the United States attorney for the southern district of New York, with the assistance of two experts representing the British and American Governments: Capt. Henry McConkey, marine superintendent of the Cunard Line, representing the British Government; and Capt. E. P. Jessop, formerly a captain in the United States Navy, and marine superintendent of the Panama Canal, representing the American Government.

The other investigation was conducted by Mr. Dickerson N. Hoover, supervising inspector general of the Steamboat Inspection Service, a division of the Department of Commerce.

Commissioner O'Neill's report is marked by judicial restraint. Mr. Hoover's report is too obviously an apologetic coat of whitewash. Both compel the conclusion that the Vestris was ill prepared to serve as a human carrier upon the high seas.

After reading these reports I am convinced that if the truth were known not a single passenger would have embarked upon that disastrous voyage. Imagine each passenger before embarking receiving a notice in the following language:

TAKE NOTICE

1. We know nothing about the stability of this ship.
2. We have lifeboats on board, but we do not know whether they leak or not; they have not been tested.
3. The boats have not been lowered in a loaded condition; hence we do not know whether they will hold up in an emergency.
4. We have life preservers on board, but they comply with neither the British nor the American rules. You use them at your own risk.
5. We know very little about the officers of the ship, and we warn you that the crew is unfamiliar with the handling of lifeboats.
6. The ship is a negative ship. A little wind and free surface water in its tanks will cause it to list.
7. Should an accident occur, we pay you nothing; we collect insurance only for ourselves.

Underneath that is a special notice from the Steamboat Inspection Service of the Department of Commerce reading:

A better inspection could not be had because it would conflict with the President's program of economy.

DICKERSON N. HOOVER.

How many would have sailed if we had told them this unvarnished truth? Why did we not tell them the truth?

The glaring incompetence of those in charge of this ill-fated ship is reflected in almost every act of the tragedy. Think of the incomprehensible delay in sending an S O S until the vessel was about to be abandoned. Consider the stupidity of the attempt to lower boats from the high side of a vessel lying almost on its beam's end. Mr. Hoover concludes that hereafter we must insist on competent officers. Why hereafter? Why not heretofore?

Mr. Hoover's report is, and apparently was, intended to be a whitewash of the Steamboat Inspection Service. He excuses the failure to lower the boats loaded to capacity and minimizes the offense of the untruthful entry. He talks a great deal about life preservers, but he fails to state why the Vestris was permitted to leave port without complying with either the British or the American rules governing life preservers. He describes the ship as a negative ship which, with the aid of a little wind and some free surface water within its tanks, would acquire a permanent list. He does not explain why, if that condition is a dangerous one, American citizens were permitted to sail.

I am reminded of Captain Jessop's remark in a letter addressed to the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]:

You will excuse, I am sure, my writing to you on this subject, but having just been through the terrible experience of finding out that ships could be sent to sea so ill-prepared as this vessel was I feel rather strongly on the subject.

Captain Jessop, you will recall, was the American expert adviser in the Vestris inquiry.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD a log of the vessel as constructed by a newspaper writer on the basis of the evidence offered in these two hearings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit A.)

Mr. WAGNER. I come now to the recommendations made by both Commissioner O'Neill and Mr. Hoover as a result of their investigations. I shall ask to have them set out in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibits B and C.)

Mr. WAGNER. More specifically I desire to call attention to several of these recommendations.

Mr. Hoover calls particular attention to the need for greater competence on the part of officers and crew. He recommends that ship hulls should be inspected in blue print before their construction in the same manner that building plans must be approved in advance of construction, and the installation of wireless on all ships.

Commissioner O'Neill emphasizes the amazing gap in our law, or at least in the regulations of the Department of Commerce, which grants an immunity from inspection of safety devices to foreign-flag vessels which ply between American ports and foreign ports other than their home ports.

Commissioner O'Neill further says:

A full study should be made, either by Congress or the approaching International Conference on Safety of Life at Sea, of the ancient rules of admiralty law as to salvage and limitation of liability on the part of owners. * * * At the same time a full study should be made of the possibility of more humane legislation for the protection of the seamen in the crew.

Mr. Hoover likewise recommends a reexamination of the laws respecting salvage and limitation of liability:

In all this tragedy there is an important factor that does not appear upon the printed page, and that is the matter of salvage, a question concerning which this service has no control or jurisdiction but one that is vitally wrapped up in the matter of safety of ships. * * *

Another that might well receive attention is that of liability. We speak of limitation of liability, so far as ships are concerned, as something that must necessarily exist, but when we do so we forget that the conditions under which such doctrines of admiralty have grown up have completely changed.

An opinion which I know will have great weight with the Members of the Senate is that expressed by Captain Jessop, who represented the United States Government at the hearing conducted before Commissioner O'Neill.

In a letter addressed to the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], which appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 3, Captain Jessop points out a number of weaknesses in the inspection of the Vestris before she left on her fatal voyage, and then he says:

I was informed yesterday of what I consider a very great discrepancy in our laws. I was informed that even though our Steamboat Inspection Service were to find a foreign vessel unseaworthy on inspection, it is very questionable whether the customhouse could refuse clearance papers to her. That certainly is a point which should be looked into.

There are many other points with regard to our method of inspecting and clearing vessels which will bear investigation.

I believe I do not go too far when I say that the really important result of the several inquiries which have already been had is the unanimous conclusion that there must be an investigation coextensive in scope with the whole subject matter of safety at sea and all its ramifications of ship design, of inspection, of limited liability, of salvage, and of insurance. That is precisely what my resolution directs. Now, after the tragedy has happened, after lives have been lost beyond recall, we are told of the stupidity of a department of the Government in making provision by regulation which practically exempts ships like the Vestris from the rules and regulations of any country covering life-saving devices.

It is a widely held opinion that there was no warrant in law for this discriminatory regulation. There is certainly no provision in the law compelling the exemption of foreign vessels from lifeboat inspection. But even if the law did make such a regulation necessary, the department was inexcusably at fault for failing to call for and insist upon congressional correction. Much is said in the Inspector General's report of the shortage of inspectors adequately to make certain that the ships that leave our ports carrying our citizens were sound and seaworthy and fit to serve as human carriers. What possible circumstance could excuse such misdirected parsimony? Was that another example of the stifling, grudging, unintelligible, and unintelligent Coolidge economy?

The American traveling public is led to believe that the Government inspects the vessels leaving our ports. It intrusts its safety to the thoroughness of those inspections. Now we are told by none other than the Inspector General himself that that trust was misplaced; that he has not enough men to make proper inspections. That is not the kind of economy that the American people want. The economy which the public demands is that which gives them 100 cents of value for every dollar spent by the Public Treasury. It has no use for the Coolidge economy which, for the sake of the political effect of a reduction in the Budget, jeopardizes the lives of American citizens.

The resolution singled out certain specified subjects for special investigation:

Salvage, marine insurance, the law of limited liability, and ship-construction standards. The two official inquiries have expressly confirmed the need for further investigations along these lines.

SALVAGE

A great deal has been said upon the relationship of the law of salvage to the question of safety at sea. It is commented on in the reports of the inquiries into the Vestris in attempting to discover why the captain of that ill-starred vessel failed to signal distress when his ship was obviously in trouble. The explanation has been offered that he hesitated to incur the expense of salvage to which any rescuing vessel would be entitled. To the contrary, it has been stated that the cost of salvage is always insured against, so that the matter is rather immaterial to the owners of the vessel.

Attention has not been called to the fact, as far as I know, that even though salvage be covered by insurance, the captain of the vessel would hesitate to call for assistance for fear that he might be frowned upon by the underwriters. Rumor has it that the frown of an underwriter is very oppressive and may interfere very decisively with the employment of a ship's officer. You might, of course, say that rumor is too thin and too uncertain a basis upon which to embark on an investigation. My only answer is that this matter is of such importance that we can leave no stone unturned in an attempt to afford our passengers and shippers the security of the utmost measure of safety.

INSURANCE

The same basis exists for an investigation by Congress of insurance practices to see to what extent they are conducive to safety. If it is true that underwriters blacklist captains who place the welfare of their passengers ahead of the value of the insurance, that is a matter which is very conducive not to safety but to recklessness.

I have also been advised that the shipowner does not secure from the underwriters a reduction in premium to compensate him in a measure for the installation of safety devices. It is well known, of course, that in the business of fire insurance, for instance, attractive reductions in premium are made upon the installation of sprinkler systems or other safety measures.

If no such concessions are made by marine underwriters, that is a condition which is not conducive to the installation of safety devices. The business of marine insurance and the practices of that business are so intimately interwoven with the marine business that to investigate the one and to omit the other would leave the Senate in the dark with respect to a very powerful set of factors making or obstructing safety at sea.

LIMITATION OF LIABILITY

The Vestris disaster has flooded with publicity the well-established principle of limited liability. It was condemned as an injustice to the injured passengers and to the families of those who died. Freedom from liability to passengers and shippers was described as destroying the strongest possible motive for safety on the seas. In response to the popular demand that something be done, a bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives which aims to destroy the whole system of limited liability. This course has received the commendation of the Steamboat Inspection Service of the Department of Commerce. I do not know whether there is merit in the suggestion or not; but I submit, Mr. President, that we have not the information upon which to form a sound judgment. Not only for the sake of the general public but for the good of the shipping industry in particular, we need the investigation as a protection against hasty and poorly considered legislation.

The law of limited liability as applied in the Federal courts permits the owner of a vessel to reduce his obligation to claimants for damage sustained without his privity and knowledge to an amount not exceeding the value of his interest in the vessel at the end of the voyage and her then pending freight.

Apply this principle to a case like the Vestris, and it follows that the owners need pay to all claimants a sum not in excess of the value of the vessel, which is nothing, and such freight money as she has earned on the voyage. It is obvious that if the rule applies to this case there will be very little, if anything, to distribute.

We find this principle of admiralty first enforced by the maritime states on the Mediterranean. It is reasserted in the Hanseatic ordinance of 1644. In 1681 it was adopted in France, and thereby it became a principle of the civil law. The English first adopted it in modified form in 1734. Its first appearance in the United States was as an act of the State of Massachusetts in 1818, followed by similar legislation in Maine in 1821. It did not become part of the Federal law until 1851. Three years prior thereto the United States Supreme Court decided the famous case commonly referred to as The Lexington.

The steamship Lexington ran regularly between New York and Providence. In the course of a voyage it burned and nearly all on board were lost. An action was brought for the recovery of some $18,000 worth of specie carried by the vessel and lost in this disaster. The United States Supreme Court held that the liability of the owners of the ship was that of common carriers and further held that an agreement whereby the owners of the ship were exempted from liability was inoperative in view of the negligence of the crew and those in charge of the vessel. That decision created a widespread demand amongst shipping interests for Federal legislation limiting liability of shipowners, and in 1851 such legislation was finally enacted, constituting Revised Statutes 4281–4289.

These statutes have since their enactment been construed by the United States Supreme Court dozens of times and by the district courts and circuit courts hundreds of times.

The Supreme Court has steadily expressed the conviction that the law should be liberally interpreted in order to give the shipowners the fullest benefit of its provisions. In a series of important decisions, each of which is also a memorial of a great marine tragedy, the Supreme Court has rejected every effort to restrict the meaning of the poorly drawn limited liability statutes.

The first of these cases was decided in 1871. (Norwich Co. v. Wright, 80 U. S. 104.) It held the law applicable to collisions.

In 1881 (The Scotland, 105 U. S. 24) the benefit of the law was extended to foreign shipowners.

In 1883 (Providence & New York Steamship Co. v. Hill Manufacturing Co., 109 U. S. 578) the law of limitation was made applicable to a fire started through the negligence of the owners.

In 1886 (the City of Norwich, 118 U. S. 468) the court held that the claimants could have no recourse to the insurance moneys collected by the owners of the ship that was lost. The court also refused to give the claimants the benefit of the value of the vessel after it was raised from the bottom of the sea.

In 1889 (Butler v. Boston & Savannah Steamship Co., 130 U. S. 527) the court held this statute applied to personal injury and death as well as loss of personal property.

In 1914 (the Titanic, 233 U. S. 718) the rule that foreign shipowners could take advantage of the statute was confirmed and extended.

The purpose of this law was to encourage investment in merchant marine and to place American shipowners on a parity with foreign competitors. I forbear to discuss the question as to whether the first purpose of the law has been achieved. We know the dismal figures too well. We are all familiar with the gradual disappearance of the American flag from the merchant vessels of the sea. But let us see if at least the second purpose has been accomplished.

The Titanic was a British vessel. It applied for limitation of liability in the Federal court. Under the American rule barely $90,000 was made available for distribution among all the claimants. Had the Titanic been an American vessel, which had applied for limitation in the British court, its owners would have had to pay not $90,000 but 750,000 pounds sterling, or three and one-half million dollars—forty times as much. Is that parity?

The Vestris is a British vessel. It has applied for limitation in a Federal court. I am advised that the amount available to the claimants will not exceed $40,000. Had it gone to a British court for relief, the owners of the vessel would have been compelled to pay 180,000 pounds sterling—twenty-two times as much. Is that equality?

The law has apparently failed in its two major purposes. Obviously it has not encouraged safety. If we look upon any law of this sort as an experiment designed to accomplish a stated object, it is very plain that the law needs revision. But I submit, Mr. President, that sound revision can only be accomplished through investigation.

The simple suggestion that because the law has not worked well it should be entirely scrapped is mischievous, for the reason that it takes no account of the fact that we do want to encourage our merchant marine, that we do want reasonable equality with our competitors, and that the whole trend of modern enterprise is to limit liability. Every corporation is a device to limit liability. A change must be had; but the alternative is not the total elimination of all limitation, if for no other reason than that it could not be accomplished. The organization of single ship companies would give the owners practically the identical protection.

Shall we increase the amount of liability along the lines of the British statute?

Shall we change the rule of privity and knowledge so as to make limitation available in fewer instances?

Shall we expand the concept of "owner" for the same purpose?

Shall we grant total exemption from liability in exchange for insurance for the benefit of passengers?

These are a few of the possible alternatives that an investigating committee would weigh and measure. We can not pass upon these questions upon the basis of information presently available. We ought not to take the responsibility to act without the fullest study, for what we do or leave undone concerns not only the lives and property of millions of persons but affects a business that has grown tremendously in value.

In 1926 there were carried by water in the United States 478,000,000 passengers. There has been a steady increase since 1924 of the number of passengers who have arrived at American ports. In 1925 there were 797,000; in 1926, 866,000; in 1927, 916,000. There has likewise been a steady increase of the number of persons departing from American ports:

1924	494,000
1925	549,000
1926	600,000
1927	623,000

Of the figures given for 1927, 59,000 were children and 261,000 were females. The same steady increase in travel by Americans is shown by the reports of the Department of State in applications for passports.

In 1922–23 the number of passports issued was 124,844. In—

1923–24	139,106
1924–25	168,395
1925–26	174,537
1926–27	181,261
1927–28	188,236

For 1928 one steamship company alone, the Cunard Line, reported that 273,174 persons traveled on its ships. How long will this steadily rising stream of traffic continue if the American traveling public for one moment loses confidence in the safety of the vessels or the adequacy of our inspection? That travel, both commercial and tourist, on the part of Americans I regard as most important, and I believe that Congress should exert every effort to see that that habit now formed by the American people should not be discouraged.

The question of safety at sea concerns not only our passenger traffic but also the carriage of our goods. That business, too, has been steadily increasing. The water-borne commerce of the United States grew from $14,000,000,000 in 1921 to $26,000,000,000 in 1926 and throughout that period showed a steady annual increase.

I ask that several tables be printed in the RECORD, showing, among other things, the number of lives lost and the tonnage destroyed both on American and foreign vessels.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See Exhibits D, E, F, G, and H.)

INSPECTION SERVICE

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, that the Steamboat Inspection Service should be investigated is plain enough. The report of the Inspector General is the most convincing proof of that. If it is true, as he says, that we have not enough men to make effective inspection; that the law with respect to foreign vessels is uncertain; that inspection in our crowded ports is difficult and often impossible; that there ought to be hull inspection in the blue print before construction as well as after construction; and that there ought to be a radio installed on every seagoing vessel, a Senate committee should be apprised of all of these facts. The whole question of the adequate preparation of men in charge of the vessels is involved. We ought not to treat these matters piecemeal. We ought not to be called upon to act on various proposals without knowing whether they will throw the whole system out of kilter. The marine business is a very delicately adjusted business. It depends for its success upon a great many pychological elements. Any attempt to legislate along the thousand and one individual suggestions that have been made would so disturb the industry and make the traveling public so uneasy that we will have undone much of our work in upbuilding a merchant marine. To my mind, the only effective way at getting at this job is to do it in a large and comprehensive way so that there may be presented to the Senate a complete study and recommendations based upon a knowledge not of some of the facts but of all of the facts, so that the legislation enacted may be productive of good.

The great majority of shipowners are men who know their ships and love them. Their standards of safety, personnel, and operation are beyond reproach. As a rule they do much more than satisfy the minimum requirements of the law. These men are entitled to a ship inspection upon which they can rely. They are entitled to the restoration of public confidence in the shipping industry.

Mr. President, I come from a State and city whose welfare is intimately bound up with marine business. You may be assured that I do not want to injure that business. I desire to do all that I can to conserve and expand it. An investigation, I am convinced, will not harm it. What may destroy it is the growth of a conviction on the part of persons who travel that the Government and ship companies have no regard for their safety. That will desiccate the stream of traffic as surely as the Sahara sun dries up the desert dew. Investigate and legislate to make the sea safe and water-borne traffic will grow to heretofore unknown proportions. That is why I plead, Mr. President, for the consideration of the pending resolution.

EXHIBIT A

[From the New York Telegram, Tuesday, December 4, 1928]

"VESTRIS" INQUIRY LEAVES DISASTER UNEXPLAINED—TESTIMONY INDICATING BUNGLING BY CREW HEARD, BUT ACTUAL CAUSE OF SINKING, CAUSING LOSS OF 111 LIVES, REMAINS A MYSTERY

By Talcott Powell, New York Telegram staff writer

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 7—AT THE PIER

Forenoon: United States Steamboat Inspector Keane formally reported he had lowered lifeboats of Vestris into water as a test, although actually he had not done so for fear of delaying the loading of the vessel at the pier.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 10—LEAVING NEW YORK

Head Waiter Thomas Connor noticed slight list when Vestris sailed. He said the vessel always had it.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 11—AT SEA

5.09 a. m.: Vestris radioed Lamport & Holt ship Voltaire, "I have nothing to communicate."

6 a. m.: Frederick Puppe, John Santone, and Walter Spitz, passengers, noticed list. Puppe could get no oatmeal cooked for his baby. An officer told him the cargo had shifted and would be straightened in an hour.

8 a. m.: Gilbert Ford, chief fireman, discovered water entering through ash ejector. Three feet of water on stokehold plates. His effort to fix the ejector failed because of rusty screws.

9 a. m.: Chief Engineer Adams was informed of leaking ejector. Twenty tons of water were in the boiler room bilge. Chief Officer Johnson heard water running under starboard bunker and noted a slight list.

10 a. m.: Lavatory drain broke, letting 15 tons of water into engine-room bilge.

12 noon: Ship listing so that passengers had to hold dinner plates in their hands. Ejector and drain repaired. Ship hove to. Water began running from starboard bunker after a port working door had sprung, letting in the sea. A mysterious leak, which was never found, started in the starboard bunker.

6 p. m.: No regular supper. Dining room and stateroom portholes leaking around gaskets. Starboard working door shipping water badly. Report among members of the crew that starboard coal port was leaking.

7.30 p. m.: The Vestris lurched violently to starboard, flinging baggage and furniture about when several tons of cargo shifted 15 feet, smashing bulkhead in No. 1 hold. The vessel never recovered.

10 p. m.: Starboard working door leaking worse. Six feet of water in the alleyway. Stewards' quarters flooded four feet deep, with more water pouring in around deadlights.

12 midnight: Third Officer Welland investigated leaking starboard half door.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 12—AT SEA OFF THE VIRGINIA CAPES

2 a. m.: Puppe, awakened by hungry baby, noticed greatly increased list and silent engines.

2.30 a. m.: Steam shut off in the kitchens. List 25 degrees.

3 a. m.: Stewards put to bail in alleyway by starboard working door.

4 a. m.: Starboard boiler flooded. Captain Carey conferred in engine room with Chief Engineer Adams, who assured him pumps were holding water. Carey ordered No. 2 starboard ballast tank emptied. Nos. 4 and 5 had already been blown. Ship failed to right herself. Chief Officer Johnson reported to skipper situation was "pretty serious." Third Officer Welland took command of bucket brigade in alleyway.

4.30 a. m.: More men ordered to bail.

4.56 a. m.: Vestris radioed Voltaire, "Have nothing to report."

6 a. m.: No breakfast and no fresh water. Four-foot geyser rising in kitchen floor at every roll of ship. Third Officer Welland reported to Captain Carey, "Situation is serious." One passenger saw crew begin jettisoning cargo.

7 a. m.: Bucket brigade began to quit without orders. Pantry flooded and water entering upward through the garbage chute. After galley door burst under weight of water and flooded lazarette.

8 a. m.: More of the bucket brigade straggled away. One noticed bunker hatches had been battened with new canvas during the night. List increasing momentarily.

9 a. m.: Chief officer took charge of cargo jettisoning. Remnant of bucket brigade quit as water gained. Women and children of the third class ordered to first-class deck. List so bad passengers barely able to get to smoking room for shelter.

9.10 a. m.: Vestris sent general radio call: "We are heeling over and may need assistance."

9.30 a. m.: Engines entirely shut down to conserve steam for pumps.

9.58 a. m.: S O S, followed by: "We are heeling over to the starboard side and need immediate assistance."

10.02 a. m.: Freighter Giorgio Ohlsen gave her position as 35 miles from sinking ship.

10.08 a. m.: Vestris informed powerful shore station at Tuckerton, N. J., of her position, later found to have been incorrect by 37 miles.

10.30 a. m.: Engineers reported that the black gang mutinied and went on deck. Officers began to stoke two remaining boilers. Firemen admitted going on deck, but denied mutiny, saying they only abandoned work when situation was hopeless. S O S repeated, followed by: "Urgent help needed." Futile attempts to launch lifeboats Nos. 4 and 6, loaded with women and children, begun. Vestris radioed Voltaire: "Please rush at full speed to our aid immediately."

10.40 a. m.: Vestris radioed Japanese freighter Ohio Maru, "Come immediately, all possible speed." Ohio Maru, 135 miles away, replied: "On way now."

10.50 a. m.: White Star liner Cedric, 180 miles away, offered aid.

10.52 a. m.: Vestris radioed Lampert & Holt, her agents: "Last night developed 32-degree list to starboard. Impossible to proceed anywhere. Sea moderately rough."

10.56 a. m.: Vestris to Cedric: "We do not need your assistance." Then to Tuckerton: "We are getting worse. Decks all under water. Ship lying on beam ends. Impossible to proceed."

11 a. m.: Chief Engineer Adams to Captain Carey: "I can keep her afloat as long as I have steam for the pumps." Another general radio call: "Oh, please come to our assistance." On the boat deck launching tackle broke and jammed. Passengers said they heard no orders given except one, by a steward, telling a passenger to don a life belt. There was no panic. Another passenger saw a negro wrest a pistol from an officer and throw it overboard. The Vestris radioed her position to the Giorgio Ohlsen.

11.11 a. m.: Vestris to Tuckerton: "May have to take to boats any minute."

11.15 a. m.: Waiters ordered to help with boats.

11.30 a. m.: Bunker bulkhead sprang an enormous leak over starboard boiler. Engine-room deck plates buckled and water spewed upward. Tons of sea entered vessel. The Giorgio Ohlsen radioed compass bearings to Vestris.

11.35 a. m.: Vestris gave Cedric her last compass bearings.

12 noon: "Still a chance of saving the ship," said Chief Officer Johnson. The destroyer Davis reports making 20 knots; American Shipper 15 knots.

12.15 p. m.: The Santa Barbara informed the Vestris: "Expect to reach you at 7 p. m. Speed 17 knots."

12.30 p. m.: Vestris radioed: "We will soon have to abandon ship."

12.37 p. m.: Santa Barbara to Vestris: "Have direction finder on you. Coming along fine. Good luck."

12.42 p. m.: Vestris to Tuckerton: "Power cut off. Am going to use coil (emergency set). Please listen for same." Tuckerton: "O. K."

1.07 p. m.: Battleship Wyoming to Vestris: "Will arrive 9 p. m."

1.17 p. m.: Vestris: "Can't wait any longer. Going to abandon."

1.22 p. m.: Vestris, very faintly: "Now taking to lifeboats. So long, WSC" (Tuckerton's call letters). "SK" (international signal meaning "I am signing off").

1.30 p. m.: Captain refused life belt. Crew taking to starboard boats. Boats Nos. 4 and 6 still stuck on side of ship.

2.30 p. m.: The Vestris foundered.

ADDENDA

7.30 p. m.: American Shipper arrived in general vicinity.

10.30 p. m.: Arrived at position given by Vestris.

11.02 p. m.: Ohio Maru reported arrival and failure to find lifeboats.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 13

3.40 a. m.: American Shipper sighted red flare from lifeboat.

4.05 a. m.: American Shipper picked up first lifeboat.

4.30 a. m.: American Shipper lookout heard cries and found lifeboat No. 1 with searchlight.

4.48 a. m.: French tanker Myriam picked up lifeboat.

6.30 a. m.: Daybreak on to 11.11 a. m. the American Shipper, the Berlin, the Myriam, and the battleship Wyoming made the remaining rescues.

11.11 a. m.: The Berlin picked Carl Schmidt out of the water. This was the last rescue.

EXHIBIT B

[From report by Commissioner F. A. O'Neill]

RECOMMENDATIONS

The chief usefulness of this investigation lies in the constructive results which may be drawn from the lessons of the disaster as now disclosed. Accordingly, as such constructive results, I recommend the following:

(1) The present practice whereby foreign steam vessels carrying passengers from our ports to ports other than home ports of the country to which they belong, are treated as immune from the requirements of law as to lifeboats and life preservers, should be abolished. It is plainly contrary to public policy and common sense that the Vestris should not have been fully under our regulations because she carried a British flag, and was not examined under the British Board of Trade rules because she did not touch at British ports. Such a practice invites disaster.

(2) All vessels subject to our requirements of law as to life preservers should be required immediately to procure life preservers in accordance with the requirements in force since 1919, the purpose of which requirements is to insure a design which will keep an exhausted person's head above water. The present practice of passing life preservers not in accordance with those requirements on the plea that they were purchased prior to 1919 opens the door to subterfuge and, as shown by the experience of the Vestris, endangers life.

(3) The Steamboat Inspection Service should inaugurate a method of testing lifeboats for watertightness in cases, where due to the loading of the vessel or for other reasons, the lifeboats can not be lowered into the water.

(4) All ocean-going steamers and motor ships, both freighters and passenger carriers, should be required to install wireless with competent wireless operators capable of maintaining continuous watch. Had such requirements been in force, the Montoso could have been along side of the Vestris long before the latter sank.

(5) Regulations should be made requiring that all sea connections and piping thereto be located where they may be capable of inspection at sea, and repaired.

(6) Regulations should be made requiring owners to furnish full and accurate stability data for all vessels using United States ports as bases for passenger traffic; and these data be kept up to date. Without such data clearance papers should not be issued.

(7) The law governing limitation of liability in case of marine disaster should be amended so that owners may not have the benefit of such limitation where they have not taken reasonable means to examine and determine the competency of the principal officers of the vessel.

(8) The agencies both here and abroad under whose authority examinations of officers and the issuing of licenses to such officers come, should study their method of examination for licenses for the purpose of injecting into those examinations larger means of determining the executive ability of the applicant.

(9) Present life-saving apparatus should be supplemented by requirements for rafts of approved construction.

(10) With the aid of competent technical advisers investigation should be conducted into improved designs of lifeboats, improved devices for launching lifeboats, and improved designs for life preservers and other buoyant material.

(11) There should be created in the Steamboat Inspection Service a technical staff empowered to pass upon the design of all commercial vessels, with respect particularly to construction materials, stability, bulkheads, pumps, and other factors making for stability and buoyancy.

(12) The rules and practice should be so changed as to require the thorough inspection of all openings in the shell plating of the ship, such as cargo ports, coal ports, scuppers, and discharge pipes of all kinds.

(13) A full study should be made, either by Congress or the approaching international conference on safety of life at sea, of the ancient rules of admiralty law as to salvage and limitation of liability on the part of the owners. These rules came into being before the construction of modern rapidly moving ships, and before the wireless enabled vessels at sea to communicate instantly with each other and with the owners on shore. Obviously, the amount of salvage which can be claimed by a rescuing ship may cause the captain of the vessel in distress to delay too long the sending of an appeal for help. So, likewise, the ancient fiction of law whereby the ship itself is treated as solely responsible for any disaster which overtakes it, is, under modern conditions of travel, grossly unjust to passengers and their dependents; and it puts a premium on slackness and penuriousness on the part of owners in keeping vessels in seaworthy condition and equipped with all modern, scientific devices for insuring stability, buoyancy, and safety.

(14) At the same time a full study should be made of the possibility of more humane legislation for the protection of the seamen in the crew. The principle of compulsory workmen's compensation in hazardous employments has become embodied in the statutes of many States. The members of the crew of a sea-going vessel are certainly engaged in a hazardous employment; and, since because of lack of official position, they have no control over the management of the vessel, they are exposed to the hazards not only of the sea but also of the ability of their officers. In the event of disaster, they and their families have at present no effective redress or compensation whatever.

I request the United States attorney to cause this report, the reports of the two captains, and the testimony taken in the case to be forwarded to the chairman of the respective committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States having jurisdiction over the framing of applicable legislation.

Dated, New York, December 19, 1928.

FRANCIS A. O'NEILL,
United States Commissioner.

EXHIBIT C

[From report by D. N. Hoover]

LESSONS TO BE LEARNED FROM THE DISASTER

The thing that stands out most prominently in this disaster and the lesson first to be learned is that we must hereafter stress men more than things. In this modern age we are prone to direct our efforts as far as possible toward the invention of mechanical devices that will make things safer, and this is true not only on ships but also on shore. As a result of it, I fear that we have come to unconsciously become the slaves of these things that we have invented to help us, forgetting that no matter how excellent a device there may be, there must be competent men to handle it, and this competency in men must be stressed at sea more than in any other place.

Without desiring to unnecessarily reflect upon the officers of the Vestris it must be apparent to anyone with an open mind and approaching this disaster in a detached manner that the officers of this ship do not seem to measure up to the standard that we would expect to be present in a British ship. We must have in mind, therefore, so far as the Steamboat Inspection Service is concerned, that first of all we must insist upon competent officers. We undertake to do this by requiring certain experience of all ships' officers before license may be obtained, and, in addition, we undertake by written examinations to determine whether these officers are properly prepared to have issued to them licenses by the United States Government. In this British ship the Steamboat Inspection Service had no control over these ship's officers, but we are concerned as Americans in being sure that the officers of American ships shall be equal to such an emergency as confronted the officers of the steamer Vestris. In this connection I may state that during the last 10 years marked improvement has been made in raising the standard of examination questions used by the local inspectors. This has been done by advice of the office of the Supervising Inspector General, and at present that office is engaged in the preparation of difficult questions of high standard.

It is manifest that the members of the crew of the Vestris were not well trained in lifeboat drill. In this country, so far as the issuance of certificates to lifeboat men is concerned, those certificates are issued as a result of an actual practical examination of the applicant. So far as the issuance of able seamen certificates is concerned, those certificates are issued upon statements of experience that are made in affidavit form by the persons desiring to be able seamen. I do not argue that there should be no experience required for able seamen, but I do submit that in addition to the experience that is required there should be an actual practical examination of able seamen conducted by inspectors of this service. It has been alleged that there has been much fraud in the handling of these able-seamen certificates, and beyond doubt that is true, but that is not due to the service. It is due to the law, for where there is a law that requires the issuance of a certificate as important as an able-seaman certificate, the issuance of that certificate based entirely upon a statement of experience, it is easy to see that fraud can easily be practiced by the applicant. The office of the Supervising Inspector General contains correspondence showing the efforts that have been made to apprehend these offenders, but the surest way to prevent this and to improve the standard would be by actual examination by the inspectors.

In connection with the loss of the Vestris, where it is evident that it was not possible to get all of the lifeboats clear of the ship, it is easy to see that those persons who believe in the increasing use of rafts would advance the argument that there should be more rafts supplied. In that connection, permit me to say that so far as the use of boats is concerned I would not be in favor of changing the rule of boats for all, but so far as the use of additional buoyant apparatus is concerned I may state that the British have in their suggestions for the international conference that is to be held in London next spring included the use of additional buoyancy to the extent of 25 per cent of the people on board in addition to the lifeboats that are carried.

That suggestion by the British has been favorably met by the American committee that is preparing for the international conference, and it may be that as a result of the loss of the Vestris that percentage might be raised. This additional buoyancy would not be in the form of the catamaran rafts usually used in this country, but of an entirely different form of raft buoyancy, the purpose of such buoyancy being to take care of persons temporarily as best may be under probable conditions similar to those that were present in the case of the loss of the Vestris.

Encourage manufacturers in the lifeboat art to develop improved devices for launching lifeboats, particularly from vessels which are listed over.

I have referred in another part of this report to the suggestion of the commanding officer of the battleship Wyoming in regard to life preservers, and only take time at this place to again state that this is a matter that will be considered by the Board of Supervising Inspectors at its next annual meeting.

With regard to the inspection of lifeboats, I have pointed out in detail how lifeboats are inspected and the manner in which wooden lifeboats may be expected to act when first put into the water, but the question may well be asked as to whether granting that wooden lifeboats do take up in places where they leak, whether they take up sufficiently rapidly to be a safe boat, and my thought in that respect is that in the inspections that are hereafter made of wooden lifeboats, the test might be made with water in the boats. The water could be used as the weight required, and it could be also required that it remain in the boats for a certain length of time, and if at the end of that time the boats were not tight and they still leaked, then those lifeboats could be rejected.

Also in connection with the inspection of foreign ships and of the life-saving equipment of these ships in particular, and I refer now to those foreign ships that are not examined under reciprocal agreements, it might be well to increase the number of inspections; that is to say, have three reinspections during the year, as well as the annual inspection that is now required. At present in the case of ferry steamers and excursion steamers three reinspections are required in addition to the annual inspection that is required by law. It is of course to be understood that if this be done it will be necessary to have more inspectors.

Again, in connection with the inspection of lifeboats, the inspectors have been up against the condition, especially in the crowded port of New York, of not being able to lower all of the lifeboats. They have lowered to the extent they were able. It would be very desirable to work out a plan by which all of these boats could be lowered and yet not at the same time unnecessarily interfere with the sailings of the ships.

While as a matter merely of the use of words it might be stressed that regardless of what the physical conditions are, time should be taken to lower the boats, yet it soon would be found if this were insisted upon under all conditions without any consideration of the conditions existing in some of the ports, the inspectors would very soon be accused of being reactionary, unprogressive, and undertaking to add burdens to the American merchant marine. Increasingly, however, it is evident that in the matter of the lifeboat drills, the service must insist upon more than a mere entry in the log, and these drills must increasingly be held frequently under the personal direction of the inspectors of this service. To do that requires more inspectors.

I have referred to the criticism made of the releasing hooks in use on the Vestris, and in that connection I may state that during the past year there has been a careful study made of releasing hooks, the matter to be considered at the next meeting of the board of supervising inspectors. In that connection a letter under the date of April 10, 1928, reading as follows, was sent to each supervising inspector:

"You will recall the correspondence that was before the board of supervising inspectors at its recent session in connection with allegations made that there were lifeboat-releasing gears that had been approved by the board of supervising inspectors that were inefficient for the purpose intended, and concerning which allegations this office is making an investigation. Although the allegations have been made, and apparently in good faith, up to the present time this office has received nothing to substantiate them, and therefore, in order that we may proceed further, it will be necessary to conduct an investigation with reference to all releasing gears in use.

"In view of the above, you will issue the necessary instructions to the boards of local inspectors in your district making annual inspections of passenger vessels to make a careful test of all lifeboat-releasing gears found on such vessels, with a view to ascertaining whether or not they are efficient and fulfill the requirements of the law. In case they are found defective in their operation, they should ascertain whether or not such defective operation can be corrected by adjustment of their working parts. This procedure should be followed until we have ascertained fully the kind of releasing gears on all passenger vessels coming under the jurisdiction of this service.

"You will also instruct them to, on November 15, 1928, submit to you a detailed report in triplicate, setting forth by trade names all gears found, showing the manufacturer by name and address and year of manufacture of gear, the vessels using such gears to be alphabetically arranged under the different kinds of gears, showing date of inspection and whether gear operated satisfactorily or otherwise, and if not satisfactorily, to what extent it failed in the test. In a word, to give a report that will show exactly the kinds of gears installed, those that functioned satisfactorily and more especially gears that failed, to the end that you may forward that report to the bureau in duplicate by not later than December 1, so that the bureau may consider the information obtained and be in a position to submit it to the board of supervising inspectors, with a view to determining just what policy shall be pursued in the testing of gears that have failed, in the elimination of gears that have been approved but which have not been manufactured, etc., all with a view to purging the list of releasing gears approved for use on vessels coming under the jurisdiction of this service, so that the claim can not be made that we are permitting the use of inefficient and antiquated releasing gears."

Undoubtedly as a result of those letters the board of supervising inspectors will undertake to test out again all the gear that has been approved during the years that have passed.

The question that must be uppermost in the minds of all men who are familiar with ships, so far as concerns the steamer Vestris, is that of stability. The whole thing revolves primarily about this question. So far as inclining ships is concerned, it may be pointed out that the United States Steamboat Inspection Service, as an arm of the United States Government, is the first organization of its kind in the world, and for a number of years, to have undertaken the inclining of merchant ships. Only recently has the British Government given attention to this matter, and I know of no other maritime nation that gives attention to it as a governmental function. Stability tests were first required by the general rules and regulations of the board of supervising inspectors after the capsizing of the steamer Eastland in the Chicago River. I may also state that while the subject of stability was not included among those subjects to be discussed at the international conference in London next spring, Admiral Rock, chairman of the ship-construction committee of the special American committees that are preparing for this conference, made the motion and I seconded it, to have stability added to the agenda to be discussed at that conference. In this connection the question may be asked as to why this matter of stability has not received governmental attention from other nations the same as ours. It may also be asked as to why a standard has not been adopted in the premises, and in that respect I may say that so far as stability is concerned doctors disagree. There is a school of naval architects that believes in one thing in regard to stability and another school that believes in another, and the difficulty has been to get a point of departure that would be a standard that could be subscribed to by the maritime nations.

So far as the work in this country is concerned, I may point out that only recently and after much research has a special committee of the American Marine Standards Committee arrived at a tentative standard with reference to stability, and that proposed standard is now being prepared to be sent not only to leading interests in this country but to the leading nations of the world. So far as the stability work of the Steamboat Inspection Service as it relates to American vessels is concerned, that is a positive thing that has been going forward for a number of years, but so far as the application of those rules to foreign ships is concerned, there immediately arises international questions that must be given consideration. If it be argued that these reciprocal agreements that our Government has entered into with foreign nations should be denounced and we should undertake to inspect foreign ships in all respects the same as American ships, then I answer that the intolerable conditions that arose as the result of that procedure are the very conditions that brought about the reciprocity that exists between leading nations, and in which reciprocity American ships have as much to gain as foreign ships. It seems to me that so far as foreign ships are concerned, that the way to meet this situation is not necessarily by radical action but by proper discussion in conference between the best minds of the leading maritime nations of the world.

The proper way to approach this whole matter of hull inspection is through the front door and not through the back. In the case of boiler inspection we require that the design of a boiler shall first be passed upon by the service, the material subject to tensile strain which is used in the construction of the boiler is tested by an inspector of the service, and finally annually the completed boiler is given a thorough internal and external examination and submitted to hydrostatic pressure. Is it not reasonable to also hold that in approaching this propostion of hull inspection we should start before the hull is built as well as after the hull is built? But what we really do is to permit a ship to be built, subject her to a stability test, and then calculate as to whether the ship has proper stability.

We would not do this in the case of the construction of a building on land; such procedure would be considered absurd. It would not be considered reasonable to permit a man to build a building worth several millions of dollars, and then calmly tell him that that building was not safe. What is done is that the building inspectors pass upon those buildings before they are constructed, and if that reasonable action is used in regard to the construction of structures on land, why is it not just as reasonable and just as logical to follow the same procedure in regard to the construction of ships? Why should we use logical methods of approaching a situation on land and then, because we have to deal with ships, undertake to throw aside all logic and follow the methods of past generations? If reference be made to the report of the Supervising Inspector General for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, it will be noted that the idea which the bureau then had in mind was to create in the office of the Supervising Inspector General a corps of experts whose business it would be to approve proposed hull construction. Again, if reference be made to the report of the Supervising Inspector General for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1927, it will be noted on pages 1, 2, and 3 a suggestion was made by that officer with reference to a reorganization in such manner as to provide a technical staff.

Another lesson to be learned from the loss of the Vestris is that wireless should be required on all ships navigating the ocean or the coasts. Had such a law been in effect, it is probable that everybody on board the Vestris might have been saved, because there was a ship within as near as 45 miles of the Vestris, but not equipped with wireless, that could have gone to her assistance.

It would seem that all openings through the shell plating of ships, such as cargo ports, coal ports, scuppers, discharge pipes of all kinds, including ash ejectors and sea cocks and their chests, should have special attention at each annual inspection, and as far as practically possible access should be had to them at any time, whether in port, at sea, loaded or light, and scuppers from any deck below a weather deck should lead to the bilges, where the water could be handled by pumps.

In new construction it may be well to require centrifugal pumps of large capacity installed to pump out of the fire and engine room bilges, or have bilge connections installed from the circulating pump or pumps to bilges as above.

In all of this tragedy there is an important factor that does not appear upon the printed page, and that is the matter of salvage, a question concerning which this service has no control or jurisdiction, but one that is vitally wrapped up in the matter of safety of ships. Captain Carey is gone. No man is able to say what his mental processes were in his hour of trial, but any man who is familiar with the law of the sea knows that he, Captain Carey, or any other shipmaster, would very carefully consider the sending of an S O S that would result in the salvaging of his ship, should it not be absolutely necessary to send out that call. There is a human thing here that must not be overlooked, and that is the professional pride of the master of the ship. Could he be sure that the ship could be saved by his own efforts, he would make every effort to do so before asking for help, and he did make every effort that he could. If the amount of salvage that could be claimed by vessels responding to such a call was reduced, the master of a ship in distress would not hesitate too long before asking for help.

If it be claimed that if salvage is reduced masters of other ships would not respond as promptly as they should, I answer that in this day of wireless communication, when the positions of ships are so well known, it would be easy to place the responsibility upon a shipmaster who refused to respond, and who, refusing, should have visited upon him the severest penalty. Of course, the matter of what salvage shall be paid is something that very properly could be determined by an international conference, at which would be present representatives of the leading maritime nations.

Another thing that might well receive attention is that of liability. We speak of limitation of liability so far as ships are concerned as something that necessarily must exist, but when we do so we forget that the conditions under which such doctrines of admiralty have grown up have competely changed. In this modern day, when ships can be and are so largely directed from home offices, it might be well to give attention to the proposition of unlimited liability upon this kind of property. The point is that increasingly the effort is made in governmental affairs to take all responsibility, and, so far as the Steamboat Inspection Service is concerned, it must be remembered that it is not a service that operates ships. By giving attention to this matter of unlimited liability there would be a responsibility placed more squarely upon the owners, and they would not be prone to look so much to the responsibility of the Government. If it be contended that to impose such a law upon American shipowners would be to penalize them, and it would, then that also is a question that would have to be adjusted in a proper international conference.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I desire before closing this report to give credit to and thank the Hon. Walter F. Brown, Assistant Secretary of Commerce; the Hon. E. F. Morgan, Solicitor of the Department of Commerce, who by their advice were of inestimable value to me in conducting this investigation; to Rear Admiral J. G. Tawresey; to Mr. Earl B. Hull, traveling inspector of this service, who gave and is giving particular attention to matters of stability of the Vestris; to Mr. J. L. Crone, supervising inspector of the second district; to Burlingham, Veeder, Masten & Fearey, counsel for the Lamport & Holt Line, who produced officers and crew without the use of subpœna; to Mr. Harry Wheeler, marine superintendent of the Lamport & Holt Line, who cooperated in every way possible in furnishing me with data; and last, but not least, to the clerks in the New York office who acted as reporters of the testimony.

I submit herewith the testimony taken at this investigation and copies of the books, Forms 991 A and B, F, of the inspectors who inspected the Vestris.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

DICKERSON N. HOOVER,
Supervising Inspector General.

EXHIBIT D

No. 456.—Marine wrecks and casualties occurring to vessels of the United States: By regions

[NOTE.—It appears that prior to 1915 the figures include disasters to foreign vessels on and near the coasts of the United States, reports of which were received in isolated instances. Casualties to vessels of the United States in Panama Canal Zone were as follows: 1927, tonnage, 60,223; property involved, $4,972,833; property lost, $61,800; persons on board, 903; lives lost, 5. 1926, tonnage, 23,271; property involved, $3,815,221; property lost, $81,500; persons on board, 154. These and corresponding figures for previous years are not included in the recapitulation or elsewhere]

Year ended June 30—	Number of vessels	Wrecks involving total loss	Casualties involving partial and unknown damage	Vessels totally lost	Vessels damaged	Losses to vessels	Losses to cargoes	Passengers	Crews	Lives lost
TOTAL
				Tons	Tons	Dollars	Dollars	Number	Number
1910	1,493	365	1,128	135,305	2,000,997	11,058,840	2,565,580	15,464	22,640	403
1911	1,227	294	933	101,365	1,475,688	9,565,995	1,694,630	22,484	21,668	262
1912	1,447	328	1,119	113,920	1,546,391	8,213,375	1,941,010	15,972	24,310	195
1913	1,265	274	991	91,188	1,663,623	8,338,935	1,549,285	21,101	23,077	283
1914	1,210	293	917	173,069	1,518,930	11,437,330	2,509,405	14,533	22,199	421
1915	1,088	289	799	151,968	1,276,125	10,199,560	4,013,083	12,857	20,220	277
1916	1,140	317	823	135,233	1,714,434	12,671,040	3,668,995	14,080	20,653	1,364
1917	1,072	324	748	197,119	1,523,307	33,708,710	12,479,600	8,233	21,418	490
1918	976	380	596	248,520	1,090,956	57,728,110	22,557,940	6,911	16,207	398
1919	738	303	435	163,168	1,016,590	38,139,080	12,698,145	5,722	14,289	452
1920	1,074	285	789	214,531	2,088,534	54,955,480	17,612,455	14,499	26,100	551
1921	777	222	555	122,397	1,434,888	28,662,730	6,269,295	7,081	16,005	206
1922	907	277	630	131,027	1,762,412	18,727,614	3,975,714	8,989	19,065	227
1923	980	273	707	117,099	1,941,349	17,202,806	3,710,959	14,144	21,198	116
1924	945	237	708	96,474	1,917,058	14,201,211	3,802,792	8,861	20,255	202
1925	980	255	725	96,225	1,985,884	15,177,361	4,113,565	11,958	22,771	196
1926	982	254	728	93,539	2,015,068	15,596,857	4,324,475	12,331	21,970	236
1927	1,233	300	933	118,337	2,787,707	18,704,033	5,314,693	10,493	27,635	222
ATLANTIC, GULF, AND PACIFIC COASTS OF THE UNITED STATES
1921	375	110	265	39,418	476,433	10,505,725	1,553,055	5,418	6,641	77
1922	515	171	344	78,552	732,679	9,200,909	1,500,663	4,289	9,355	148
1923	559	161	398	66,089	815,236	9,527,801	1,976,572	8,722	10,179	77
1924	564	143	421	56,133	982,448	7,010,156	1,662,101	4,259	11,020	94
1925	577	157	420	51,907	1,001,113	8,037,586	2,781,413	7,290	12,343	93
1926	584	163	421	59,143	1,017,968	10,364,020	2,055,263	8,244	12,236	145
1927	685	175	510	62,502	1,303,448	10,239,557	1,626,694	5,629	13,602	125

EXHIBIT D—Continued

No. 456.—Marine wrecks and casualties occurring to vessels of the United States: By regions—Continued

Year ended June 30—	Number of vessels	Wrecks involving total loss	Casualties involving partial and unknown damage	Vessels totally lost	Vessels damaged	Losses to vessels	Losses to cargoes	Passengers	Crews	Lives lost
GREAT LAKES
1921	144	16	128	13,296	525,821	1,694,280	134,025	574	3,798	44
1922	120	19	101	9,529	432,357	1,816,098	95,000	407	2,335	16
1923	154	33	121	17,125	512,081	2,855,072	379,492	3,300	3,733	9
1924	72	15	57	5,425	185,881	902,300	232,444	1,441	1,569	16
1925	67	15	52	11,065	126,822	2,200,255	117,990	1,734	1,496	39
1926	91	18	73	4,177	215,938	1,365,509	119,937	1,513	1,792	17
1927	129	20	109	17,328	409,264	2,823,077	197,216	927	3,286	5
RIVERS OF THE UNITED STATES
1921	95	35	60	7,749	96,969	2,652,005	91,915	537	1,428	11
1922	114	47	67	5,621	135,670	1,190,650	98,820	1,082	1,524	6
1923	130	45	85	5,542	145,792	1,408,423	154,245	238	1,757	9
1924	147	51	96	8,601	163,907	1,584,210	62,861	1,251	1,993	13
1925	171	49	122	5,635	256,885	2,237,372	235,432	991	2,704	21
1926	157	49	108	3,581	259,822	1,542,037	33,325	1,422	2,873	8
1927	204	68	136	7,285	314,305	1,994,354	158,095	1,152	3,217	24
AT SEA AND ON THE COASTS OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES
1921	163	61	102	61,934	335,665	13,810,720	4,490,300	552	4,138	74
1922	158	40	118	37,325	461,706	6,519,157	2,291,231	3,211	5,851	57
1923	137	34	103	28,343	468,240	3,411,510	1,200,650	1,884	5,529	21
1924	162	28	134	26,315	584,822	4,704,545	1,845,386	1,910	5,673	79
1925	165	34	131	27,618	601,064	2,702,148	978,730	1,943	6,228	43
1926	150	24	126	26,638	521,340	2,325,291	2,115,950	1,152	5,069	66
1927	215	37	178	31,222	760,690	3,647,045	3,332,688	2,785	7,530	68

Source: Reports of the U. S. Coast Guard, Treasury Department.

EXHIBIT E

No. 12.—Showing the number and gross tonnage of steamers and motorships of 100 tons gross and upward, totally lost (including war losses), and broken up during the years 1903 to 1926 distinguishing the principal maritime countries, and indicating the percentage lost of the tonnage owned by the various countries

Year	Lost or broken up [1]	Great Britain and Ireland			British Dominions			America [2] (United States)			Denmark			France			Germany			Greece			Holland
		Number	Tons	Per cent	Number	Tons	Per cent	Number	Tons	Per cent	Number	Tons	Per cent	Number	Tons	Per cent	Number	Tons	Per cent	Number	Tons	Per cent	Number	Tons	Per cent
1915	Lost	544	1,092,924	5.68	25	33,727	2.11	19	39,730	1.54	17	32,208	4.01	46	113,011	5.92	32	74,880	1.69	14	27,653	3.10	25	41,393	2.76
	Broken up	9	9,853		4	814					1	544		2	6,992
	Total	553	1,102,777		29	34,541		19	39,730		18	32,752		48	120,003		32	74,880		14	27,653		25	41,393
1916	Lost	571	1,411,429	7.50	30	31,396	1.92	27	57,255	2.01	45	60,531	7.59	57	148,051	8.00	25	39,506	1.02	38	91,645	12.78	32	72,347	4.87
	Broken up	1	427		3	1,166								1	523
	Total	572	1,411,856		33	32,562		27	57,255		45	60,531		58	148,574		25	39,506		38	91,645		32	72,347
1917 [3]	Lost	1,384	4,093,717		49	71,262		60	166,630		81	109,949		144	355,007		24	19,750		89	241,546		49	84,331
	Broken up	2	300		2	577					1	546
	Total	1,386	4,094,017		51	71,839		60	166,630		82	110,495		144	355,007		24	19,750		89	241,546		49	84,331
1918 [3]	Lost	661	1,974,182		46	97,812		90	308,742		2	131,960		92	186,083		18	13,249		20	54,386		16	9,791
	Broken up	2	1,558		1	128								1	176
	Total	663	1,975,740		47	97,940		90	308,742		21	31,960		93	186,259		18	13,249		2	054,386		16	9,791
1919	Lost	84	140,941	0.86	34	35,168	1.89	54	114,752	0.96	4	2,243	0.36	22	32,250	1.64	47	19,152	0.59	6	7,426	2.55	24	11,936	0.76
	Broken up	1	244		4	1,646								2	7,294								1	274
	Total	85	141,185		38	36,814		54	114,752		4	2,243		24	39,544		47	19,152		6	7,426		25	12,210
1920	Lost	86	123,861	.68	26	16,574	.89	45	112,040	.90	6	2,163	.30	25	50,874	1.72	17	9,061	2.16	26	31,915	6.42	12	3,736	.21
	Broken up	6	5,722		5	1,818
	Total	92	129,583		31	18,392		45	112,040		6	2,163		25	50,874		17	9,061		26	31,915		12	3,736
1921	Lost	65	65,718	.34	35	42,332	1.87	22	60,392	.45	8	5,536	.63	21	27,899	.85	12	7,005	1.07	26	52,363	8.92	2	602	.03
	Broken up	13	43,237		9	13,422		4	8,920					3	4,212		1	1,827					1	2,061
	Total	78	108,955		44	55,754		26	69,312		8	5,536		24	32,111		13	8,832		26	52,363		3	2,663
1922	Lost	77	119,297	.62	15	11,897	.47	24	54,842	.40	4	6,773	.70	23	23,770	.67	27	24,380	1.37	5	7,136	1.09	6	5,037	.19
	Broken up	41	120,347		20	30,173		14	37,630		4	944		22	53,674		4	6,949		1	1,353		4	5,903
	Total	118	239,644		35	42,070		38	92,472		8	7,717		45	77,444		31	31,329		6	8,489		10	10,940
1923	Lost	84	138,744	.73	17	17,836	.69	28	65,939	.49	5	6,966	.74	20	12,936	.37	29	35,710	1.42	4	9,941	1.33	5	10,817	.41
	Broken up	73	184,207		13	30,701		125	346,761		6	7,408		64	167,478		4	5,227					7	10,812
	Total	157	322,951		30	48,537		153	412,700		11	14,374		84	180,414		33	40,937		4	9,941		12	21,629

Footnotes at end of table.

EXHIBIT E—Continued

No. 12.—Showing the number and gross tonnage of steamers and motorships of 100 tons gross and upward, totally lost (including war losses), and broken up during the years 1903 to 1926 distinguishing the principal maritime countries, and indicating the percentage lost of the tonnage owned by the various countries—Continued

Year	Lost or broken up [1]	Great Britain and Ireland			British Dominions			America [2] (United States)			Denmark			France			Germany			Greece			Holland
		Number	Tons	Per cent	Number	Tons	Per cent	Number	Tons	Per cent	Number	Tons	Per cent	Number	Tons	Per cent	Number	Tons	Per cent	Number	Tons	Per cent	Number	Tons	Per cent
1924	Lost	67	108,077	0.57	31	26,518	1.02	26	42,445	0.34	7	12,248	1.24	13	23,908	0.73	20	15,542	0.54	3	9,625	1.27	1	801	0.03
	Broken up	116	254,089		29	55,732		145	488,865		7	10,844		57	111,610		14	27,366		2	3,058		7	15,892
	Total	183	362,166		60	82,250		171	531,310		14	23,092		70	135,518		34	42,908		5	12,683		8	16,693
1925	Lost	54	61,778	.32	25	15,574	.60	11	27,416	.23	4	1,842	.18	16	12,949	.39	23	18,370	.61	11	21,477	2.40	5	14,431	.56
	Broken up	79	198,637		28	48,458		22	56,453		1	295		26	84,001		10	37,537		3	18,205		2	6,038
	Total	133	260,415		53	64,032		33	83,869		5	2,137		42	96,950		33	55,907		14	39,682		7	20,469
1926	Lost	55	111,780	.58	31	29,680	1.10	20	39,547	.35	3	771	.07	13	26,981	.81	21	24,512	.80	9	16,034	1.74	6	9,991	.39
	Broken up	67	151,894		36	42,994		146	403,944		4	2,698		22	37,024		7	8,667		1	1,476		2	4,477
	Total	122	263,674		67	72,674		166	443,491		7	3,469		35	64,005		28	33,179		10	17,510		8	14,468

Year	Lost or broken up [1]	Italy			Japan			Norway			Spain			Sweden			Other countries		World
		Number	Tons	Per cent	Number	Tons	Per cent	Number	Tons	Per cent	Number	Tons	Per cent	Number	Tons	Per cent	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Per cent
1915	Lost	20	53,930	3.56	20	43,041	2.36	81	116,501	5.89	13	26,871	3.03	37	62,359	6.10	75	109,158	968	1,867,386	4.29
	Broken up	1	1,214		1	3,272		1	371					1	322		4	2,950	24	26,332
	Total	21	55,144		21	46,313		82	116,872		13	26,871		38	62,681		79	112,108	992	1,893,718
1916	Lost	82	228,290	13.54	28	81,068	4.39	208	288,446	12.74	30	66,456	8.15	43	43,528	4.70	58	95,034	1,274	2,714,982	6.31
	Broken up	5	6,347		3	438		1	158										14	9,059
	Total	87	234,637		31	81,506		209	288,604		30	66,456		43	43,528		58	95,034	1,288	2,724,041
1917 [3]	Lost	128	398,790		36	92,113		368	601,209		34	73,565		56	75,132		94	219,477	2,596	6,602,478
	Broken up	3	3,226											1	134				9	4,783
	Total	131	402,016		36	92,113		368	601,209		34	73,565		57	75,266		94	219,477	2,605	6,607,261
1928 [3]	Lost	50	184,173		30	61,829		102	167,034		34	71,745		52	70,016		56	99,352	1,288	3,330,354
	Broken up	1	429											1	146				6	2,437
	Total	51	184,602		30	61,829		102	167,034		34	71,745		53	70,162		56	99,352	1,294	3,332,791
1919	Lost	2	366	.03	42	43,829	1.88	31	33,199	2.07	7	7,376	1.04	27	24,201	2.64	31	41,395	415	514,234	1.12
	Broken up										1	272		1	208				10	9,938
	Total	2	366		42	43,829		31	33,199		8	7,648		28	24,409		31	41,395	425	524,172
1920	Lost	9	13,020	.61	29	41,988	1.40	26	25,944	1.31	10	10,050	1.07	13	17,777	1.78	27	51,791	357	510,794	.99
	Broken up													2	261				13	7,801
	Total	9	13,020		29	41,988		26	25,944		10	10,050		15	18,038		27	51,791	370	518,595
1921	Lost	15	28,069	1.14	29	51,185	1.53	16	29,210	1.23	30	53,772	4.84	8	9,698	.89	21	25,211	310	458,992	.81
	Broken up										1	2,518					2	1,348	34	77,545
	Total	15	28,069		29	51,185		16	29,210		31	56,290		8	9,698		23	26,559	344	536,537
1922	Lost	15	31,059	1.15	64	54,136	1.51	27	23,010	.95	20	27,917	2.30	7	6,138	.59	37	33,334	351	428,756	.72
	Broken up	6	15,735		22	15,580		5	3,088		1	1,039		2	251				160	315,110
	Total	21	46,794		86	69,716		32	26,098		21	28,956		9	6,389		37	33,334	511	743,866
1923	Lost	22	49,629	1.72	33	58,548	1.62	27	36,085	1.52	9	10,779	.90	18	12,587	1.11	23	27,847	324	494,364	.82
	Broken up	59	157,080		4	5,498		6	4,622		6	13,760		9	2,160		9	26,792	385	962,506
	Total	81	206,709		37	64,046		33	40,707		15	24,539		27	14,747		32	54,639	709	1,456,870
1924	Lost	12	38,125	1.40	42	70,933	1.85	21	22,863	.96	6	9,336	.79	11	14,084	1.18	32	45,899	292	440,404	.71
	Broken up	43	110,633		8	4,616		7	3,456		9	24,283		7	1,265		24	62,549	485	1,174,258
	Total	55	148,758		50	75,549		28	26,319		15	33,619		18	15,349		56	108,448	777	1,614,662
1925	Lost	17	37,736	1.29	38	42,788	1.09	21	20,367	.78	14	17,516	1.53	15	14,504	1.16	26	21,000	280	327,748	.55
	Broken up	31	100,869		24	37,759		4	3,579		14	15,189		6	4,186		23	41,840	273	653,046
	Total	48	138,605		62	80,547		25	23,946		28	32,705		21	18,690		49	62,840	553	980,794
1926	Lost	19	47,905	1.52	43	44,576	1.12	22	26,410	.94	12	15,954	1.42	9	10,510	.81	35	23,589	298	428,240	.71
	Broken up	17	45,988		12	16,474		6	5,760		10	23,488		8	4,800		20	48,949	358	798,633
	Total	36	93,893		55	61,050		28	32,170		22	39,442		17	15,310		55	72,538	656	1,226,873

[1] Cases of breaking up consequent upon casualty are included under "Lost."
[2] Excluding vessels trading on the Great Lakes of North America.
[3] Owing to the war, statistics regarding the vessels owned by the various countries of the world were not compiled by Lloyd's Register for the years 1917 and 1918.

EXHIBIT F

No. 13.—Passengers carried by water during the calendar year 1926

[Includes passengers carried by regular vessel lines, ferry, and excursion boats]

Grand divisions	Credited to—		Total
	Ports	Rivers
Atlantic coast	[1] 309,308,402	5,602,421	314,910,823
Gulf coast	8,145,150	154,048	8,299,198
Pacific coast, including Hawaii	106,710,066	1,206,729	107,916,795
Great Lakes	28,123,747		28,123,747
Mississippi River and tributaries		16,477,009	16,477,009
Canals and connecting channels:
Federal		2,198,251	2,198,251
State and private		233,724	233,724
Interior rivers and waters not tributary to Atlantic, Gulf, or Pacific coasts		56,317	56,317
Total	452,287,365	25,928,499	478,215,864

[1] Figure for 1925 in error. Correct figure is 203,243,621, making total for ports, 336,050,250; total, Atlantic coast, 208,866,151; and grand total, 355,814,435.

EXHIBIT G

No. 110.—Arrivals of passengers at the principal ports from foreign countries, years ended June 30

NOTE.—Figures for immigrants and nonimmigrant aliens cover admissions only. In addition, there are debarred aliens among the arrivals who, after being examined, are found inadmissible and returned to the countries whence they came]

Port and class	1900–1909, average	1910–1914, average	1915–1919, average	1920–1924, average	1924	1925	1926	1927
United States, total	1,060,019	1,488,422	454,192	963,630	1,180,583	797,674	866,863	916,521
United States citizens	166,236	273,262	131,643	246,640	301,281	339,239	370,757	378,520
Immigrants	820,239	1,034,940	234,536	554,920	706,896	294,314	304,488	335,175
Nonimmigrant aliens	73,544	180,220	88,013	162,070	172,406	164,121	191,618	202,826
New York	812,848	1,048,710	193,356	571,942	618,420	458,182	531,700	566,819
United States citizens	128,988	173,578	55,192	161,265	205,362	219,861	263,170	269,026
Immigrants	630,141	759,791	100,970	321,403	315,587	137,492	149,289	165,510
Nonimmigrant aliens	53,719	115,341	37,194	89,274	97,471	100,829	119,241	132,283
Boston	64,942	73,896	13,034	30,329	45,299	17,960	18,942	19,555
United States citizens	12,351	11,498	2,723	4,486	6,507	6,098	7,577	7,251
Immigrants	47,913	52,474	8,801	24,168	36,320	9,023	8,025	8,080
Nonimmigrant aliens	4,678	9,925	1,510	1,675	2,472	2,839	3,340	4,224
Philadelphia	24,183	54,823	2,385	10,627	10,628	1,673	606	643
United States citizens	3,510	3,506	462	1,355	1,073	942	229	370
Immigrants	20,203	48,547	1,667	8,597	8,711	409	66	100
Nonimmigrant aliens	470	2,770	256	675	844	322	311	173
Baltimore	44,707	31,283	914	511	725	153	274	154
United States citizens	1,277	1,126	76	132	141	61	215	69
Immigrants	42,994	29,395	780	317	480	68	36	45
Nonimmigrant aliens	436	762	58	62	104	24	23	40
New Orleans	[1] 8,422	11,674	11,199	11,052	12,477	11,665	13,269	13,202
United States citizens	[1] 3,925	7,837	6,808	6,474	7,276	7,948	9,533	9,278
Immigrants	[1] 3,288	1,791	1,931	1,407	1,180	727	744	903
Nonimmigrant aliens	[1] 1,209	2,046	2,460	3,171	4,021	2,990	2,992	3,021
San Francisco	10,729	14,053	19,587	24,738	22,853	13,477	14,864	18,116
United States citizens	3,609	5,389	5,460	6,976	6,980	5,589	5,825	8,065
Immigrants	5,115	4,776	8,442	7,659	7,659	1,927	2,114	2,512
Nonimmigrant aliens	2,005	3,887	5,665	10,103	8,214	5,961	6,895	7,539
Seattle	[1] 4,537	4,627	6,911	8,733	14,760	5,379	5,548	6,748
United States citizens	[1] 667	794	614	1,739	2,971	1,926	1,996	3,154
Immigrants	[1] 3,136	2,208	3,938	4,046	7,131	1,233	1,444	1,011
Nonimmigrant aliens	[1] 734	1,625	2,359	2,948	4,658	2,220	2,108	2,583

[1] Average, 1906 to 1909.

Source: Annual Reports of the Commissioner General of Immigration, Department of Labor.

No. 111.—Departures of passengers from the United States for foreign countries, years ended June 30

	1900–1909, average	1910–1914, average	1915–1919, average	1920–1924, average	1923	1924	1925	1926	1927
Total	487,425	904,423	416,948	588,088	471,187	494,595	549,813	600,235	623,296
Male	324,402	631,827	319,331	384,871	277,973	304,290	338,670	349,956	361,966
Female	163,023	272,595	97,617	203,217	193,214	190,305	211,143	250,279	261,330
Children [1]	52,455	99,348	39,053	75,863	57,610	51,190	51,547	56,470	59,723
Adults [1]	434,970	805,074	377,895	512,225	413,577	443,405	498,266	543,765	563,573
Cabin [2]	193,822	457,514	209,593	323,302	325,068	346,392	364,771	399,033	410,125
Steerage [3]	293,603	446,909	207,355	264,786	146,119	148,203	185,042	201,202	213,171

[1] Prior to 1910 the division point is 12 years; from 1910 to 1917, inclusive, 14 years; thereafter, 16.
[2] Figures include departures by rail via the Canadian and Mexican borders.
[3] Prior to 1910 designated as "Other than cabin passengers."

Source: Prior to July 1, 1907, the Bureau of Statistics; subsequently the Bureau of Immigration, Department of Labor.

EXHIBIT H

No. 1.—Comparative statement of the water-borne commerce of the United States, eliminating all known duplications, by calendar years [1]

[Quantities expressed in short tons]

Year	Ports on Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts				Ports on the Great Lakes
	Foreign traffic		Domestic traffic		Foreign traffic		Domestic traffic
	Tons	Value	Tons	Value	Tons	Value	Tons	Value
1920	100,384,206	$9,741,639,067	114,557,241	$7,402,577,058	12,388,707	$255,277,343	98,750,979	$1,150,834,264
1921	80,151,748	5,703,680,536	115,333,669	6,121,728,870	12,512,860	233,640,160	58,947,310	724,130,268
1922	86,874,593	6,662,280,874	128,430,717	7,598,082,159	13,005,132	291,349,913	81,032,958	998,069,323
1923	82,998,505	7,169,442,935	180,660,122	9,608,763,271	14,659,905	253,363,953	110,857,646	1,130,539,355
1924	85,433,050	8,523,020,980	197,624,890	11,241,182,131	16,128,526	364,545,833	93,702,753	1,603,987,681
1925	92,043,288	8,848,235,505	209,916,869	12,519,779,942	16,504,138	403,737,784	113,644,259	1,870,566,656
1926	114,693,239	8,501,645,449	227,391,874	15,161,665,805	16,599,974	440,338,743	120,794,460	1,669,053,512

[1] This table shows the corrected tonnage and values for rivers, canals, and connecting channels, and the grand totals.

EXHIBIT H—Continued

No. 1.—Comparative statement of the water-borne commerce of the United States, eliminating all known duplications, by calendar years—Continued

[Quantities expressed in short tons]

Year	Rivers, canals, and connecting channels		Grand adjusted total, foreign and domestic
	Tons	Value	Tons	Value
1920	125, 400, 000	$2, 814, 600, 000	399, 000, 000	$20, 531, 000, 000
1921	116, 300, 000	2, 443, 500, 000	332, 000, 000	14, 329, 000, 000
1922	111, 800, 000	3, 177, 900, 000	376, 000, 000	17, 504, 000, 000
1923	153, 700, 000	2, 960, 200, 000	478, 000, 000	20, 175, 000, 000
1924	173, 200, 000	3, 446, 035, 000	453, 700, 000	22, 115, 000, 000
1925	204, 569, 000	3, 950, 450, 000	483, 400, 000	23, 946, 000, 000
1926	217, 000, 000	3, 680, 000, 000	540, 500, 000	26, 722, 000, 000

No. 2.—Commerce of ports during the calendar year 1926

[Quantities expressed in short tons]

Grand divisions	Foreign				Domestic		Grand total
	Imports		Exports
	Tops	Value	Tons	Value	Tons	Value	Tons	Value
Atlantic coast	33, 078, 106	$2, 948, 889, 879	39, 835, 386	$3, 035, 572, 787	251, 804, 101	$22, 055, 257, 204	324, 717, 593	$28, 039, 719, 870
Gulf coast	8, 742, 640	322, 522, 912	15, 527, 936	1, 082, 921, 823	47, 535, 163	1, 590, 066, 619	71, 805, 739	2, 995, 511, 354
Pacific coast	3, 013, 343	598, 973, 628	14, 495, 828	512, 764, 420	93, 513, 769	3, 776, 970, 967	111, 022, 940	4, 888, 709, 015
Great Lakes	6, 424, 329	278, 863, 131	10, 175, 645	161, 475, 612	237, 280, 699	3, 325, 986, 653	253, 880, 673	3, 766, 325, 396
Grand total, unadjusted	51, 258, 418	4, 149, 249, 550	80, 034, 795	4, 792, 734, 642	630, 133, 732	30, 748, 281, 443	761, 426, 945	39, 690, 265, 635
Adjusted total, eliminating all known duplications	51, 258, 418	4, 149, 249, 550	80, 034, 795	4, 792, 734, 642	348, 186, 334	16, 830, 719, 317	479, 479, 547	25, 772, 703, 509

TABLE NO. 3.—Commerce on the rivers, canals, and connecting channels of the United States during the calendar year 1926

[Quantities expressed in short tons]

Grand divisions	Bulk freight						Package freight, miscellaneous		Total commerce
	Miscellaneous		Floated and rafted timber		Total bulk freight
	Tons	Value	Tons	Value	Tons	Value	Tons	Value	Tons	Value
Atlantic coast	24, 521, 358	$195, 307, 301	824, 727	$4, 170, 356	25, 346, 085	$199, 477, 657	2, 341, 467	$404, 060, 876	27, 687, 552	$603, 538, 533
Gulf coast	3, 283, 119	37, 693, 766	1, 549, 173	7, 145, 289	4, 832, 292	44, 839, 055	427, 352	51, 621, 179	5, 259, 644	96, 460, 234
Mississippi River and tributaries	71, 999, 019	452, 923, 962	618, 259	3, 947, 630	72, 617, 278	456, 871, 592	4, 419, 202	520, 182, 130	77, 036, 480	977, 053, 722
Pacific coast	5, 930, 120	75, 411, 736	8, 910, 897	58, 676, 649	14, 841, 017	134, 088, 385	1, 790, 097	179, 639, 314	16, 631, 114	313, 727, 699
Interior rivers and other waterways	763, 910	2, 303, 499	20, 269	238, 608	784, 179	2, 542, 107	21, 909	1, 302, 129	806, 088	3, 844, 236
Canals and connecting channels:
Federal	99, 405, 490	1, 022, 234, 975	1, 774, 434	9, 394, 008	101, 179, 924	1, 031, 628, 983	9, 190, 675	569, 345, 961	110, 370, 599	1, 600, 974, 944
State and private	5, 334, 401	421, 117, 352	2, 960	11, 800	5, 337, 361	421, 129, 152	502, 089	37, 958, 338	5, 839, 450	459, 087, 490
Grand total, unadjusted	211, 237, 417	2, 206, 992, 591	13, 700, 719	83, 584, 340	224, 938, 136	2, 290, 576, 931	18, 692, 791	1, 764, 109, 927	243, 630, 927	4, 054, 686, 858
Adjusted total, eliminating all known duplications									217, 000, 000	3, 680, 000, 000

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I did not hear all of the address of the Senator from New York. I understand—I do not know how correct it is—that there was some criticism of the Commerce Committee for not acting upon the matter. Almost immediately after the Senator introduced his resolution, at which time other resolutions were also introduced, a subcommittee of the Commerce Committee was appointed to consider the subject. As chairman of the full committee I was engaged with appropriation bills and conference matters, so that I felt the subject should be taken up by a subcommittee. The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] was appointed chairman of that subcommittee. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who has always taken a great interest in matters of this kind, and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who has likewise taken a great interest in such matters, were made the other members of the subcommittee.

I do not know how far that subcommittee has gone in its work, but I know it, especially the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], has been giving the matter very careful consideration. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], as the Senator from New York knows, has not been well, and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has been ill, so they have not been able to give the matter the attention it should have had.

I appreciate the force of what the Senator has said with reference to the matter. I think it should be gone into with extreme care. I think I can assure the Senator that if the subcommittee is not able to complete its work at this session, as it may not be on account of the illness of two of its members, then during the special session, while other work, of course, is being done, he can depend upon the Commerce Committee taking the steps that it deems wise and giving this matter the fullest and most careful consideration, with a view to doing just what the Senator suggested at the close of his speech, that we be careful not to do anything which might interfere with our marine developments, and also that everything be done that possibly can be done not only to aid them but to assure the traveling public that everything will be done which can be done to insure their safety.

Mr. WAGNER. I thank the Senator.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16714) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill. I send the amendment to the desk and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The Senator from Utah proposes the following amendment to the naval appropriation bill, which the clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Insert at the proper place in the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of the appropriations contained in this act shall be used for the maintenance of any officer or enlisted man in the military or naval service in Haiti.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. DILL. May I ask the Senator why he does not include Nicaragua as well? The election has been held in Nicaragua, and it would seem that if the marines are to be brought out there would be time for it to be done before the 1st of July.

Mr. KING. I agree entirely with the Senator from Washington. Our conquest of Nicaragua by the military force was wholly unjustifiable. The retention of our marines and military and naval officers in Nicaragua can not now be justified. I did not include in the amendment which I have just submitted the withdrawal of the marines from Nicaragua because I desired to confine my remarks on the amendment wholly to a discussion of the situation in Haiti. I shall be glad if the Senator from Washington will offer an amendment to the bill providing that no part of the appropriation carried in the bill shall be used for maintaining our military forces in Nicaragua.

Mr. KING addressed the Senate in support of his amendment. After having spoken for some time—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The Senator from Utah will suspend while the clerk reads an announcement by the Chair.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore entered into will be in force and no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or any amendment thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah will proceed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the amendment which I have just offered, if adopted, would compel the withdrawal from Haiti, after July 1 of this year, of our military forces. I admit that I am seeking to engraft upon an appropriation bill legislation which perhaps should be secured in a more direct way. As a matter of fact, however, if the executive department performed its duty no legislation whatever would be required to accomplish the object which I seek.

The military forces of the United States have been in Haiti since 1915. They are held there by Executive authority and could be withdrawn by the President of the United States without notice and without authorization from Congress. But the executive department has been deaf to the appeals of the Haitian people and to the liberal sentiment of the United States and has pursued a reactionary and imperialistic policy which, in my opinion, is incompatible with American ideals and can not be defended upon constitutional grounds. At the cost of millions of dollars we have forced military rule upon the helpless inhabitants of a friendly nation; we have sent our warships to Haitian waters and landed military forces upon Haitian soil. As stated, since 1915 we have governed Haiti and her inhabitants by military force in violation of international law and against the will of the Haitian people.

Following our military occupation and military rule, American capital has sought economic penetration and the control of the material and economic resources of Haiti. For a number of years I have protested against the Haitian policy of the United States and have insisted that the Haitian people have restored to them their own government. I have offered measures in the Senate calling for the withdrawal of American military forces and providing for free elections in order that the Haitian people might be permitted to form and adopt a constitution in harmony with their own views, and select officers to fill the various positions provided for in their own fundamental law. I have appealed to the Senate upon many occasions to free the Haitian people from military rule; to withdraw the American marines, and to leave the Haitian people free to pursue their own course and to work out their own salvation.

I regret to say that my appeals have been in vain. American bayonets still rule Haiti, and the American people are indifferent to the imperialistic course of their own Government and are deaf to the cries of the Haitian people that they may be liberated from the grasp of a powerful foreign Government. I think, however, that the American people are unacquainted with the record of their own Government in dealing with the Haitian people. They do not know that American battleships took possession of Haitian ports and American military forces waged warfare upon Haitian soil, killing more than 3,000 Haitian people. They do not know that since 1915 the Haitian people have been deprived of the right to govern themselves, and have been subjected to the will of the United States; nor do they know that the United States overthrew their government, abolished their constitution, drove their national legislature from their legislative chambers, and have prevented the Haitian people from having any voice in the control of their internal or foreign affairs. It is not generally known by the American people that the United States has imposed upon the Haitian policies obnoxious to them, and which can not prove otherwise than disadvantageous and harmful to Haiti and her people. It is well known that if our battleships and marines were withdrawn from Haiti there would be universal rejoicing among the Haitian people. The few sycophants and parasites who bask in the favor of American military rulers would be thrust aside and the people would set up a government of their own choice, and elect officials who would represent the ideals and carry out the will of the Haitian people.

I repeat when I say that if the amendment which I have offered is adopted the puppet government of Haiti masquerading as a civil power behind American bayonets would pass away as an ugly dream when the morning breaks and the shadows flee. But I am under no illusion. My amendment will be defeated and our military control of Haiti will continue until the liberal forces of the United States are aroused. More American capital will be invested and more lands wrested from the inhabitants of that unhappy land.

The Senate, I regret to say, has been indifferent, as has been the country, to all appeals for Haitian independence and for the rectification of the wrong which, in my opinion, is being committed against a helpless people and a weak State. I have heard eloquent appeals in this Chamber in behalf of people struggling for liberty against oppressive and militaristic governments. I have heard severe criticisms of a friendly and liberal government because of its control in India and Egypt. We have been free to condemn the so-called imperialism of other nations but seem oblivious to imperialistic manifestations of our own country. There was nothing improper in the United States landing marines in Nicaragua and taking over the control of its government. This seizure of Santo Domingo by the United States and its occupation by American military forces for a number of years found but little expressed opposition from American political leaders or the American press. The holding of Haiti as in a vise by the powerful hand of the United States arouses but little interest among the American people and provokes but few feeble protests among the 120,000,000 of this Republic. And the American people exhibit no concern when the Filipinos demand their independence and assert the right, which is the basis of democracy, to govern themselves and set up that form of government which to them seems best.

Returning to Haiti, I repeat, Mr. President, that in 1915 the United States committed a great wrong when it superimposed, by military force, military rule upon a people with whom we were at peace. They were unable to offer successful resistance to this powerful Nation, but, actuated by love of country and fear of the results of foreign invasion, they mobilized military forces and sought to prevent the conquest of their own country. American troops and American guns killed more than 3,000 men who believed they were defending their homes against an invading foe. Since then Haiti has been governed by the United States, not by any law of Congress or under any constitutional authority but by American military forces whose will was law and whose edicts were enforced by American bayonets. American capital followed American military occupation, and the Haitian people fear that they will be robbed of their lands and become the victims of American capitalistic exploitation.

Mr. President, upon various occasions I have offered resolutions in the Senate demanding the withdrawal of our forces from Haitian soil. In some of these resolutions I have recited, by way of preamble, some of the ugly facts attending the conquest and control of Haiti. On February 23, 1928, I offered Senate Resolution 158, which I now ask the clerk to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the resolution, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 158), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas it is claimed that the following statement contains some of the important facts relating to the occupation of Haiti by the military forces of the United States, and also some of the important occurrences following such occupation, together with facts relating to the present conditions in Haiti:

More than a century ago the Haitian people achieved their independence and established a republican form of government, under which they controlled their political affairs, without interference from foreign powers until the United States seized and occupied their country in July, 1915, accomplishing the same by employing war vessels of the Government which entered the ports and harbors of Haiti and landed large military forces upon Haitian shores;

That said military forces of the United States seized the public buildings in Haiti and important military positions; that the Haitian people were opposed to the invasion of their country by the armed forces of the United States, and some of them attempted to repel such invasion, as a result of which more than 2,500 Haitians were killed in conflicts with the armed forces of the United States;

There was no sufficient reason for sending war vessels to seize Haitian ports or to land American troops upon Haitian soil; whatever disturbances there were in said country being purely of an internal character and in no wise affecting the liberty of Americans or foreigners;

That after the seizure of Haiti, the admiral in charge of the American forces declared martial law, took control of the Government of Haiti, interfered with the election, and exerted military pressure and all influences at his command to secure the election of Dartiguenave as President of Haiti;

The United States then presented to said Dartiguenave, and to the National Assembly of Haiti, which consisted of two legislative bodies, the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate, a proposed convention giving the United States control of the revenues, police, public works, and sanitary administration of Haiti, which the assembly was unwilling to ratify; whereupon the admiral in command of said American forces cut off the salaries of the opposing members of the assembly, and announced that if the tendered treaty was not ratified the United States "has the intention to retain control in Haiti until the desired end is accomplished, and that it will forthwith proceed with the complete pacification of Haiti," under pressure of which threat the National Assembly accepted such convention in September, 1915;

That in 1916 a new National Assembly of Haiti was elected pursuant to the Haitian constitution and upon the convening of the same there was submitted to it by the United States a new constitution, prepared in the Navy Department of the United States, which, it was declared, was to supersede the constitution under which Haiti had been governed for many years. This new constitution materially changed the constitution of Haiti, among the changes being one which authorized foreigners and foreign corporations to hold Haitian lands contrary to the Haitian constitution, which sought to protect the Haitian people from foreign domination and to preserve Haitian territory for the Haitian people;

This new constitution was not acceptable to the National Assembly of Haiti; whereupon the military forces of the United States summarily and forcibly dissolved the assembly, took possession of the legislative chambers, and locked the same against members of the assembly; and when the two branches of the assembly met in other places, they were summarily and forcibly dispersed by American military forces;

That thereupon an election was ordered by those representing the United States for the alleged purpose of having said new constitution submitted to the people for ratification; that it was known that the people of Haiti opposed the so-called "new" constitution, but a few votes were cast under the supervision and control of military forces and under conditions that indicated pressure and intimidation of the Haitian people, as a result of which it is claimed that no election or true expression of the people was had, and that said new constitution was not in fact ratified by the people of Haiti.

Upon the dissolution of said National Assembly, said Dartiguenave, by dictatorial decree, set up a so-called "council of state" (appointing all the members thereof), which was an extraconstitutional and illegal body and which pretended to take over and exercise the legislative powers of the National Assembly; and it has continued from that time until the present to exercise said usurpatory authority in defiance of the will of the Haitian people. In its acts and proceedings it is claimed said council of state has been merely the instrument to register the will of the President of Haiti, who has been and is controlled by the United States.

The term of office of said Dartiguenave expired August 12, 1922, and thereupon, as is claimed, the United States selected Louis Borno to be his successor; that said council of state had no power or authority to act in the premises, but the members of said illegal organization, with the support of the American military occupation, pretended to elect as President of Haiti said Louis Borno, although he was not eligible to the Presidency of the Haitian Republic because he is not the son of a Haitian citizen, as prescribed by the constitution of Haiti;

That under the constitution of Haiti, as well as the void and unratified new constitution, the two legislative bodies of the Haitian Government were empowered to meet as a national assembly and to elect, at the times designated in said constitutions, respectively, the President of the Haitian Republic;

That said council of state, in the matter stated, and in defiance of said provisions, pretended to elect said Borno for the term of four years, the period prescribed in the so-called new constitution, which the National Assembly of Haiti had refused to accept;

That the constitution of Haiti, as well as the new constitution sought to be imposed on the Haitians, provides for the election of the members of the two legislative bodies of the Haitian Republic, but since the suppression of said bodies no elections, except as hereinafter stated, have been held, or permitted to be held, by those in control of Haiti, as a result of which no national assembly existed to choose the President of Haiti, as provided in said constitutions;

That under the terms of the new constitution a President of Haiti was to have been chosen by the national assembly on the 12th day of April, 1926, but said assembly having been abolished by the military forces of the United States and the dictatorial decree of Dartiguenave, said council of state, with the approval and support of the military forces of the United States, pretended on said day to reelect said Borno as President for a further term of four years; that it was understood for many months prior to said date that Borno aspired to another term as President and was supported for such position by General Russell (who commanded the military forces of the United States in Haiti, and who also bears the title of the American high commissioner), if not the Department of State of the United States. To bring about that result said Borno shortly prior to April, 1926, appointed 18 of the 21 members of the council of state from among his relatives, personal friends, and retainers, in order that he might be assured of his reelection on April 12 of this year;

That the term of said convention of September, 1915, expired on September 15, 1926; that if the United States had any right, under convention, to occupy Haiti and control its government and the people of Haiti, such right no longer exists, and the further presence of the United States in Haiti means the continued unauthorized control of Haiti and her people by superior military forces;

The said new constitution contained substantially the same provision as the Haitian constitution with respect to freedom of speech and the press and the guaranties of personal liberty and also with respect to the judiciary and the powers and functions of judicial officers;

That those in control of Haiti have been dissatisfied with the independence of members of the judiciary and their interpretation of the constitution and the laws, and the protection which they have accorded to the personal and property rights of the Haitian people. This situation resulted in the demand, upon the part of those controlling the political and governmental affairs of Haiti, for a suppression or repeal of said constitutional provisons, and notwithstanding said officials had declared that the people of Haiti were unfit to vote, an election was called for the 12th of January, 1928, to repeal said provision of the constitution.

That the proposed amendments to the constitution are for the purpose of legalizing the denial of freedom of the press and personal liberties, including the right to trial by jury, and for the purpose of placing the judiciary under the control of those dominating Haiti.

That it is claimed that the de facto Government of Haiti is the United States acting through General Russell, who is supported by the military forces of the United States, and that Borno and said council of state act in accordance with directions given to them, that the liberties of the people are restricted, the freedom of the press destroyed, the independence of the courts interfered with, the voice of the people in the matter of levying taxes and expending them silenced, the right of franchise denied, and the people of Haiti subjected to a foreign control which attempts to screen its power behind Haitian agencies which have been set up and through which it operates.

That there will be no correction of these conditions and no restoration of civil government and constitutional authority in Haiti until the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate shall be elected by the people of Haiti, and shall, in turn, as an electoral body, elect the President of Haiti under the terms of the Haitian constitution;

That the suppression of civil authority by military power is contrary to the Constitution of the United States and those principles of political and civil liberty which are professed by the Government and the people of the United States:

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations is directed to consider the statements and claims herein set forth, and to make such investigations as are necessary to ascertain the reason for the seizure and continued occupation of Haiti by the United States, the reasons why the constitution of Haiti was superseded, the elections suppressed, the rights of the Haitian people interfered with, the guaranties of liberty, freedom of speech and of the press under said constitution impaired, and also to inquire into the present conditions in Haiti, and report their findings to the Senate, together with such measures as shall permit the Haitian people to set up and establish a government of their own choice and assume control of the same, and their own civil and political affairs, and which shall provide for the withdrawal from Haiti of all military forces of the United States, and all officers—military, naval, and otherwise—except only regularly accredited diplomatic representatives or consular agents as may be agreed upon by the Government of the United States and the Government of the Haitian Republic.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have carefully examined the record with a view to stating nothing in the foregoing resolution, as well as other resolutions which I have offered in the Senate, which was not accurate and subject to absolute verification; so that the resolution just read by the clerk recites what I believe to be many of the facts concerning the conquest of the Haitian people by the United States and the military government to which they have been subjected.

Since the introduction of the resolution just read the situation in Haiti has not improved. The same military control exists.

American marines are still there. Brigadier General Russell, the American high commissioner, is still the controlling factor in Haiti. Judges have been removed and replaced by persons amenable to the authority which dominates the country. The guaranties found in the Haitian constitution have been abolished. The right of assembly has been interfered with. Liberty of speech is denied. A military dictatorship rules the land, and all this has been under the authority of the United States. Thousands of Haitians have left their native land, and many others have been forced from lands which they and their fathers occupied for many years. American capital has acquired control over large areas of fertile lands. The situation is unsatisfactory and the political conditions provoke unrest and deep-seated resentment. Large loans have been negotiated, and American capitalists have acquired the bonds which have been issued. The situation indicates a purpose to keep Haiti under American control for an indefinite period. Believing, as I do, that the United States is wrong in its policy toward Haiti, and that its continued control of the Haitian Government will result in reactions, and produce repercussions harmful to both countries and inimical to the spirit of good will which should exist between the United States and all Latin America, I have for years demanded the withdrawal of American troops from Haitian territory and the liberation of the Haitian people from foreign military rule. I have urged that the Haitian people be permitted to hold a free and uncontrolled election for the purpose of choosing representatives to a constitutional convention, in order that there might be formed a constitution under which they might enjoy such political rights and such a form of government as to them seemed best. I urge now that our Government announce its purpose to withdraw its military forces and return to the Haitian people the control of their own Government and their own country. Upon the adoption of a constitution by the Haitian people, and the election of officers provided in such constitution, which is contemplated under the amendment which I have offered to the pending bill, there is ample time between now and July 1 for the calling of a constitutional convention and the holding of an election thereunder, so that soon after the date just mentioned the Haitian people would be in control of their own country.

However, Mr. President, in order that the transition from the military rule to a government of their own might not be too abrupt, I would be willing to support a measure that would continue American occupation until January 1, 1930. During this year, if it were understood that in January, 1930, American control would be terminated, all needed measures could be adopted, without haste, and all political and governmental authority transferred in an orderly way to the Haitian Government, so to be set up, pursuant to the organic law determined upon by the Haitian people.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I appreciate the fine motive that actuated the Senator from Utah in offering the resolution, but I am wondering what his idea would be in a state of circumstances such as this: Suppose that in the Western Hemisphere an usurper should obtain control of some government; suppose that under that usurper or dictator the liberty and the lives of the people were brought to such a point that the whole world would revolt at the treatment they were receiving at the hands of the man who had power; suppose people were being shot down without the right of trial; suppose that under that dictator murder and graft and corruption were rampant and everything that human liberty values was trodden under foot, what, in the Senator's opinion, would be the duty of the United States? Is there any extreme state of facts at all under which the Senator feels that our Government would be justified in taking possession of that country temporarily in order theoretically to reestablish the liberties of the people, or does he feel that, no matter what the circumstances and conditions might be in any country in the Western Hemisphere, it is the business of that country to deal with them and under no circumstances whatsoever should we take any part therein?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland has submitted an extremely hypothetical situation—indeed, one in which I find no parallel in those countries with which the United States has diplomatic relations. I can scarcely conceive of conditions so extreme as those embraced in the questions of the Senator. I grant that there have been in Haiti revolutions, followed by the rule of dictators, who have been overthrown by military leaders who sought executive authority. There have been in some Latin-American countries revolutionary governments, internal and factional strife, and not infrequently sanguinary conflicts. And in the Eastern Hemisphere there has been domestic strife, out of which military dictators have emerged who have imposed autocratic and oppressive rule upon the people. China has passed through a series of internal convulsions; military chieftains have warred against each other, and ruin and devastation have followed the efforts of ambitious and, too often, unprincipled men who sought to control a part or all of the great Chinese Empire.

I might add that in our own country we have had a sanguinary and fratricidal war which filled the land with sorrow. The Senator will recall that there was resentment at the suggestion of foreign interference in the conflict which threatened to divide this Republic. No country had the right to interfere in our domestic affairs, even though the purpose may have been to terminate a sanguinary struggle which stained the soil, North and South, with the blood of thousands of heroic and valiant men.

Quite recently the Government of Afghanistan was overthrown by a cruel military leader. We have not obtained full information, but sufficient data have been obtained to reveal that atrocities were committed upon innocent people. It is contended by many that the Bolshevik leaders, when they seized the Russian Government, perpetrated unparalleled cruelties, killed hundreds of thousands of inoffensive people, and drove from Russia nearly 2,000,000 of her inhabitants. It was not suggested in the instances alluded to that the United States owed a duty to intervene and to prevent bloodshed and unspeakable cruelties. The United States has not been made the guardian of the world and the protector of people in every country upon the Western Hemisphere. This Republic is not a policeman to guard America or to control the people of Latin America. I can conceive of circumstances under which the United States might be justified in interposing to prevent continued atrocities, the destruction of the lives of innocent men and women, the complete overthrow of law and order, and the plunging of the whole Nation and her people into the abyss of anarchy and ruin. But no conditions exist now upon the Western Hemisphere which would warrant our Government engaging in military operations to subject a people or country to its rule.

I think I should answer that even under the extreme situation mentioned by the Senator our country would not be justified in taking possession of a country exposed to such frightful calamities as those indicated in the Senator's question. There have been dictators and usurpers in Latin-American countries, but in time they have been overthrown and order established. The Latin-American Republics were born in the storm of revolution. Conditions attending their development have not always made for orderly progress and development. Conflicting forces and violent currents and cross currents have been developed as these nations have struggled to reach the uplands where peace and order and true progress are to be found. Progress comes slowly and the path of national development is stained with the blood of martyrs. Nations are not born in a day. They are subject to evolutionary laws and processes, and centuries may be required for them to emerge from darkness and cruel injustices and oppression and to develop a system under which reasonable freedom and happiness may be enjoyed.

If the United States should announce its purpose to interfere in the Western Hemisphere whenever there was disorder or cruelty or corruption or usurpation or tyranny, it would arouse fears and resentments, and, indeed, hatred in every part of this hemisphere. I repeat, God did not make this Nation the policeman and the guardian of the Western Hemisphere. The Monroe doctrine endows this Republic with no such authority and charges it with no such responsibility. This Nation can serve the peoples of this hemisphere and of the world far better by pursuing a just and righteous course, by practicing justice and mercy, by setting an example of toleration and of patience, by exhibiting a spirit of sincere friendship and brotherhood, by convincing the peoples of the world that our Nation is one of peace and universal brotherhood.

I might add to these generalities, however, that it is the duty of the United States to protect its citizens whether in Latin America or elsewhere and in affording such protection, conditions may sometimes arise calling for the exercise of military force.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator, and I appreciate the fact that his answers are really conclusive as to what he has in mind, but carrying my thought a step further, suppose that the conditions in Cuba had been what they were before we had war with Spain, I presume the Senator then would not have been in favor of taking the part of the Cuban people, who were admittedly oppressed. Am I correct in that?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I confess to some reluctance in attempting to answer the question just submitted by the Senator from Maryland. Perhaps I can, in part at least, reply to his question by briefly referring to some inconspicuous part which I played in that great adventure by the United States. I was a Member of the House of Representatives during the Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth Congresses. The situation in Cuba in 1897 was serious and indeed tragic. The revolution was in progress and Spain was exerting every effort to maintain her sovereignty and control over Cuba, and to defeat the revolutionary movement. There was a strong feeling in the United States that we should intervene or at least recognize the belligerency of the insurgents. In the House of Representatives a great majority of the Members were not satisfied with the course of the administration, and the Democrats were urging armed intervention. Many of the Republicans joined with them in opposing the negative policy of President McKinley. In order to learn definitely of the conditions in Cuba, and at the request of the leading Democrats of the House, I went to Cuba early in December, 1897. There I spent several weeks visiting various parts of the island. I met General Blanco and the Spanish authorities, and penetrated various Provinces, where I secretly met the revolutionary leaders and visited many insurgent units who were fighting to throw off the Spanish yoke.

Even if time permitted it would be impossible to describe the awful conditions which I there beheld. Many parts of the island had been devastated and hunger and wretchedness stalked through the land. The Spanish authorities, in continuing their military operations, drove into various cities and towns thousands of poor starving Cubans, burning their rude belongings and destroying their possessions in order to weaken the cause of the revolutionists. The reconcentrados, as these Cubans were called, were exposed to the inclemencies of the weather and were without food or shelter. Tens of thousands of them died from exposure and starvation, and everywhere there was sorrow and tragedy and lamentation.

Guerrilla warfare existed and contributed to the terrible situation which made of Cuba a charnel house. And the conditions of the Spanish troops was such as to excite pity even among those who were opposing them. Disease destroyed them by the thousands; lack of food and clothing and proper care and protection decimated the ranks of the Spanish Army so that their efforts to subjugate the revolting Province were unavailing. American property was destroyed and some American lives were lost. It seemed to me from my investigation that the strife called either for intervention by the United States or the recognition of the insurgent government to be followed by according it all rights belonging to belligerents. Upon my return to Washington I reported to my Democratic associates, and recommended that our Government intervene for the protection of American lives and property and to prevent the destruction, which seemed to me to be inevitable, of most of the inhabitants of that beautiful island.

The Democrats in the House, together with 80 or more Republicans, called Republican reconcentrados, joined in demanding that the administration intervene in Cuba. With the destruction of the Maine in the harbor at Habana, there was an irresistible demand throughout the country for armed intervention in Cuba. War with Spain soon followed, the results of which are familiar to the world. In the light of subsequent events there are many who doubt the wisdom of the course pursued by the United States, and there are some who assert that we were not justified in going to war with Spain because of the Cuban situation. It has been declared that we intervened because of humanitarian reasons. Doubtless the atrocities committed by General Weyler in Cuba, the starvation of hundreds of thousands of the Cuban people, the conviction that further strife would almost destroy the entire population, so aroused the American people that many of them believed it to be the duty of this Republic to intervene. It was not so much hostility to Spain as it was sympathy for the sufferings of the Cuban people that influenced the American people.

Mr. President, it is a serious thing for one nation to interfere in the internal affairs of another nation; and it is a responsibility which a nation should never assume (unless no other course is open) to engage in military operations against a friendly state upon the ground that the latter is governed by a dictator or that revolutionary factions are engaged in ruinous warfare. Much as we may deplore civil wars and factional strife, they have in many cases brought important results. Out of the fires of revolution have come nations which have carried forward the banner of progress and freedom. The record of Latin America has some dark pages, but progress has been made, and it is certain that the future will witness increased development, materially, morally, and spiritually, upon the part of all of our neighbors in this hemisphere. The attitude of this Nation should be one not of arrogance and pride but rather of humility. There should be a recognition of the fact that much has been given to this Nation and her people, and where much is given, much is required. America should be the evangelist of peace, the apostle of good-will, the exemplar of those national virtues which will crown it with moral and spiritual primacy.

Mr. President, I return to the consideration of the Haitian question. Powerful nations have not infrequently made war upon a weaker nation pleading in justification of their course factional strife and internal dissentions in those countries which they attacked. Ambitious monarchs have often discovered plausible reasons to conquer adjoining, as well as remote, states, and to impose upon them the will of the conquering nation. And history is replete with examples where, after intervention and conquests, reasons were discovered for the conquering nations to annex the territory invaded and to impose upon its inhabitants a yoke which to them was most hateful.

Because there was war in Nicaragua, or conflicts in Haiti, or internal strife in Santo Domingo, I do not admit that the United States was justified in intervening in either of these countries. The military intervention in Haiti occurred under an administration to which I was giving my support. I believed then, and I believe now, that my party committed a great wrong when it sent military forces to occupy Haiti and when it abrogated the Haitian constitution and set up a military rule.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. KING. I yield for a question.

Mr. ODDIE. As a question, then, I will ask the Senator not to call on the American people to take all that he is saying as fact.

Mr. KING. Whatever I say concerning the Haitian situation is supported by the record, and I stand upon my statements. Mr. President, whenever I have spoken upon the Haitian question the Senator from Nevada has felt constrained to interrupt me and to project himself into the discussion. He seems to be obsessed with the idea that he is the champion of the administration in its policy of retaining control in Haiti. I may add that the Senator's interruptions are irrelevant. I have no objection to him stating in his own time his views concerning Haiti. He may justify imperialism in any form that he pleases. If he seeks to advocate imperialism, either economic or military, it is his privilege and I will not quarrel with him; I will, however, determine my own course and voice my own views with respect to what I conceive to be the proper course to be pursued by the United States in dealing with other countries, and with helpless peoples. I have condemned the conquest of Haiti and criticized the policy of the present administration in Haitian affairs as I have criticized its course in dealing with Nicaragua.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question.

Mr. KING. For a question, yes.

Mr. ODDIE. I will ask the Senator if the policy of the present administration is not the same as the policy of the previous administration in 1915 in regard to our occupation of Haiti which I advocated as I am advocating the policy of the present administration in this matter?

Mr. KING. If the Senator thinks he is embarrassing me by instituting a comparison between the policies of the Democratic and Republican Parties in Haiti, I can assure him that he is mistaken. As I have stated, I criticized my own party for its military operations in Haiti, and have criticized the Republican Party for the course which it has pursued in that country. I have no partisanship in the consideration of international questions. I would more quickly condemn my own party than I would the Republican Party when I believed that it was pursuing an unjust course toward the peoples of another country. I have said I expect more of the Democratic Party than I do of the Republican Party, as the former would deserve greater condemnation for injustice and wrong to helpless people because Democrats know better. [Laughter in the galleries.] Democracy is founded upon the right of the people to govern themselves. It believes in the right of self-determination and recognizes the right of the people to prescribe their own form of government. When our forefathers revolted and sought their independence, a great Englishman commended their efforts and abjured them to continue the struggle so long as a foreign foe remained upon their shore.

Mr. President, I shall continue to oppose our policy in Haiti until American troops are withdrawn and the Haitian people are free to govern themselves in their own way and under such forms as they shall ordain. I condemned our military occupation of Santo Domingo and demanded that our military forces should be withdrawn from that land. It was a source of gratification to me when we finally ordered our armed forces to be withdrawn, and the Government of Santo Domingo to be restored to the people.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRUCE. Does not the Senator think that the results of our occupation of Santo Domingo were altogether beneficent?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is quite likely there will be differences of opinion as to whether our military rule in Santo Domingo resulted in benefits to the people of that country. I confess that it is somewhat difficult to measure the question of advantages and benefits and to predict with any degree of certainty what the results would have been, in any country which had been subjected to foreign control, if there had been no foreign intervention. No one can determine what would have developed in Santo Domingo had there been no American occupation. Too often it is assumed, when there has been foreign intervention, that any progress is the inevitable result of such occupation.

This view rests upon the assumption that the people are incapable of progress or of remedying temporary or chronic evils, and that foreign or extraneous forces must be introduced in order that the stream of life, nationally and otherwise, may be permitted to flow. Undoubtedly there have been military occupations that have resulted in some benefits; but to say that the benefits would not have been realized without such occupation is subject to challenge.

The investigation made by the committee of the Senate known as the McCormick committee of the military occupation of Santo Domingo presents a sordid and tragic picture. There were cruelties perpetrated that can not be defended and a record made which must be condemned. But even if benefits do result from military excursions by our Government into foreign states, I deny that it is the right or the duty of the United States to superimpose its authority upon such states. I believe that imperialism in any form is injurious to our own institutions and to our own Government. If we form a habit of sending our war vessels and marines to foreign countries, and give as a pretext for such course that we seek the welfare and felicity of other peoples, we are, in my opinion, developing a national point of view which will prove a menace to republican institutions and destructive of the democratic ideals which should guide the United States.

It is probable that our Government might give to some backward people a better form of government than that which they now enjoy; but who shall say that in the long run the people of such country were benefited or that the political and democratic spirit of the American people has not been weakened or polluted? I believe that we are undermining the foundations of this Republic and weakening the spirit of democracy—that subtle and, I might say, delicate spirit which must persist if our institutions are to survive—when we become imperialistic; when we hold peoples and countries for exploitation; when we, by military force, subject them to our will. It is a dangerous thing for democracy, resting upon the sublime principles announced in the Declaration of Independence, to seize and hold by force a country and its people, particularly when the latter represent ethnic differences and where they have different habits and customs and their cultural developments have been along other lines. The Filipinos and the Haitians have different traditions and different views and a different culture from that which we possess. Concede that we are superior morally, spiritually, and intellectually; that affords no justification for holding them under American rule and trying to force upon them our culture and traditions and form of government.

Mr. President, as I stated, nations make slow progress; the processes of evolutionary development, social and political, work almost imperceptibly; indeed, there are some who doubt that humanity is other than an inert mass and that it lacks the vitality and genius for progressive development. That view I do not regard as being sound. There are vital forces operating in the social and political organism, and growth and progress are manifest throughout the world. Progress which comes from within as the result of individual efforts—of local, vitalizing influences—will be more certain not to be arrested; its foundations will be more secure, and each successive development will energize the community, the state, and the people and prepare them for further and greater intellectual and moral growth.

The history of Great Britain is a most inspiring one, and demonstrates that social and political institutions under which liberty can be enjoyed are the product of centuries and come only through trials and tribulations and years of struggle and strife.

The Haitian people a little more than a hundred years ago were slaves. They drove their oppressors out and set up a government of their own. They made many mistakes; they stumbled and frequently fell, but they arose and moved forward; they established a government liberal in form; they produced many educated and cultured men and women. Their Government took its place in the great family of nations and entered into treaties with the leading nations of the world. This new and rather backward nation discharged its international obligations; it sought the improvement of its people. Ambitious men, some of whom were unprincipled and corrupt, seized the reins of authority and interrupted the progress of the nation and disturbed the peace of the people. Presidents were driven out of the land. Some of them were killed. Revolutions, though somewhat attenuated, occurred, but there was growth. The Government was republican in form. There were two legislative branches patterned after the House and Senate of this Republic. A judicial system was established that received the commendation of leading jurists in other countries. Haitian lawyers contributed to the work of The Hague and were selected to aid in the codification of international law. Writers and journalists, famed beyond the borders of Haiti, were the product of this new Republic. Without justification we landed thousands of soldiers and marines upon Haitian territory and waged a successful war, until all the strategic military points were in the possession of our forces, and the entire Government was under the control of the United States. For nearly 14 years we have governed Haiti.

I submit that our record during that period not only is not free from criticism but justifies severe condemnation. The abolition of their constitution was an unjustifiable act. To force upon them a fundamental law materially modifying their own constitution was an international offense. To destroy their legislature and set up a form of government which is employed to conceal the iron hand and military power of the United States calls for severe condemnation.

Mr. President, there is now no Haitian Government; there is no real freedom in Haiti under our military rule. The independence of the judiciary has been destroyed. The constitution which we forced upon them has recently been changed so that judges who had been appointed for life have been removed and their places taken by complacent persons who, it is supposed, will be amenable to the puppet government which we have set up. The court of cassation, which existed under the Haitian constitution, was composed of enlightened and eminent jurists, whose decisions were respected not only by people of Haiti but by all who were familiar with them. The judges of this court were independent and courageous; so it was determined to remove this bulwark which sought to protect the liberties of the people. Accordingly changes were made in the constitution, not legally, and pursuant to these changes a pliant judiciary has been established.

The guaranties of the old constitution, and even the one we first forced upon them, have been swept aside. There is no longer freedom of speech and of the press in Haiti. Journalists have been imprisoned; even now some are incarcerated because they do not conform their conduct to the will of General Russell, the head of the American marines, and the so-called high commissioner and the Borno régime. This high commissioner has never been confirmed by the Senate of the United States. He exercises military authority, presumably as brigadier general in charge of our marines. He is the real power behind the so-called Haitian Government, the policies of which are determined and executed by him. I should add, however, this qualification: That he is amenable to the Executive of the United States and doubtless receives instructions from the State Department. What his instructions are we do not know; the limit of his authority we are unable to determine. That Haiti and her 2,000,000 people are under his control and subject to his will, with the qualification just stated, there can be no doubt. No one could be the puppet President of Haiti against the will of General Russell and the United States. No important domestic or foreign policy of Haiti can be determined by the Haitian people. Their revenue laws are prescribed by the American occupation. Disguise it as we may, sugar coat it as we may try, the bald, naked fact stares us in the face that Haiti and her people are governed by the military forces of the United States.

In the New York World there have recently appeared two articles of some significance. I should add that there are a large number of Americans in Haiti occupying profitable positions. Of course, they are subject to the military control of General Russell. They enjoy lucrative positions and draw large salaries from the Haitian treasury. Doctor Millspaugh, who held the position of financial adviser and general receiver for Haiti, recently resigned because of clashes between him and General Russell, the American high commissioner, growing out of charges of extravagance upon the part of some of the officials in Haiti.

In the issue of the World dated February 8 of this year it states that Doctor Millspaugh resigned because of the actions of Brig. Gen. J. H. Russell and other officials and their alleged extravagance. It further states that "this information was confirmed by State Department officials in Washington." The World states:

Secretary Kellogg to-day refused to comment on whether he had asked Millspaugh to resign. Other State Department officials, while admitting friction between Doctor Millspaugh and authorities in Haiti, both American and native, declined to say whether his resignation was voluntary.

The article further states that—confirmation of the strained relations existing between Doctor Millspaugh and General Russell was obtained from officers of the Marine Corps.

The same article states that Mr. Marshall, a captain in the American forces during the World War, and for six years a clerk in the United States Consulate at Port au Prince, had resigned and left Haiti. The World quotes Captain Marshall as follows:

The department of public works had spent millions of dollars of Haitian money without an accounting to the people. When the Americans came, in 1915, they immediately abolished the Haitian Chamber of Accounts and promised to give the Haitians a more modern and efficient system of accounting. For 13 years that promise never has been fulfilled. Doctor Millspaugh requested the State Department to send expert accountants to Haiti. * * * On October 22, General Russell "peremptorily" urged the State Department to request Doctor Millspaugh to resign. * * * While this was pending, the unaudited accounts and vouchers of the department of public works were destroyed by a mysterious fire.

The article further quotes Captain Marshall as stating that there were matters on which the financial adviser disagreed with the American military officials governing Haiti, among them being a proposal to build an expensive concrete road between Port au Prince and Petionville—a road which Captain Marshall says "was desired by the American colony to make more accessible its country club at Petionville, and the proposed purchase of a $100,000 Coast Guard vessel." Captain Marshall stated that since the last Coast Guard ship, purchased by Haiti at a cost of $24,000, almost sank in getting to Port au Prince, and has been useless ever since. Doctor Millspaugh opposed the sending of good money after bad.

The article proceeds:

Captain Marshall was a football star and champion quarter-miler at Harvard. During the World War he served in the Fifteenth Infantry under Col. William Hayward, was wounded, and was cited for gallantry in action.

In the issue of the New York World, dated February 10, 1929, appears an article written by Captain Marshall. I ask that excerpts from this article be inserted in the RECORD at this point without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

* * * In consequence of the annual reports of Gen. John H. Russell, the American high commissioner to Haiti, and a press bureau, the American people have the notion that Haiti is prospering under the American occupation. Nothing could be further from the truth. I have spent six years in the United States Legation at Port au Prince and have been in a position to study minutely the trend of affairs in that unhappy Republic.

When I left there, a few days ago, misery prevailed everywhere. If the purpose of the occupation of Haiti by the armed forces of the United States was to crush the spirit of a free and sovereign people and reduce them to a dependent state, that purpose has been brilliantly achieved.

When I went to Haiti six years ago I found a cheerful, light-hearted people, hopeful of the future. They had confidence in the pledged word of the Americans to remit to them their native soil at the expiration of the treaty. They believed that the Americans had come into their midst with the high and disinterested purpose of helping them to rise to higher levels politically and economically.

To-day that confidence has gone and in its place have come bitter disappointment and despair. It seems that many Americans the Government has sent down to Haiti look with disfavor and contempt upon the cultural side of the Haitians. * * *

In exchange for cultural values requiring centuries to develop one is given certain economic values of a transitory nature, of even doubtful utility. The instances where American-made roads and bridges have been destroyed by the first violent rainstorm after their construction are not few; and such roads as have been constructed are totally inadequate for 13 years of American occupation. * * *

Not so many months ago a very important bridge over the treacherous stream of Limbe on the road from Port au Prince to Cape Haytien was swept away. Immediately the news was cabled to the American press that an unprecedented storm, causing the deaths of three or four hundred natives, had done the mischief. This was not true. The truth was that the American engineers had ignored advice of their collaborating Haitian engineers to construct this bridge at another place. A little later the bridge leading into Jacmel, costing some $45,000, was demolished by an ordinary storm for that locality. The Haitian papers raised a strong protest, and the responsible American engineer was relieved of his duties. These are only a few instances of maladministration on the part of the department of public works under the control of a chief American engineer. * * *

But we were talking about the effects of the occupation upon the social life of the Haitians. Not content with driving the upper classes from their pretty homes by offers of attractive rentals, which their high-salaried positions enabled them to make, the American invaders sought to take away from them for their own use the cornerstone of their religious and esthetic culture, the Church of Sacre Coeur at Targeau, the fashionable quarter of Port au Prince.

Although their hearts were bleeding, the coup de grâce was given when a few days before the arrival of Colonel Lindbergh at Port-au-Prince an American officer with a squad of gendarmes descended upon "le Cercle Belleue," the leading club of that city, and sealed it under orders of the Government. The charge was that its members indulged in political discussions, which was not true, and, if true, they so engaged themselves with as much decorum as the members of the Union Club of New York City. * * *

From that moment down to the present time Haitian society has ceased to exist. The other clubs, a half dozen or more, have ceased to function out of sympathy with the "Cercle Belloue," and the time-honored weekly "at homes" of the Haitian society are a thing of the past. People do not even visit one another.

The Americans at Port au Prince had always looked with an envious eye upon the spacious dance hall and splendid appointments of this club, and a few days after its closing a marine corporal approached the president of this club, Mr. George Leger, with an offer for its rental to the American colony. Of course, the offer was curtly refused, and the club still remains closed after an existence of 30 years.

Haitian society is mourning, and this mourning has descended to the lowest stratum of the population, the peasants; for even here the old African tambourine dances, accompanied by those musically weird, enchanting, crooning spiritual outgivings of a primitive people, are abolished by American-made laws.

When the English wiped out the quaint little French colony of Acadia they did it more mercifully, because they did it more brusquely. In Haiti the dying tortures are slowly and methodically applied. Yet there are statesmen at Washington who insist that the fundamental intent of the American occupation is to secure the confidence of the Haitian people. I know that that was the hope of ex-Secretary of State Hughes and the late Senator McCormick, but the brigadiers in Haiti scoff at civilian counsel.

The economic side of this picture is darker still. Le Temps, a daily at Port-au-Prince, published on December 10, 1928, the seventeenth of a series of articles reviewing the economic condition of the Haitian people. We translate the following comment:

"Misery in the folded arms of the merchant before his empty money chest! Misery of the discouraged bourgeoise, of the helpless small employee! Misery in the glazed eyes of the scantily clad girls of the proletariat in the evenings on the street corners of the squalid outskirts of the city! Misery of the elite and of the masses! Misery of a whole people!"

The editor who wrote this article is now in jail for violation of the law against the press. He is the twenty-seventh newspaper man to be thrown in prison during my residence at Port au Prince. But this is aside from the story. After a carefully studied exposition of the situation, this writer sets forth the following causes for the prevailing economic atrophy (translation):

First. The stationary state of production in relation to the increasing population.

Second. Exorbitant duties.

Third. Investment of the national funds abroad.

Fourth. Our budget is devoured by the fat-salaried American employee, and construction of all kinds is out of proportion to cost.

Fifth. Famine salaries of the public employees.

Sixth. Fixing of the gourde (the national money) at the ratio of 5 to $1.

Seventh. The unskillful application of the tax upon alcohol and tobacco.

Eighth. The systematic boycotting of Haitians from employments of all kinds; whence the large number of unemployed.

Ninth. Too great consumption of luxuries.

Tenth. Drainage of Haitian money by foreign commercial enterprises.

Eleventh. The desertion of the plantations by the peasants.

The exorbitant duties inserted in the last customs law is one of the chief causes of this business stagnation. * * *

In the meantime the political pot was boiling in Haiti. Not that it had ever ceased to boil, but eventful things were coming to pass. Mr. Borno had, in some kind of a fashion, been twice "elected" President of Haiti. He wanted a third term, but the State Department thought that would be "undemocratic," so Mr. Borno, last May, sent a message to the council of State by which it was generally believed he had renounced a third term. He stated that when, in 1920, his Government finished its mandate, its successors, etc.; the use of the pronoun "its" did not escape the observation of some of the lawyers at Port au Prince.

What could Washington do if Borno had himself reelected by a legislature chosen apparently in a legal manner? To make assurance doubly sure the President has had passed two laws uniquely designed to the consummation of his plans. One is the law against meetings, and the other is a law against the press. Opposing candidates can not hire a hall and make a public campaign, and protesting editors are forbidden to criticize candidates of the Government.

This is what is passing in Haiti, supported by martial law and the bayonets of American marines.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that an editorial appearing in the New York World under date of February 10, 1929, be inserted at this point in my remarks without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AN INCIDENT OF EMPIRE

Everyone knows that the "Haitian Republic" is really an American protectorate; that President Louis Borno is a pawn in American hands, and that Haitian authority is concentrated in a group of American "treaty officers." They include our high commissioner, Brig. Gen. John H. Russell; our financial adviser and receiver general, Dr. A. C. Millspaugh; and our chief of gendarmerie, Maj. Gen. Frank M. Evans. Doctor Millspaugh has now resigned. He is silent as to the reasons. But the World publishes a statement by N. B. Marshall, former Harvard student, Army captain, and lawyer, and for six years ended January 1 employed in our Port au Prince Consulate, who returned on Doctor Millspaugh's ship. He declares that General Russell urged the State Department to call for Doctor Millspaugh's resignation because the latter attacked our official extravagance:

"The department of public works has spent millions of dollars of Haitian money without an accounting to the people. When the Americans came in 1915 they immediately abolished the Haitian Chamber of Accounts and promised to give the Haitians a more modern and efficient system of accounting. For 13 years that promise never has been fulfilled. Doctor Millspaugh requested the State Department to send expert accountants to Haiti."

These are grave accusations. They include assertions that a mysterious fire recently burned unaudited accounts and vouchers and that Haitian road making has consulted American convenience rather than Haitian needs. There are two special reasons why such accusations should be cleared up as quickly as possible. One is that they are apparently believed by a considerable part of the Haitian public and press. The other is that it has unquestionably been part of American policy in Haiti to provide large public improvements in a minimum of time and with a minimum of Haitian opportunity for discussion or control.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, authentic information which I am receiving from Haiti confirms the statements made by Captain Marshall. Quite recently three journalists—MM. Jacques Roumain, Elie Guerin, and Georges Petit—were incarcerated because they published articles not approved by the military dictatorship in Haiti. May I say that when the Pan American conference was held in Habana two of the leading jurists of the Western Hemisphere embarked from Haiti to participate in the conference. They, at the request of those in control of Haiti, were arrested, prevented from landing, and returned to Haiti. The three journalists just mentioned while imprisoned were treated with harshness, their principal jailer being an American officer. In order to prevent criticism of the autocratic régime governing Haiti, a so-called law was recently promulgated which makes it an offense for any person outside of Haiti to criticize the so-called President of Haiti or officials therein. This measure had the approval of the high commissioner, and it was designed, it is believed, to prevent Americans from visiting Haiti who had criticized the military government of Haiti. Already there are evidences that the military régime is preparing to have Mr. Borno, the puppet President of Haiti, chosen for the third time. A Haitian of high character and ability declares that—

If the occupation succeeds in this scheme this puppet will exercise for six years longer the authority given him. This will mean that Borno will enjoy 14 years of power with the help of American bayonets. This so-called reelection would be a violation of the constitution forced upon Haiti. It is stated in the third paragraph of article 72 of the constitution of 1918 that the reelected President can not be chosen a third time before an interval of four years.

However, any constitution forced upon the people is modified to suit the will of the military authorities. The same Haitian whom I have just quoted states:

With the present electoral law twice modified by Mr. Borno there is no possibility of free election. If there is any election decreed and that law is not abrogated or amended, the voting will be a cynical mockery of universal suffrage.

Mr. President, I have here many letters and communications received from Haitians as well as from Americans, showing the deplorable and unsatisfactory conditions in Haiti. I shall not take the time of the Senate to examine them. I wish, however, to call attention to a book entitled "Occupied Haiti," prepared by a committee of American citizens who recently visited Haiti and made a searching investigation into the political, economic, and social conditions there existing. The committee consisted of Dr. Paul H. Douglass, professor of industrial relations at the University of Chicago; Miss Emily Greene Balch, of Wellesley, Mass.—Miss Balch is a distinguished educator and lecturer—Charlotte Atwood, a graduate of Wellesley and a teacher of English in Washington; Zonia Baber, of Chicago, former professor of geography in the University of Chicago School of Education; Mrs. Addie Hunton, head of the International Council of Women of the Darker Races; and Mrs. J. Harold Watson, representing the Fellowship of Reconciliation.

In the report which they made and which, as stated, is published under the title of "Occupied Haiti," they state that they found—

The problem in Haiti to consist not in individual instances of misused power but in the fundamental fact of the armed occupation of the country.

On page 1 of the volume this appears:

Yet this country (Haiti), the independent sovereignty of which is solemnly recognized by the United States, as well as by all other countries, and which is a full member of the League of Nations, has been occupied by the United States by force of arms, kept down by force of arms, and administered for 11 years at a very considerable cost to ourselves as taxpayers and a much heavier cost, both in the world at large and more especially in Latin America, to our standing as a respecter of the liberties of others. The most disconcerting aspect of the whole affair is that it is possible to do what has been done in Haiti, directly contrary as it is to all our principles and professions, without any popular demand for such action, without its ever being proposed or debated beforehand, and with so little realization in the United States that it has been done.

Mr. President, I desire to call attention briefly to a few additional statements contained in this report. Chapter 2 is devoted to the political history of the occupation, and shows the unjustifiable course pursued by the United States in seizing Haiti. It shows that efforts were made by the United States to force a treaty upon the Haitians under which the sovereignty of the Haitian Government would be destroyed and the Haitian people made subject to the control of the United States.

On page 21 the statement is made that Admiral Caperton, who had been sent there by the United States with war vessels, seized the customhouses and collected the revenues; that to force ratification of an unjust treaty he brought pressure upon the Haitian Government and carried out instructions which he received from Washington to the effect that if the treaty were not ratified "the United States would retain control in Haiti until the desired end was accomplished, and that it would forthwith proceed to the complete pacification of Haiti."

Of course, this was a threat to use military force, and at that time large detachments of marines were in Haiti and American warships were in Haitian ports.

On page 23 the report states that—

* * * As the treaty was forced through under duress, it is difficult to maintain that Haiti is morally bound by its provisions. * * *

On page 24 the statement is made that—

* * * the National Assembly was dissolved by the American officers, and that the American occupation proceeded a second time to dissolve a Haitian Congress, and Maj. Smedley D. Butler, United States Marine Corps, who, as head of the gendarmerie, had also the Haitian rank and pay of a major general, was sent with other officers to accomplish the act. These officers carried out their instructions fully armed. The doors of the National Assembly were then locked in order to prevent the assembly from entering the chambers again, and since then no Haitian Congress has been allowed to convene.

The report states that—

* * * under the American occupation the Government of Haiti is made into a self-perpetuating oligarchy.

On page 32 this statement appears:

It is obvious that as a matter of fact the real power in Haiti is exercised not by the Haitian officials but by the American occupation. * * * The United States also effectually controls all legislation in this "sovereign and independent" State. Proposed laws must be submitted to the American Legation and to the American high commissioner before they can be enacted by the Council of State, now acting in lieu of an elected national assembly. The occupation is thus essentially supreme. Up until 1922 the ranking officer of the United States marines in Haiti was also the representative of the American Government, and although the lines of authority between the American commander and the American minister to Haiti were not always clear, the military character of the occupation was quite evident.

The report stated (p. 33):

Major General Russell was appointed by the President as high commissioner and since then no minister to the country has been appointed. General Russell is therefore at once the representative of the State Department and of the Navy, and even though he makes the legation his headquarters and appears primarily as a civilian, our occupation is nevertheless a thinly disguised military control. Thus the American powers over Haiti are in reality almost complete. American approval is needed for the enactment of laws, the revenues of the country are collected under the supervision of Americans, and the budget is drawn up by the American financial adviser. The financial adviser scrutinizes all vouchers and withholds payments that he believes to be not in conformity with the principles of the budget or with efficient administration. The control over the gendarmerie is in American hands, as are also the services of health and public works and agriculture.

The report states that American officers are in many cases officers of the Marine Corps and in receipt of their regular salaries from the United States, who receive additional salaries out of the Haitian treasury.

Reference is made in the book from which I am reading to a report of Gen. George Barnett—

For the period ending June 30, 1920, which stated that 2,250 Haitians had been killed by American military forces, but the Haitians believed the real number to be much greater. The report of the Secretary of the Navy for 1920 gives the Haitian killed in 1919 alone as 1,861.

Senators who are interested in the tragic record of occupation should read some of the testimony given before the Senate committee, of which Senator McCormick was chairman.

Reference is made in the report to the imprisonment of a large number of journalists and editors because of their criticism of the American occupation. The committee stated their conclusions and recommendations in chapter 15 of "Occupied Haiti," at page 149, as follows:

Our relations with Latin America are poisoned by the feelings roused by several instances of this imperialistic tendency on the part of the United States and of all these instances our actions in Haiti are perhaps the most flagrant. * * * The authors of this report believe that the occupation should be ended for the sake of Haiti, for the sake of the United States, and especially for the sake of good relations among all American Republics, and finally because it is in itself an unjustified use of power.

Reference is made to a resolution which I offered in April, 1926, the resolving part reading as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations is directed to consider the statements and claims herein set forth and report to the Senate measures which shall permit the Haitian people to set up and establish a government of their own choice, and assume control of their own government and their own civil and political affairs, and which shall provide for the withdrawal from Haiti of all military forces of the United States and all officers—military, naval, and otherwise—except only regularly accredited diplomatic representatives or consular agents as may be agreed upon by the Government of the United States and the Government of the Haitian Republic.

The committee recommend that—

The treaty officials should be withdrawn and actual self-government restored as soon as affairs can be got into such shape as to make it practicable to evacuate the country. (153.)

It is recommended that "elections be held to choose senators and deputies as well as other officials."

An excuse has been made for our occupation of Haiti, that there were obligations due to American capitalists. I have examined into this question and assert that there is no merit in such contention. Doctor Douglas in the report states:

The probable reasons for such a demand are not very clear, since practically all of the external debt was held in France, while the Haitians had, moreover, met virtually all of the interest payments and were only in default for some of the amortization payments.

France at that time, as Senators know, was at war. Haiti had met her obligations, most of which were due to France, and France was making no demands whatever upon Haiti. Doctor Douglas calls attention to the fact that the National City Bank of New York had insinuated itself into Haiti prior to American occupation and obtained control, in part at least, of the national bank of issue. I quote from Doctor Douglas:

The bank had been apparently anxious for some time to secure American control over the Haitian customs, since a message from the United States minister in Haiti to our State Department in July, 1914, stated that the bank was planning to refuse to renew the budgetary convention in order that the Haitian Government should be rendered financially helpless and be compelled to ask for American assistance.

This observation by Doctor Douglas is worthy of note:

It is just this condition that the bank desires, for it is the belief of the bank that the Government when confronted by such a crisis would be forced to ask the assistance of the United States in adjusting its financial tangle and that American supervision of the customs would result.

Mr. President, there are many who believe that there was a conspiracy by certain American capitalists to gain control of the fiscal affairs of Haiti and to bring about military occupation by the United States. Since we have been in control we have provided for the issuance of $40,000,000 of bonds, though when we took possession of Haiti her bonded indebtedness was less than $16,000,000. Under American control the indebtedness of the Government has greatly increased. It is believed by many that this large bonded indebtedness commits the United States to remain in control of Haiti for an indefinite period and certainly until 1956, the date of the maturity of the bonds.

The Haitians see in these bond issues, and the military control of their country, and the acquisition of Haitian lands by American capitalists, a purpose to continue for an indefinite period the control of their country by a foreign power.

Mr. President, I desire to read from a pamphlet entitled "The Seizure of Haiti by the United States," issued in April, 1922, by the Foreign Policy Association of New York, indorsed and distributed by the National Popular Government League of Washington. It is signed by 24 lawyers of high standing, among them Prof. Zechariah Chafee, jr., of Harvard University; Prof. Felix Frankfurter, of Harvard University; George Kirchwey, of New York; and Moorfield Storey, of Boston. The "conclusions" of these eminent lawyers are as follows:

First. The presence of our military forces in Haiti after the disturbances of July 27–28, 1915, had quieted down, was violative of well-recognized American principles.

Second. The seizure and withholding by our forces in 1915 of Haitian national funds was a violation of international law, and of the repeated professions by responsible American Government officials of our position and attitude toward Latin-American Republics and weaker governments.

Third. The imposition and enforcement of martial law without a declaration of war by our Congress and the conduct of offensive operations in Haiti by Admiral Caperton prior to the acceptance of the treaty by Haiti were equally clear violations of international law and of our own Constitution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah will suspend while the clerk reads an announcement by the Chair.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore entered into will be in force and no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the pending bill or any amendment thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah will proceed.

Mr. KING. I continue reading:

Fourth. The methods employed by the United States in Haiti to force acceptance and ratification of the treaty framed by the United States—namely, the direct use of military, financial, and political pressure, violate every canon of fair and equal dealing between independent and sovereign nations and of American professions of international good faith.

Fifth. The maintenance in Haiti of any United States military force or of the control exercised by treaty officials under cover of the treaty of September, 1915, amounts to a conscious and intentional participation in the wrong of the original aggression and coercion.

Sixth. The present native government of Haiti, chosen in 1915, unsupported by any elected representative since 1917, being now at the end of its term of office, no negotiations should take place with such government which involve the future of Haiti or which can in any material respect affect its future.

Seventh. The functions of a department of colonies and dependencies assumed by the Navy Department and conferred on it by mere Executive action are unauthorized by Congress and by other sanction of law, and should be condemned as essentially illegal and as a usurpation of power

Eighth. We declare, without qualification, that the honor and good name of the United States, the preservation of the sovereignty and the cherished liberty of Haiti and her right to fair dealings on the part of the United States, as well as the possibility of assuring the continuance in the future of honorable and amicable relations between our country and Latin America, based on trust and confidence, all require:

(a) The immediate abrogation by the United States of the treaty of 1915, unconditionally and without qualification.

(b) The holding of elections of representatives to the legislative bodies of Haiti and of a President by the free will of the people at an early day.

(c) The negotiation of a new treaty with a new Haitian administration for friendly cooperation between the United States and Haiti upon such terms as shall be mutually satisfactory to both countries and by the methods that obtain between free and independent sovereign states.

Frederick Bausman, Seattle; Alfred Bettman, Cincinnati; William H. Brynes, New Orleans; Charles C. Burlingham, New York; Zechariah Chafee, jr., Cambridge; Michael Francis Doyle, Philadelphia; Walter L. Flory, Cleveland; Raymond B. Fosdick, New York; Felix Frankfurter, Cambridge; Herbert J. Friedman, Chicago; John P. Grace, Charleston, S. C.; Richard W. Hale, Boston; Frederick A. Henry, Cleveland; Jerome S. Hess, New York; William H. Holly, Chicago; Charles F. Howland, New York; Francis Fisher Kane, Philadelphia; George W. Kirchwey, New York; Louis Marshall, New York; Adelbert Moot, Buffalo; Jackson H. Ralston, Washington, D. C.; Nelson S. Spencer, New York; Moorfield Storey, Boston; Tyrrell Williams, St. Louis.

Mr. President, I commend to the Senate and to the American people the solemn declarations of these eminent legal authorities. Their views should have weight in this body as well as with the American people. Let us retrace our steps; let us return to the Haitian people the country which is theirs. Let us withdraw our military forces and leave the Haitian people in undisputed control of their own Government.

Mr. President, when the vote shall be taken later I sincerely hope that my amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will lie on the table. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Public works, Bureau of Yards and Docks," on page 33, after line 2, to insert:

Navy yard, Puget Sound, Wash.: Extension of Dry Dock No. 2 (limit of cost, $700,000), $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Aeronautics, aviation, Navy," on page 35, line 14, after the word "equipment," to strike out "$12,170,000" and insert "$12,310,000"; in line 16, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$160,000" and insert "$300,000"; and on page 36, line 11, after the words "in all," to strike out "$31,360,000" and insert "$31,500,000," so as to read:

For aviation, as follows: For navigational, photographic, aerological, radio, and miscellaneous equipment, including repairs thereto, for use with aircraft built or building on June 30, 1929, $1,155,000; for maintenance, repair, and operation of aircraft factory, air stations, fleet, and all other aviation activities, testing laboratories, for overhauling of planes, and for the purchase for aviation purposes only of special clothing, wearing apparel, and special equipment, $12,310,000, including $230,000 for the equipment of vessels with catapults and including not to exceed $300,000 for the procurement of helium, of which sum such amounts as may be required may be transferred in advance to the Bureau of Mines; for continuing experiments and development work on all types of aircraft, including the payment of part time or intermittent employment in the District of Columbia or elsewhere of such scientists and technicists as may be contracted for by the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, at a rate of pay not exceeding $20 per diem for any person so employed, $2,000,000; for drafting, clerical, inspection, and messenger service, $820,000; for new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment, including not to exceed $774,000 for the Naval Reserve, $14,215,000, of which amount not to exceed $10,000,000 shall be available for the payment of obligations incurred under the contract authorization for these purposes carried in the navy appropriation act for the fiscal year 1929, approved May 21, 1928 (45 Stat. 637); toward the construction of one of the rigid airships as provided in the act authorizing construction of aircraft, etc., approved June 24, 1926 (U. S. C., Supp. I, p. 223, sec. 749a), $1,000,000; in all, $31,500,000, of which $248,000 shall be available immediately; and the money herein specifically appropriated for "aviation" shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing law and shall constitute one fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under "Increase of the Navy," on page 45, line 7, after the word "authorized," to strike out "$22,750,000" and insert "$28,550,000, of which $500,000 shall be available toward the construction of the second five light cruisers, the construction of which is authorized by the act approved February 13, 1929, to be undertaken during the fiscal year 1930," so as to make the sentence read:

Construction and machinery: On account of hulls and outfits of vessels and machinery of vessels heretofore authorized, $28,550,000, of which $500,000 shall be available toward the construction of the second five light cruisers, the construction of which is authorized by the act approved February 13, 1929, to be undertaken during the fiscal year 1930, and, in addition, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make transfers during the fiscal year 1930 from the naval supply account fund to this appropriation of sums aggregating $2,000,000, and the total sum hereby made available shall remain available until expended.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill for some information with respect to the amendment proposed by the committee on page 45, line 7. What is contemplated will be done with the $500,000 for the construction of the second five light cruisers?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, that $500,000 is simply a small amount that is taken out of the amount that was included in the estimates sent up by the Budget to us and is for the purpose of starting the second lot of cruisers, which under the terms of the cruiser law are to be started before July 1, 1930. It can be used for any purpose to start those cruisers.

Mr. BLAINE. I have not yet the information I am seeking. The Senator speaks of starting the second lot of five light cruisers. What does he mean by starting them? What does he propose to do with the $500,000? On what is it going to be expended? He can not build five cruisers for $500,000.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is quite right about that. I will say to the Senator that if he will turn to page 46 of the bill, line 4, he will find the words "of which $200,000 shall be immediately available toward the construction of the first five light cruisers, the construction of which is authorized by the act approved February 13, 1929, to be undertaken during the fiscal year 1929." This $200,000 is to be used for gun forgings of guns that will be used on the first lot of five light cruisers, and that in itself, according to the ruling of the Judge Advocate General of the department, and I think he is correct in his ruling, is sufficient to be considered as starting the first lot of five cruisers. In the same way we have provided a small amount for the beginning of the second lot of cruisers.

Mr. BLAINE. That is $500,000?

Mr. HALE. Yes; during the calendar year 1930.

Mr. BLAINE. What does the Senator propose to spend the $500,000 for? I know it is on the five cruisers, but on what items?

Mr. HALE. I have no information as to just what it will be used for. It will be used either for starting more gun forgings for the second lot of cruisers or for anything that has to do with the ships. It is an appropriation which enables us to start the ships under the terms of the cruiser bill in 1930 as provided by the law.

Mr. BLAINE. As I understand it, of the first five cruisers three will be constructed in our own navy yards.

Mr. HALE. That is true, under the provisions of the cruiser law.

Mr. BLAINE. And of the second five, two will be constructed in our own navy yards and three under contract. That is the way it works out?

Mr. HALE. That is true. That is the way it will work out. In any event we know that every other cruiser will be constructed in a Government yard.

Mr. BLAINE. It is admitted, I assume, that there is no real actual work of any consequence that can be begun upon the first five cruisers before the 1st of July?

Mr. HALE. No great amount will be begun; no, but the plans will be prepared and a certain amount will be expended on gun forgings which are to be used on the ships.

Mr. BLAINE. Then after the expenditure of that certain amount the Government will in effect be obligated to construct those cruisers and Congress will be obligated to make the necessary appropriations in the future. I assume that is also true with respect to the second five cruisers?

Mr. HALE. That is true with respect to the $500,000 for the second lot of cruisers. It simply follows out the provisions of the cruiser law, in the opinion of the committee.

Mr. BLAINE. Is it not an unwise and uneconomic policy to actually appropriate specific funds not only for the first five cruisers but also the second five cruisers in this haphazard piecemeal way?

Mr. HALE. I do not think it is haphazard or piecemeal.

Mr. BLAINE. I assume that the President and the Budget Bureau had that very thing in mind when they recommended that we enter upon this naval program beginning July 1, 1929. It would seem to me that that would be the sensible thing to do in working out the financial policy for the next administration. These ships are not going to be built in a year. It will probably take nearly three years to complete a ship. Those which are constructed under contract by private parties I assume can be constructed much more cheaply if the private parties know exactly the extent of the contracts into which they might enter instead of entering into piecemeal contracts.

Is it not a better plan to take five of the cruisers and enter upon the construction of those five cruisers, spreading out over the three years the amount that the five cruisers may cost, something like $85,000,000, and then in another year begin the program on the second five cruisers and spread that cost over a 3-year period, and likewise with the third set of cruisers. If we shall find that the navy yards are unable to go that fast then withhold the appropriations until the Government is certain that it can pursue a construction program that is continuous, that will not be interrupted, that will not be piecemeal and haphazard.

It seems to me that the President had that in mind when he made the recommendation; it seems to me that the Budget Bureau had that in mind when it made the recommendation. It would seem to me that if the 10 cruisers for which appropriations are proposed by this bill are begun, then it will become necessary to come to Congress for future appropriations. That which may be expended from time to time is going to be a considerable investment, and that investment ought to be safeguarded without any long intermission between the actual work upon the cruisers.

It would seem to me that if that program shall be adopted, then we are going to bring upon the next administration a financial situation which may have a decidedly dangerous effect upon the public finances; in other words, the amount of money that has been appropriated by this Congress and that will be appropriated and the amount for which we are obligating the Government and obligating Congress to make future appropriations for may, in all probability, bring on a financial crisis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Wisconsin on the amendment has expired. He now has 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. I will now speak on the bill. I can conceive that there is great difficulty now in maintaining a balanced budget. If we are to accept the President's declarations as correct—and I presume they are correct, as he has obtained his information from the Budget Bureau, which, no doubt, is able to make an approximately accurate estimate—the Government of the United States financially is about to go on the rocks; and it is now proposed to drive that Government by swifter methods against the very dangers that have been pointed out by the President.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin does not really think that the Government of the United States is going on the rocks, does he?

Mr. BLAINE. I am speaking now about balancing the Budget. I want to say in these times, if it becomes necessary for the Government of the United States to issue bonds to pay current expenditures, that it will be very nearly upon the rocks. The Senator from Maine understands that I do not suggest that the Government will become insolvent, but the financial interests of the country will feel the shock the very moment the Federal Government may be required to issue bonds or temporary certificates of indebtedness in order to take care of these increased appropriations.

Looking into the future, I suggest, Mr. President, that we shall meet the full demands of the bill authorizing the 15 cruisers if we go about it in a sensible way and prepare for five cruisers at a time, outline a financial program here of three years for the building of those five cruisers, accept the advice of the President of the United States and of the Budget Bureau, especially with respect to the financial condition of the Public Treasury, and thereby permit other necessary and probable undertakings of the next administration which will be initiated during the approaching special session.

I want to point to the fact, Mr. President, and call the attention of the chairman of the committee to it, that, as I understand, the special session which is about to be called will consider two problems: One, the tariff. That goes to the very basis of the financial affairs of our Government. We can not predict what may be done on the tariff bill. The other proposition is one concerning farm relief and, as I understand the program to be, it involves the appropriation of five hundred or six hundred million dollars for the creation of a revolving fund. I do not know exactly what the plan is, but the financial scheme that is designed by the proponents of farm relief for the special session is such as will place a tremendous drain upon the Treasury of the United States. If we obligate the Government and its finances and its Treasury to these large expenditures for naval construction, then, Mr. President, the excuse will be offered not only upon the floor of this House but as well in both Houses of Congress, that the Treasury will not be able to stand the shock of appropriating the necessary funds that may be required to redeem the pledges made by the majority party as well as by the minority party in this country.

So I think we ought to go slow in this matter. I am willing to carry out the program which has been authorized, but I am willing to carry it out only in a sensible, logical way, so that the greatest economies will flow to the Government as well as the greatest efficiency be insured in the building of the cruisers, bearing in mind the very probable result that if we do carry out the 5-cruiser program beginning July 1 we will be able to construct those cruisers much more cheaply than if we dash into a 10-cruiser program now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment on page 45, beginning in line 7.

STANDARD OIL CO. OF INDIANA

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in the contest that is going on between John D. Rockefeller, jr., and Mr. Stewart, of Standard Oil fame, Mr. Stewart recently issued an address to the stockholders of the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana in which he made statements that, according to my recollection of the facts, were not true. Recently, within the last day or two, I had a talk with ex-Senator Pomerene, one of the attorneys representing the Government in the oil scandal cases. He related to me certain facts that absolutely contradicted the statements which Mr. Stewart had sent out to the stockholders for the purpose of securing their votes.

Just a few moments ago there was handed to me a copy of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of February 19. I notice in that newspaper an interview with ex-Senator Pomerene and Mr. Roberts, the two attorneys who represented the Government, and who still represent the Government, in the oil cases. Since the interview bears out the statement made to me by former Senator Pomerene, I think I ought to read it to the Senate as an interesting chapter in the oil investigation. The interview was written by Paul Y. Anderson, a staff correspondent of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. It is dated Washington, February 19, and reads as follows:

> Owen J. Roberts and Atlee Pomerene, who conducted the prosecutions for the Government in the famous oil trials, declared here to-day that Robert W. Stewart, head of the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, deliberately deceived them about his knowledge of the Liberty bonds distributed by the Continental Trading Co., and that he withheld all information that would have assisted the Government in the prosecution of Harry F. Sinclair.
>
> Pomerene added that Stewart's testimony before the grand jury investigating the Sinclair case was such that Government counsel would have sought his indictment on a perjury charge if the statute of limitations had not expired before they learned the truth.
>
> Not only did Stewart deceive them about his knowledge of who got the Continental bonds, Roberts and Pomerene said, but he avoided testifying in the Government's civil suit to recover the Teapot Dome naval oil reserve, subsequently giving the excuse that he "wasn't looking for trouble."
>
> PROFITS FROM DUMMY CONCERN
>
> As has often been told, the Continental was a dummy corporation secretly organized to buy a large quantity of oil from A. E. Humphreys, a Texas operator. It paid Humphreys $1.50 for oil, then sold it at $1.75 a barrel to companies controlled by Stewart, Sinclair, and James E. O'Neil. All the profit of more than $3,000,000 thus realized was invested in Liberty bonds and divided between Stewart, Sinclair, O'Neil, * and Harry M. Blackmer. Sinclair afterwards used a part of his share in bribing Secretary Fall for the Teapot Dome lease, an act which ultimately led to the exposure of the whole transaction.

Stewart's participation in the profits had not been disclosed when he appeared last year before a Senate investigating committee.

I wish the Senate would remember that statement. Up to the time that Stewart appeared before the Senate investigating committee his activity and his part in this disreputable transaction had not been disclosed.

When asked if he knew who got the bonds, he declined to answer.

This was before the Senate committee.

He based his refusal on the ground that he had been summoned as a witness for the Government in the criminal trial of Sinclair, then pending, had testified before the grand jury, and had been interrogated by Government counsel. He said he considered it his duty "as a citizen" to reserve his information for the court instead of giving it to the committee.

Later on Mr. Anderson quotes from his testimony before the committee.

A similar defense of his refusal to testify—on the ground that he expected to testify in the Sinclair trial—also was contained in a statement recently issued by Stewart to the stockholders of the Standard of Indiana, in the course of his fight with John D. Rockefeller, jr., over control of that company.

SAYS STEWART WITHHELD FACTS

Roberts and Pomerene, who are here to argue a case before the Supreme Court, to-day had their attention called to Stewart's statements. They were asked whether Stewart, prior to the Sinclair trial, had divulged to them his knowledge of the Continental bond transaction.

"He did not," was Roberts's emphatic reply. "On the contrary, he told us he didn't know anything about it. We asked him who was interested in the Continental, and he said he didn't know. We asked him who got the bonds, and he said he didn't know, and didn't want to know. All we got out of him was a refusal to give us any information that would be of any help to us in preparing the case against Sinclair. His pretense before the Senate committee that he had given us the facts about the matter was a rank subterfuge."

"It was worse than that," declared Pomerene. "He deliberately did everything in his power to shield Sinclair. For Stewart to pretend that he was cooperating with the Government in its preparation for that trial is an exhibition of brass which is almost incredible. The information in his possession concerning the distributon of those bonds would have been materially helpful to the Government's case. He did not disclose a word of it. He said he didn't know who got the bonds.

SAID HE SUSPECTED HUMPHREYS

"I asked him if he had any theory about who got them, and he replied that he had always suspected that Humphreys got them, and that the Continental was rigged up by Humphreys to gouge the buyers of the oil out of an extra 25 cents a barrel."

So far as I know, nobody has ever cast any suspicion of reflection upon Mr. Humphreys in this oil transaction. He had oil to sell. He sold it for $1.50 a barrel to Stewart and the others with him, and they had it turned over to the Continental Trading Co., and then bought it on behalf of their stockholders for $1.75 a barrel.

Continuing to quote from Senator Pomerene:

"He completely deceived us about his own connection with the matter. We were astounded when we learned later that he had received $760,000 of the bonds, and I don't mind telling you that if three years had not expired since his testimony before the grand jury, we would have asked for the indictment of the gentleman on a charge of perjury."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Nebraska on the amendment has expired. He has 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the end of the quotation from Senator Pomerene. Mr. Anderson goes on:

When the Government filed suit in the United States District Court of Wyoming to recover the Teapot Dome reserve from Sinclair, Stewart was summoned as a witness. Later the trial was postponed, and it was necessary to subpœna the witness again. There was some delay about serving Stewart, in consequence of which a United States marshal at Chicago was discharged by President Coolidge. When the difficulty was discovered Stewart had gone to South America. Efforts to learn his address from his Chicago office were unsuccessful, and the case was tried without his presence.

STEWART STAYED OUT OF CASE

Roberts and Pomerene learned afterwards that Stewart had returned to this country a few days before the case was called and was in New York. When they demanded to know why he had not apprised them of the fact, he replied, Pomerene said, that he "wasn't looking for trouble."

It will be recalled that John D. Rockefeller, jr., in his testimony before the Senate committee, related that he, too, had asked Stewart if he knew who got the proceeds of the Continental deal, and that Stewart had refused to tell, again giving as his reason the fact that he had been summoned as a witness in the Sinclair case and was determined to reserve the facts for that occasion.

In giving to the Senate committee his reasons for refusing to testify to his knowledge of who got the Continental bonds, or whether he had ever discussed the transaction with Sinclair, Stewart said:

This is a quotation from Stewart's testimony under oath before the Senate committee:

I am a witness in a case which is now pending between the Government and some defendants (Sinclair and Fall). I have been interrogated on the subjects by counsel appointed to represent the United States in that case, along lines which make me think that the issues in that case are the same ones your are attempting to interrogate me about here.

The Government is entitled, and the defendants are entitled, to ask me such questions as they desire upon the trial of this case, and it is to be left to a judge learned in the law to determine the relevancy, materiality, and competency of the testimony. They have a right to cross-examine and reexamine, and it seems to me, with all due deference to this committee, that there is the place for me to give this testimony.

It seems to me, Mr. President, in view of the statements that Mr. Stewart has made to the stockholders of the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, and in view also of the startling statement of the Government attorneys, made now for the first time, so far as I know, that Stewart's testimony before the grand jury under oath was absolutely contradictory of his testimony under oath before the Senate committee, the stockholders as well as the country ought to know the truth. After his testimony before the grand jury three years expired before his testimony before the Senate committee, which meant that the statute of limitations had run; and, as these attorneys say, had it not been for that technicality, they would have caused his indictment and trial for perjury committed before the grand jury in his testimony there.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16714) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee on page 45, beginning in line 7.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frazier	Mayfield	Smoot
Barkley	Gerry	Moses	Steck
Bingham	Glass	Neely	Steiwer
Black	Glenn	Norbeck	Stephens
Blaine	Goff	Norris	Swanson
Blease	Gould	Nye	Thomas, Idaho
Borah	Hale	Oddie	Thomas, Okla.
Bratton	Harris	Overman	Trammell
Brookhart	Harrison	Phipps	Tydings
Broussard	Hastings	Pine	Tyson
Bruce	Hawes	Pittman	Vandenberg
Burton	Hayden	Ransdell	Wagner
Capper	Heflin	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Johnson	Robinson, Ind.	Walsh, Mont.
Couzens	Jones	Sackett	Warren
Curtis	Kendrick	Sheppard	Waterman
Deneen	King	Shipstead	Watson
Dill	McKellar	Shortridge	Wheeler
Edge	McMaster	Simmons
Fess	McNary	Smith

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-eight Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 45.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I want to offer an amendment and have it pending. I would like to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read, and will lie on the table.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 44, at the end of line 19, add the following:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to maintain marines in Nicaragua, or to transport marines to and from Nicaragua.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was about to inquire, in my own time, of the Senator from Maine, if he will not accept an amendment to the committee amendment found on page 45, which would delay the expenditure of the appropriation of $500,000 until the calendar year 1930. I propound the inquiry with the understanding that the bill, as amended by the committee, would authorize the commencement not only of 5 cruisers but of 10 cruisers this year. If I am in error, I should be glad to be advised.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not think the bill would authorize the starting of 10 cruisers this year.

Mr. KING. I am speaking in my own time; but may I ask the Senator if it is not a fact that this $500,000 is expected to be expended commencing on the 1st day of July of this year?

Mr. HALE. I do not think the department will go ahead and spend it on the 1st of July, or within a number of months of that time.

Mr. KING. But they are authorized, and might expend it, or contract for its expenditure, on the 1st day of July.

Mr. HALE. They are authorized to expend it at that time, but I do not think they will. I think this whole matter will go along in a regular, orderly way. They will expend $200,000, starting the first batch of cruisers, at the end of this year, and presumably will spend the $500,000 on the second batch in an orderly way.

Mr. KING. Which is an orderly way? Will the Senator indicate what he regards as an orderly way for the expenditure of this $500,000 for the second five cruisers? And does an "orderly" way have time limitations? Is it subject to any limitations? Does it not rest upon the discretion of the department?

Mr. HALE. Going ahead and starting the cruisers this year——

Mr. KING. The Senator refers to the first five?

Mr. HALE. The first five, with the $200,000 that is authorized, as I have explained already, starting the gun forgings and the ships. I presume they will lay the ships down soon after the 1st of July, possibly not before the 1st of September. Then the appropriations carried in the bill will take them along through the fiscal year 1930. I can not tell the Senator exactly when, but some time before July, 1930, they will go ahead with the next batch of the ships, the second batch, with the $500,000 to start them.

Mr. KING. I think this amendment offered by the committee should be rejected, unless it is amended. I agree with the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin that the Government, having announced a policy of building 15 cruisers, Congress would be expected to make the necessary appropriations to execute that policy, but that does not require that the construction of 10 cruisers shall be undertaken during the calendar year 1929.

Mr. HALE. Nor will we do so.

Mr. KING. Ah, we do not know. Why does not the Senator consent to an amendment, if he is so sanguine that that will be the case, which will restrict the expenditure of any part of the appropriation for the second five cruisers until the calendar year 1930? Now, the Senator says that in an orderly way we may not approach the construction of the second five until the latter part of 1929.

Mr. HALE. Clearly, under the terms of the cruiser bill, we have not any authority to start the second batch of cruisers in the fiscal year 1929. Clearly, under the provisions of that bill, we can not start them until the fiscal year 1930.

Mr. KING. I do not agree with the Senator; but even if that were true—and I will concede for the sake of the argument that the Senator is correct—this amendment would be a modification of the cruiser bill, and, of course, the last legislative enactment controls, if there is any conflict. If this bill is passed in its present form, the Navy Department could promptly, on the 1st day of July of this year, undertake the construction of the second five cruisers. It is the position of the department and the committee reporting this bill that it will be empowered to begin work upon the first five vessels as soon as this bill becomes law. The Senator is compelled to admit that construction can be commenced on the second list at any time after June 30, 1929.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have no desire or purpose in any way to break away from the terms of the cruiser bill, which I think was an excellent bill, and which was approved by a very large vote.

Mr. KING. I am not discussing the merits or the demerits of the cruiser bill. Let us confine ourselves to the question before us. We are already constructing six 10,000-ton cruisers——

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I have only a few minutes.

Mr. HALE. I just want to clarify one thing.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will take it out of his own time, I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine consents to take the time out of his time.

Mr. HALE. I just wanted to say to the Senator that I have already notified the Senate that I expect to perfect the amendment by inserting in line 16, page 45, after the word "Navy," the words "except the amount of $500,000 made available toward the construction of the second five light cruisers authorized by the act approved February 13, 1929."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator——

Mr. NORRIS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. NORRIS. Has not the Senator from Maine spoken on this amendment before?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; he is speaking in the time of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood the Senator from Utah was not willing that he should do that.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, of course I am always happy to yield to my friend, and I shall occupy but a few moments.

The point I was making when interrupted, was that we are now constructing eight 10,000-ton cruisers, two of them having been recently launched. Six are on the ways. Undoubtedly we will learn lessons in construction in the building of these cruisers which will be of advantage in the construction of the 15 recently authorized. We must not commit the folly which has characterized our naval construction in the past. The Senator will recall that when Lord Fisher projected the dreadnaught, for years we blindly continued the policy of building battleships of an antiquated design, as a result of which they were obsolete or obsolescent before they were completed.

In the technique and types of naval construction we have too often lagged behind Great Britain and Germany. It is certain that if the United States were to construct the 8 cruisers authorized in 1924 and the 15 recently authorized, according to types and designs of the 1924 period, they would be inferior to those built by other countries since that date.

Let us learn the lessons taught by the construction of the six cruisers now on the ways, and which will not be completed for several years, before we rush into the construction of other vessels. It seems to me unwise and indeed absurd for those who are interested in the welfare of the Navy, as I am in a modern, scientific, and up-to-date Navy, not to avail themselves of the lessons to be learned in the construction of the six cruisers, before we undertake the construction of 5 or 10 of the 15 which have been authorized. Naval science is progressive, not stagnant, and it would be inexcusable folly to lay down 10 cruisers during this year, when we have 6 building, and have opportunity to profit from the experiences and lessons which can be derived from their construction, as well as lessons which we may learn from the construction of cruisers and naval craft in other countries. We have been told of a new type of cruiser recently built in Germany.

It must be evident even to reactionary and archaic naval boards that cruisers built five years from now will be different from those now being constructed. If we were wise, we would not follow old or even present types. We would move cautiously and prudently. To rush through the construction of 15 cruisers in three years and complete the 6 now on the ways, would be most unwise and injurious to our Navy. Some of them would be obsolete before they were completed. Fighting navies are not measured by the number of vessels. One giant capital ship of the Hood type would put to flight half a dozen dreadnaughts. If there is to be no limitation in naval armament, it is certain that war vessels of various types and categories will be developed that will be greatly superior to those of present-day design. The airplanes and submarines will become of paramount importance and naval warfare, both offensive and defensive, will take on new forms. In the light of these facts and the certainty of new developments it is extravagant folly and national vanity to throw into a 3-year hopper the construction of 21 cruisers, 6 authorized in 1924, and 15 in 1929.

I appeal to the Senator in the interest of a strong, modern, efficient, and adequate Navy, to modify his amendment and postpone till 1930 any work upon the second five cruisers.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, it seems to me the Senate ought to understand this issue very clearly. There is no mystification about it. We fought here for nearly two weeks to determine whether we should have each year the construction of 5 cruisers, to begin 5 in the calendar year 1929, 5 in the calendar year 1930, and 5 in the calendar year 1931. After long and protracted debate, by an overwhelming majority the Senate decided that we should commence five cruisers each one of these years.

I want to explain to the Senate how moderate the committee has been.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SWANSON. Let the Senator take his own time.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator said calendar years. Does he not mean fiscal years?

Mr. SWANSON. I mean the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931. That is what the Senate decided after long and prolonged debate.

A motion was made to strike out the provision for 15 and provide for the construction of only 10. But we decided on 15. Next was a motion to have no time limit to authorize 15, but to construct them only when the Budget thought proper and reported that they should be constructed. The Senate decided that it wanted five cruisers commenced each fiscal year. The time was fixed after prolonged debate. Now all this is a renewal of the fight made here when the Senate overwhelmingly decided that they wanted to have five cruisers constructed in each of these years.

To show how moderate the committee was, listen to what was done.

We are bound to undertake five before June 30, 1929. To carry out the spirit of that instruction and direction of the Senate, all we appropriate for the year ending June 30, 1929, is $200,000 and we make it immediately available. That anyone should suggest a sum to undertake that construction might be less almost exceeds the imagination of man.

We then appropriate enough money available after the 1st of next July to continue the work of the construction of the five cruisers begun by the $200,000 available immediately, in accordance with the instructions of the Senate as contained in the cruiser bill, and for that purpose we appropriate about $10,000,000 or $11,000,000. That is all. If it were less the work could not be done economically. We would have the men working 10 days and laying off 10 days. The department said they wanted more money, but that if they were given less it would cost the Government a great deal more, because less money could not be expended economically.

The next proposition of the committee was to undertake to construct five more cruisers before the 29th of June, 1930. We were instructed in the cruiser bill to do that. What did the committee do? All we have given for that undertaking is $500,000, with which to undertake the next five cruisers, to carry out the directions contained in the cruiser law by direction of the Senate and by a large majority. That means that the first five cruisers are under construction and it means that, carrying out the instructions of the Congress, next year we will spend $500,000 on the second five of the cruisers up to the 1st of July, 1930. If we were to do less than that, we would have to abolish the time limit which the Senate fixed here after prolonged debate of two weeks and by an overwhelming vote. We will have five cruisers under way with the least possible amount of money that can be used economically. Then to carry out the instructions of the cruiser bill we appropriate $500,000 to start the second five for the next year. It is really a delay of one year, and I do not see how less money could be appropriated and still carry out the instructions of the Congress.

The amendment which disturbs the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], as originally reported by the committee, proposed to appropriate $500,000 and make it immediately available. That would have enabled the Government to start 10 cruisers. But that has been changed by an amendment which will be offered, if it has not already been offered, by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. To prevent any misunderstanding about it, as I understand the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Maine, it limits the $500,000 to the second batch of cruisers. Consequently there will not be 10 in process of construction. During the next fiscal year, the fiscal year 1930, there will be the first five cruisers that will have about $10,000,000 expended upon them, and there will be the second five merely started under the direction of Congress in the cruiser bill which will have expended upon them $500,000.

It seems to me it is so fair, so modest, and so considerate of the Treasury that I can not see how anyone can antagonize, unless he does not want any cruisers constructed at all or wants to limit them to five in number. An effort was made to limit the number to five and it was rejected. Then an effort was made to limit the number to 10 and that was rejected. It seems to me unless it is the desire of Senators to have that fight all over again, exactly the fight we had here for two weeks when the cruiser bill was before the Senate, they would not be forcing the issue now.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SWANSON. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am frank to say I was out of the Chamber when the Senator began speaking. Under the appropriation bill the Government may lay down five cruisers between now and the 30th of next June.

Mr. SWANSON. They may undertake five, and $200,000 is made immediately available, to comply with the instructions of the cruiser law.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then there is an appropriation which they may use to lay down or undertake—whichever is the proper term—five more cruisers in the next year.

Mr. SWANSON. Before the 29th of June, 1930; and that is limited to $500,000.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator tell me this, because I do not think I quite understood him. There will be a session of Congress convening in December next. What was the purpose of putting both provisions in the one bill now? I know there was some good reason; but what was it?

Mr. SWANSON. We have to appropriate now, because the cruiser law provides that we must undertake in each fiscal year five cruisers. The undertaking can be $500,000 or $1,000,000——

Mr. CARAWAY. I understand that.

Mr. SWANSON. And the general appropriation bill has always carried the provisions to enable us to undertake any increase of the Navy.

Mr. CARAWAY. The thing I am trying to get at—because nobody yet has explained it—is that there will be a Congress convening in December next; hence, what was the purpose of including items of appropriation so that this bill will carry the appropriation for laying down 10 cruisers instead of 5? I know there is a good reason for it, but I am asking the reason.

Mr. SWANSON. We will spend $10,000,000 during the next fiscal year for the first five cruisers. Then we have provided that $500,000 may be expended during that fiscal year on the second five cruisers.

Mr. CARAWAY. I understand that.

Mr. SWANSON. We have to have plans. Under the direction of the Congress those cruisers must be undertaken at that time. It is useless for us to come here in December and expect to appropriate for that purpose, because it will be along in January or February or March before the next Navy appropriation bill will come before the Senate, and it would be almost too late to make the money available for that fiscal year which would be 1930. It could not be put in the general appropriation bill because the funds appropriated by that bill are not available until the subsequent July for the ensuing fiscal year. This is the method that has always been followed.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is there anything unusual in this method?

Mr. SWANSON. Nothing in the world.

Mr. CARAWAY. We fought out the question of whether or not the time limit should be abolished. I thought it ought to have been and the Senator and those who agreed with him did not think so and they were in the majority. I recognize the right of the Senate to control.

Mr. SWANSON. We were directed by the Senate to undertake five cruisers during the present fiscal year.

Mr. CARAWAY. I understand that.

Mr. SWANSON. And five additional cruisers in the next fiscal year. We have proposed to appropriate the smallest possible amount, to wit, $200,000, to carry out the instructions of the Congress to undertake the construction of the first five cruisers in this fiscal year. Then we have appropriated the smallest amount that anybody could possibly consider proper for the undertaking of the second five cruisers in the fiscal year 1930. That is carrying out the will of the Congress.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am not complaining about the amount. In fact, I am not complaining about anything in reference to it. But I hear the charge constantly made that it is attempting to lay down 10 cruisers when the Congress only authorized 5. As I understand it from the Senator from Virginia there is no justification for that charge.

Mr. SWANSON. Absolutely none; and nobody can prove it. The instructions of Congress were that five cruisers be laid down prior to June 29 of this year. Then it directs that five more cruisers shall be laid down prior to June 29 of 1930.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Virginia on the amendment has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi will state the inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. We having passed a law providing for the beginning of the construction of five cruisers before the 30th of June, 1929, and five more during the next fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and this proposal coming out of the committee making the money immediately available, would not a point of order to that provision be sustainable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi make that point of order?

Mr. HARRISON. I am just propounding the parliamentary inquiry so I can get a rise out of the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will excuse the present occupant of the chair from passing on that question.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, yesterday I explained some of the matters now brought to the attention of the Senate by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], but his persistent argument makes it necessary again to point out that this appropriation is for starting 10 cruisers and starting them now. In the first place, the $500,000 is provided as an appropriation immediately available. In the second place, just below that paragraph, it is provided that all this money is available immediately. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is going to offer an amendment to that provision still leaving the $500,000 immediately available.

The Senator from Virginia insists that that is a compliance with the cruiser law. I insist that it is not. I insist it is amending the cruiser law. It is changing the plan that was adopted here by a big majority. Here is $200,000 that will start the five cruisers which are to be laid down before the 1st of July, 1929. That is all right. The cruiser law provided for that to be done. Then it calls for the next five cruisers to be laid down before the 1st of the next July, which will be July, 1930. But the Senator is providing an appropriation to do that right now instead of waiting until near the 1st of July, 1930.

Mr. HALE. When would the Senator have it done?

Mr. BROOKHART. I would do it in the regular session of Congress next December or January.

Mr. HALE. How would the Senator do it?

Mr. BROOKHART. In the same way that we are providing now the $200,000. There is no occasion for this controversy to go on in this way.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. The word "immediately," as I understand it, is not in the provision for the $500,000, consequently it does not become available until the 1st of July, 1929. The word "immediately" has been stricken out.

Mr. HALE. It never was in there.

Mr. SWANSON. The bill speaks of the 1st of July as the time when the second five of the cruisers shall be commenced. How does the Senator understand that there can be 10 undertaken immediately?

Mr. BROOKHART. There is a provision for the appropriation contained in the bill on account of cruisers for increase of the Navy that it shall be immediately available.

Mr. HALE. That is made immediately available for certain purposes, for the pay of clerks and draftsmen, but not for the building of ships. In order to make it doubly sure I am putting in the words "except the amount of $500,000 made available to be used for the construction of the second five cruisers."

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator just now said it would be postponed until 1930 on the suggestion of the Senator from Utah. If this is not available until 1930——

Mr. SWANSON. It is immediately available after the 1st of July.

Mr. BROOKHART. If this is not going to be used until 1930 and we de not start the first five cruisers until the last of the fiscal year 1929, we ought not to start the second five cruisers until the last of the fiscal year 1930. We will have plenty of time and plenty of opportunity to make appropriation for the second five, the same as we are making now for the first five. Therefore unless it is going to tie us fast into the 10-cruiser policy, there is no need for urging that proposition at this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. KING. It seems to me there can be no question as to the interpretation of the amendment offered by the committee as amended by the Senator from Maine. It means that the $500,000 made available can be taken on the 1st day of July of this year and utilized for the undertaking of the construction of the second five.

Mr. HALE. That is quite right.

Mr. KING. So it is true that it is not available under his amendment until after the 1st day of July, but at midnight on the 30th day of June of this year the $500,000 could be expended by the Navy Department for laying down the second five cruisers.

Mr. HALE. Precisely.

Mr. SWANSON. The language is plain and clear if the Senator will read it. It provides $500,000, which shall be available toward the construction of the five light cruisers, the construction of which is authorized by the act approved February 13, 1929. This bill does not become operative itself until the 1st of July, 1929.

Now, let us go back to the $200,000. We made that immediately available, because the other appropriations contained in the bill do not become available until the 1st of July, 1929, and we have to have $200,000 to start the construction of the first five cruisers before the 1st of July, 1929.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, the money for the construction of the second five cruisers should not be available until a year from the time the money is available for the first five. The Senator has succeeded in having it arranged very nicely, so that 10 cruisers can be run in all together, thus starting a 10-cruiser construction program in one year.

There is a further reason why this construction should be delayed a year, and that is the provision of the cruiser bill that we shall endeavor to enter into an international agreement limiting armament. The Senator from Virginia wants to forget all about that provision. It is just as important as any other provision in the cruiser bill, and, to my mind, it is the most important provision of that bill, because if it is handled properly we can probably avoid building any of these cruisers, perhaps, even the first five, and we can certainly avoid building the second five, if we can arrive at a proper international agreement.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROOKHART. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Suppose the projected disarmament conference should fail, would the Senator then be in favor of building the cruisers?

Mr. BROOKHART. I am in favor of carrying out the law.

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not ask the Senator that question. I asked if the Senator would vote for the building of the cruisers if the projected disarmament conference should fail.

Mr. BROOKHART. As an academic question I am opposed to all cruisers, as I have said, and I am discussing the question before us and not the imaginary situation suggested by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I notice that in the amendment reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs a portion of the appropriation is made immediately available. There is to be an amendment proposed to strike out that provision as it applies to five of the cruisers.

Mr. HALE. A portion of the appropriation is made immediately available only for certain minor purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Iowa, I think, is a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, and I am just wondering if the Naval Affairs Committee instructed the chairman of the committee to make that change?

Mr. BROOKHART. If it is changed in the right way, and properly worded, it will probably be true, then, that the $500,000 will not be available until the 1st day of July.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator, I think, is a member of the Naval Affairs Committee. I am asking him if the committee instructed the chairman to make that change?

Mr. BROOKHART. I am not a member of the committee. The chairman of the committee will have to answer that question.

Mr. HALE. The chairman was not instructed officially at all, but I think the members of the committee would consent to it without any question. As I have said, I do not think it is a necessary change; I am simply proposing it to clarify the matter.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, that still leaves the possibility of running these 10 cruisers in together. That seems to be the plan. If it were not the plan, the Senator from Virginia knows that at the regular session next December we could provide an appropriation to take care of the matter. We do not need $500,000 for the second five any more than we need $500,000 for the first five; we could provide an appropriation of $200,000 to start the second five.

Mr. SWANSON. The committee have acted in a conservative and moderate way in order, so far as we could, to conform to the ideas of those who wished to build slowly. The cruisers can not be built contemporaneously, because we limit the appropriation for the second batch of cruisers to $500,000, and the other appropriation goes to the first five. What else could be done, unless we nullified the law which the Senate passed so overwhelmingly?

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator and the other proponents of this bill run the two together around the 1st day of July. That is apparently the idea.

Mr. SWANSON. How could they do it when only $500,000 can be spent on the second batch?

Mr. BROOKHART. Only $200,000 can be spent on the first set of cruisers.

Mr. SWANSON. The remainder of it must be spent on the first set. We appropriate $500,000 for the second batch and $10,000,000 for the first batch.

Mr. HALE. That is during the fiscal year 1930.

Mr. SWANSON. During the fiscal year 1930.

Mr. BROOKHART. But contracts will be let for all of them.

Mr. SWANSON. They can not be let under the law with only $500,000 appropriated.

Mr. BROOKHART. The policy seems to be to provide for 10 cruisers, and then, if we succeed in reaching an international agreement for disarmament, we will have to pay twenty-five or thirty million dollars to cancel the contracts, as we have done heretofore.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Iowa on the amendment has expired. He has 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Virginia if it is not possible to have the appropriation made at the next regular session in ample time to comply with the requirements of the cruiser bill as to the second five cruisers?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not think so, in view of the disposition of the Senator and others to oppose the cruiser bill, and the effort to defeat even the regular appropriation. I am not willing to risk it.

Mr. BROOKHART. Let me ask, Does the bill with a present appropriation of $200,000 and a further appropriation, to be available later, comply with the requirements of the cruiser bill for the first five cruisers?

Mr. SWANSON. It does; it undertakes the construction of the cruisers.

Mr. BROOKHART. Very well. This is the 22d day of February, on which we are complying with the requirements as to the first five cruisers that shall be built in 1929. Now, on the 22d day of February, 1930, we can provide an appropriation to comply with the requirements as to the second set of cruisers. Is not that true?

Mr. SWANSON. We can do it; yes. But the question is, Will we be allowed to do that?

Mr. BROOKHART. Very well. Then, why put it in the bill now and why raise this controversy at this time, when it may be the greatest stumbling block to an international agreement?

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator give me an opportunity to answer that suggestion?

Mr. BROOKHART. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. The reason why we only appropriate $200,000 now is because the Senator from Iowa and those who cooperated with him would not allow the cruiser bill to pass last spring. It was delayed in that way for nearly a year. And now we can only appropriate $200,000 for the particular purpose. If no appropriation is made here for the set of cruisers to be constructed next year, for which we only provide $500,000, then next year the situation will be like it was last year, and no provision will be made in time for their construction.

Mr. BROOKHART. But in spite of our delays the Senator concedes that the appropriation made now on the 22d day of February is a compliance with the law.

Mr. SWANSON. No. If it had not been for the Senator and those who cooperated with him we would have had these ships one-third constructed now; but all the Senator is willing should be done toward their construction now is to appropriate $200,000.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator would like to have had these ships constructed years ago and then to sink them and construct new ones. That is the Senator's policy.

Mr. SWANSON. This is the first time I have advocated an increase of 15 cruisers in the Navy. It was only when Great Britain had gone far beyond us in the ratio of 13 to 5 that I saw the necessity of it. This is the first time the Congress has provided for the building of 15 cruisers. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to ask him how it violates the law to carry out the instruction of Congress?

Mr. BROOKHART. I am unable to see the Senator's viewpoint at all. I can see no reason why he should resist us upon this proposition unless there is some purpose of tying us fast into this big cruiser program in spite of any international agreement which may be reached. If that is the Senator's purpose, if he wants to defeat an international agreement and to defeat any opportunity of disarmament on the seas, it is perfectly logical and perfectly proper to hurry the construction of the cruisers as fast as possible. In that view of the case, then the faster we go the more surely he will succeed in achieving the result he desires; but he voted for a law which calls for an effort to be made to secure an international agreement for disarmament and, if we can reach a proper agreement, for the sinking of naval vessels so far as possible. I think that is a big policy announced by the cruiser law; the building of 15 cruisers is only a little item compared to an international agreement which will end war construction on the seas. But the Senator from Virginia wants to ignore the big policy which he himself supported, and to force the construction of these cruisers whether or not and to do that at the very earliest possible date, although at the same time he admits we can comply with the law fully and postpone the appropriation for the second five cruisers even as late as the 22d day of next February. That is the exact situation on this question. If we can eliminate crowding the construction of these cruisers this controversy will end and the bill may proceed, so far as I am concerned, to enactment without any further objection.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, the only difference between himself and me is this: He thinks the spending of $500,000 on five cruisers that are to cost $15,000,000 each is crowding. I think it is hardly beginning them. Crowding, with only $500,000 for five cruisers! That amount will hardly enable their construction to be started.

It was recommended that $22,000,000 should be appropriated to start these five cruisers and proceed with their construction during the next year; but the committee was so conservative, so moderate, that it merely recommended the appropriation of $500,000 in order to comply with the law; yet the Senator calls that crowding.

Furthermore, the President can stop this construction in the event an international agreement for disarmament shall be reached. I believe the best way to bring about disarmament with Great Britain, with Japan, and with other nations is to let them know we are going to build. When they realize that fact they will come to an agreement; but so long as we simply talk about building and do nothing, they are satisfied with conditions at present existing.

Mr. BROOKHART. As I remember, the way the committee stood by the President was to walk roughshod over both the President and the President elect, both of whom wanted no time limit whatever on the construction of the cruisers; but the committee listened to the Steel Trust. It did not listen to the President of the United States or to the President elect; it listened to the shipbuilders; it listened to the fellows who want profits out of war. War profiteering is the evil of the age; war profiteering is the cause of war. I think if profiteering were taken out of this proposition, there would be nobody here advocating cruisers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KING. I understand that the amendment offered by the committee is found on line 16.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is that beginning on line 7 on page 45.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Utah has in mind an amendment that is not now pending.

Mr. KING. Which amendment is before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment before the Senate at this time is that beginning in line 7 on page 45 and extending to and including part of line 11.

Mr. KING. Then, Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. On line 8, after the word "available," I move to add the words "after January 1, 1930," so that the amendment as amended would read as follows:

> On account of hulls and outfits of vessels and machinery of vessels heretofore authorized, $28,550,000, of which $500,000 shall be available after January 1, 1930, toward the construction of the second five light cruisers—

And so forth.

I should like to say a few words, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will pardon the suggestion, the Chair will remind him that he has exhausted his time on the committee amendment.

Mr. KING. I will speak on my amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is entitled to speak on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. KING. If I understood the view of the Senator from Maine, it is that the $200,000 appropriated for the first five cruisers should be available July 1, 1929?

Mr. HALE. No; it is to be available after the bill becomes a law.

Mr. KING. Very well. It is to be available immediately after the bill becomes law; there is not to be a moment's delay.

I presume all arrangements have been made to expend this amount within a few hours after this bill is signed by the President. Haste, and more haste, must be the slogan of the Navy Department. Perhaps even now contracts have been prepared for the building of the cruisers which are to be built by contract. And the Senator demands that the $500,000 for the second five vessels shall be available at midnight, June 30, 1929. It is certain that these cruisers are to be pushed to completion as soon as possible. They are to be undertaken this year, as are the first five authorized in the cruiser bill. The plan is to commence 10 war vessels in 1929; to commit the Government to complete at least 10 cruisers, so that any international agreement may not be able to reach them. This amendment reported by the committee is a piece of camouflage. It will deceive no one. It is intended to compel the Government to let contracts or start plans or construction for 10 cruisers within the next few months. The $500,000 is to be expended soon—within a few weeks, probably after July 1 of this year.

Mr. HALE. At any time during the fiscal year 1930.

Mr. KING. It is made available on the 1st day of July, 1930.

Mr. HALE. There can be no question about that.

Mr. KING. No; that follows, of course.

Which means that it can be expended the same day. The naval authorities are unwilling to wait until December of this year, when the appropriation bills for 1931 are prepared, for the appropriation for the commencement of the second list of five cruisers. And that is what the Senator desires. Just as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] has stated, there is a determination to force the commencement of 10 cruisers during the calendar year of 1929. That was not the purpose of the cruiser bill, but its terms are being perverted to accomplish that end. It seems manifest that there are influences at work to prevent any limitation of arms conference dealing with the 15 cruisers, or interfering with their construction.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] scoffs at the suggestion made by the Senator from Iowa that an effort is being made to "crowd" the construction of the cruisers, and treats sarcastically the suggestion that the item of $500,000 to be available July 1 next can be construed as "crowding" construction. I submit the Senator has not met the argument of the Senator from Iowa. If the Navy is not to begin work upon or let contracts for some of these "second-year" cruisers, why not so state? Why not incorporate in the bill that this amount is not to be available until 1930?

Mr. President, contracts may be entered into with $1 consideration which will involve millions, and, for that matter, hundreds of millions and which will commit the Government to the building of 10 or 15 warcraft within a limited period. Who shall say that on the 1st day of July, 1929, with the avidity which has characterized the naval authorities in the Navy Department, contracts will not be let for the construction, not of 5 vessels but of 10 cruisers authorized by the recent cruiser bill? If it is proper and lawful to now appropriate $500,000 to "undertake" the building of the second list of cruisers, it is equally legal and proper to let contracts for their construction as soon as the appropriation is available and which will be, under the amendment offered by the Senate committee, July 1, 1929. The Senator from Maine can give no guaranty that, in what he calls "orderly" development and building, contracts will not be entered into or plans adopted for the building of these five cruisers on the 1st day of July next or a few days thereafter. If the Senator desires that no contracts shall be let and no plans formulated for these cruisers until 1930, why does he not consent that the bill shall so state?

As I said a few moments ago, we are now building six 10,000-ton cruisers authorized in 1924. It will require several years for their completion. Five additional cruisers will be contracted for immediately; and under this bill as it is now amended by the committee five additional cruisers may be authorized and contracts let for their construction on the 1st day of July of this year.

If the Senator from Maine is sincere in the statements which he made a few moments ago, he will accept the amendment which I have offered and restrict the utilization of any part of this $500,000 until the 1st day of January, 1930.

Congress will meet in regular session and will then prepare and pass the necessary appropriation measure to care for all departments of the Government. If it is deemed necessary at that time to appropriate $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 or the entire amount required for the construction and completion of the second five cruisers, that may be done; but at this time to make an appropriation of $500,000 or any amount whatever for the second five cruisers is most unwise and in contravention of the spirit if not the letter of the cruiser act.

Mr. President, we can not defend the enormous appropriations for the Army and Navy which are being made at this session of Congress. Our military budget for the next fiscal year will be approximately $800,000,000. This is more than any nation in the world is expending for armies and navies. The military load is growing heavier, and the demands of various groups and of the War and Navy Departments will become more insistent for still larger appropriations.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. As I understand the Senator's amendment, it would have the effect of postponing the appropriation of any money for the building of the second five cruisers to January 1, 1930.

Mr. KING. That is correct. My purpose is to not make available any sum to be expended during this year upon the second list of five cruisers authorized in the recent naval bill. I confess that I am skeptical of the willingness of the Navy Department to wait until 1930 to begin work upon this second list. There is nothing in the conduct of the department that would lead to the conclusion that it will act prudently in the matter of commencing work upon these cruisers. There has been and is an almost fanatical zeal exhibited by some that brooks not a moment's delay in launching a mighty naval program. The Secretary of the Navy has recently asked for 71 war vessels, and the naval board has exerted its influence to secure the adoption of this plan.

Mr. President, unless there is an international agreement limiting naval armament it is certain that within the next 10 years our naval expenditures will approximate $10,000,000,000. The country has been inflamed by exaggerated statements and foolish and alarming, and, I may add, unfounded propaganda.

The presentation made by Secretary Wilbur and representatives of the Navy to Congress was calculated to produce naval and military hysteria and to lead the country to believe that our country was in danger of attack from some powerful enemy. The demand for 71 vessels, at a cost of nearly $1,000,000,000, was unwise and produced unfavorable reactions not only in the United States but in all the world. And the Secretary made it clear that more than $2,000,000,000 additional would soon be required for new naval construction.

When public opinion revolted against the demand for 71 warships then a "modest" demand—to use the expression of my friend from Virginia—was made for only 15 cruisers and a number of submarines.

Mr. President, we now have 22 cruisers which are nearly obsolete and 10 modern cruisers, each of 7,500 tons displacement. No better cruisers plow the sea. In addition we have recently completed two 10,000-ton cruisers which are superior to any found in any navy. We will soon complete six additional cruisers of the same tonnage. They will, presumably, represent the latest and best that can be found in naval construction. We have authorized the construction of 15 more 10,000-ton cruisers, and are to drive through to speedy completion this entire number.

It is absolutely certain that we will have the most powerful cruiser fleet of any navy in the world. The British cruisers will be in a second class compared to those of our own Battle Fleet.

To-day we have the most powerful battle fleet in the world. Gun for gun and ship for ship, we are superior to Great Britain. Great Britain is superior in cruiser strength, but in battleships, destroyers, submarines, airplane carriers and other auxiliary naval craft the United States outranks any other nation.

Mr. President, there will be unfavorable reactions in other countries because of the belligerent spirit exhibited in the United States. No more warlike spirit, it is said by some, was manifested in Germany during the years immediately preceding the outbreak of the World War than has been in evidence in some circles of our own country.

If we are sincerely interested in peace, we will give evidence of our purpose, not by developing a navalistic spirit, but by pursuing policies that will promote international fellowship.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I was not in favor of the consideration of the cruiser bill during the present session of Congress, because I did not believe it would create a very good impression among the nations of the world with reference to our desire to promote the peace of the world in the passage of the Kellogg peace pact. I was not in favor of the time-limit clauses in the cruiser bill, and made every effort to eliminate the time provision.

We are now about to vote finally upon this proposition, and I rise to express my congratulations to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and his colleague on the committee, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], for the magnificent way in which they have steered these pieces of legislation to final enactment. Indeed, it was a wonderful feather in the cap of my friend from Maine and my very good friend from Virginia that they were able to overcome the opposition which lurked in the way of the cruiser bill so far as the time limit was concerned. They went up against not only the present President of the United States, with all the influence of a President going out of office, but the influence of the incoming President, although most of the time he was in far-away waters.

It was, however, a great effort; and success crowned the efforts of my friend from Maine. So, drunk with power—because that is the only way my friend ever gets drunk [laughter]—he now comes in with this naval appropriation bill; and although when other important pieces of legislation and tiny proposals of legislation appear here, it takes days and weeks to pass them, under this strong cooperation between the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Maine they pass this important bill in less than two days.

I am in favor of carrying out the law embodied in the so-called cruiser bill. I think the Congress should provide ample appropriations to meet every requirement of that law; but I do not want the Senator from Maine to think that some of us here are fooled as to what he is doing in the provisions of this bill, and when we vote on it we should all understand what we are voting for.

The Senator from Maine and the Senator from Virginia are not meeting as loud opposition nor perhaps as well-oiled opposition in putting over this proposal as the Senator met in his cruiser fight; but in this instance he has not the backing of his President, nor has he the indorsement of the Director of the Budget.

I hope the Senator will agree with me with reference to that matter. His keeping his seat and remaining quiet tells me that I am correct in that assertion. [Laughter.]

I say that the President in his estimate has not recommended this, nor has the Director of the Budget, because I have taken the pains to do what I do not very often do, read the estimate of the Director of the Budget. In reading it over I find that he incorporates in it language that was in the naval appropriation bill as it passed the House, and recommends the increases as carried in the bill; but he leaves out of his estimate this $500,000 to begin the construction of the second five cruisers at the beginning of the next fiscal year.

Mr. HALE. And also the $200,000 for the construction of the first five cruisers.

Mr. HARRISON. No; the Director of the Budget recommends the appropriation of money for the first five cruisers.

Mr. HALE. Not to make it immediately available.

Mr. HARRISON. No. The Senator was so drunk with desire to pass this cruiser bill quickly that he was not even willing to wait for the voice of Congress, as embodied in the cruiser bill, and make these appropriations in an orderly way; but he wants to make them immediately available.

Mr. HALE. I was drunk with desire to observe the law, Mr. President.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, instead of saying that the Senator from Maine was drunk with desire to pass the cruiser bill quickly, I suggest that the Senator use the term that he was swayed or influenced by desire to do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. The President recommended $11,800,000 for the two purposes indicated in that recommendation. Being opposed to the time limit, he did not make it for any year, as I understand, and he expected his Budget officer to nullify the will of the Congress. All we did was to take his $11,800,000 and carry out the instruction of Congress to undertake the construction of five cruisers this year, which we took from the $11,800,000. Then we took $500,000—we did not increase the total—and made that available for the five cruisers next year. We did not modify the President's amount; but we thought we ought to carry out the will of Congress and not the will of the Budget or the President.

I am sorry to see a man who has always been a valiant fighter for the will of Congress and the will of the people surrender to a Budget officer and the President in their attempt to nullify the expressed will of the Senate and House.

Mr. HARRISON. This is one of the few times when the Director of the Budget and the President and myself agree on a proposition. [Laughter.]

Mr. SWANSON. Both trying to nullify the will of Congress.

Mr. HARRISON. No; it is the Senate Committee on Appropriations that is trying to veto the suggestions of the Director of the Budget and the will of Congress.

Let us not be misled about this proposition. It is too plain. Here is Mr. Lord's estimate. He says:

> Construction and machinery: For an additional amount on account of hulls and outfits of vessels and machinery of vessels heretofore authorized, $5,800,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. NORRIS. Whose estimate did the Senator say that is?

Mr. HARRISON. This is General Lord's estimate, transmitted by the President. The amount is $5,800,000, increasing the $22,750,000 carried in the House bill to $28,550,000 here. He recommends that increase; but the Committee on Appropriations lops off $500,000 of the increase suggested by the Director of the Budget and the President on account of hulls and outfits of vessels and machinery of vessels and applies it to the construction of the second five vessels carried in the naval bill.

We can make this appropriation. I know what the sentiment of the Senate is; they are going to pass it; but when we vote for it let us know that we are not carrying out the act. If we did, we would make the appropriation as carried here for these first five vessels, and we would wait until the next regular session of the Congress, when we will have before us another appropriation bill which will come on for consideration about the same relative time in 1930 that this has come before us in this naval appropriation bill. We will have as long then to provide the money for the second five, during that particular year, as we have now for providing the money for these first five vessels for 1929, and we will then proceed in an orderly way. I shall vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I am exceedingly fond of my good friend from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], the ranking Democratic member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I am not much concerned about the provisions of the bill. I wish to say, Mr. President, that nobody is being fooled except the Senators who are fooling themselves when they think they are fooling somebody else. That is the only thing I object to.

I say, with much hesitancy, it is a little bit of sharp practice. It is a desire to outwit the administration; and I regret to see my friend, who says he is drunk on both enthusiasm and desire——

Mr. GLASS. And power.

Mr. CARAWAY. And power; and, as my friend from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] suggests from his seat, that is a mixed drink, and I should say he was an authority on that and he ought to know.

Seriously speaking, it may be that you can not trust the President or the President elect. I recall going over the country and advising the people that I thought that was the fact, but I had not expected so early to have confirmation of my prediction here in the Senate; to hear the chairman of one of the great committees say, "We can not trust the President now in power to carry out the expressed will of the Congress, although he signed the bill," and "we can not trust the incoming President to carry out the law of the land and can not trust him to protect the interests of this country. Therefore we must indulge in sharp practice to avoid a disaster that is to overtake the country because the President has not either the foresight or the patriotism to carry out the law of the land."

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator tell me what he means by "sharp practice"?

Mr. CARAWAY. When the Senator gets sober from too much indulgence in power he will know what I mean by that without my telling him. That is such a common expression that one coming from New England certainly must know what it means.

I am not falling out with the Senator from Maine now. What I am trying to say is—and I say it seriously—that you say that he who is now President and he who is to succeed him can not be trusted to look after the defenses of this country, and that we must—oh, I will avoid the word the meaning of which the Senator did not know—that we must write into this bill a subterfuge in order to protect the country against the President and the President to be. That is all I object to.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, although I did not take an active part in connection with the framing of this appropriation bill. I would not support any legislation that would contemplate a defeat of the cruiser bill. On the other hand, I do not care to support legislation which contemplates a hastening of the action provided in the cruiser bill.

As I see it, the amendment under discussion is absolutely unnecessary in order for us to comply with the provisions of the law in regard to the appropriation. Under the law we are to undertake the construction of five cruisers prior to the expiration of the fiscal year 1929. We are then to undertake the construction of five additional cruisers by the expiration of the fiscal year 1930.

As has been stated, Congress will convene in December and we will have every opportunity to make appropriations for the second five cruisers in December, January, and February that we would have at the present time, and I am unable to see why we should make an appropriation at this time for the 10 cruisers, when the purpose and object of the law was that we should undertake only 5 cruisers each fiscal year.

Under this appropriation act we provide at least a part of the appropriation for 10 cruisers during a period of one year.

While I supported the bill providing for the 15 cruisers and opposed all amendments that would interfere with such policy, I do not see any particular reason, and there is no reason, why we should make appropriations for the second five cruisers now. In the ordinary conduct of affairs, Congress would take up that item when we met in December, and make the appropriations for the second five at the next session of Congress.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, does the Senator think——

Mr. TRAMMELL. I think that the whole object and purpose of it is to hasten the matter, and hasten it in a manner which was not contemplated by many of us who supported the cruiser bill providing for the 15 cruisers. A defeat of this amendment, would, as I see it, in no wise interfere with the carrying out of the law that was enacted by Congress, and I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs a question in my time.

The appropriations for the fiscal year 1930 become effective on the 1st day of July, 1929, do they not?

Mr. HALE. That is quite right.

Mr. SMITH. Congress is supposed to make appropriations for the fiscal year beginning the 1st of July, 1929, which will be expended in 1930.

Mr. HALE. That is quite right.

Mr. SMITH. A little more than half of the fiscal year has now passed—this being February—and this is the first time a naval appropriation bill has come up, and that is why we must appropriate now.

Mr. HALE. That is quite right. If the cruiser bill had gone through in time the appropriation would have been in the appropriation bill for the current year.

Mr. SMITH. Therefore, we are apparently making two appropriations in one fiscal year when we are not. We are carrying out the regular order that Congress always observes of appropriating at the 1929 session for the fiscal year that begins the 1st of the following July.

Mr. HALE. That is right; and the appropriation of the $200,000 that we are appropriating for this year is an unusual procedure that we have to follow, because it is the only way to get it in before 1930.

Mr. SMITH. I thought that was the situation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the committee amendment. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45, line 8, after the word "available," to insert the words "after January 1, 1930," so that it will read, "of which $500,000 shall be available after January 1, 1930, toward the construction," and so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 16, after the word "expended," to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That appropriations contained in this act on account of "Increase of the Navy" shall be immediately available, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, for the employment of such clerks, draftsmen, and technical employees as may be required at navy yards, in field-inspection offices, and in the Navy Department in the District of Columbia, for the preparation of plans and the work of inspecting and constructing vessels building, such employees to be in addition to those otherwise provided for.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, to perfect that amendment, I offer the following.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45, line 17, after the word "Navy," insert the following:

Except the amount of $500,000 made available toward the construction of the second five light cruisers authorized by the act approved February 13, 1929.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 3, after the word "expended," strike out "$12,000,000" and insert "$18,000,000, of which $200,000 shall be immediately available toward the construction of the first five light cruisers, the construction of which is authorized by the act approved February 13, 1929, to be undertaken during the fiscal year 1929: Provided, That of the total amount hereby appropriated a sum not exceeding $200,000 may be expended for additional machinery and equipment at ordnance establishments," so as to read:

Armor, armament, and ammunition: Toward the armor, armament, and ammunition for vessels heretofore authorized, to remain available until expended, $18,000,000, of which $200,000 shall be immediately available toward the construction of the first five light cruisers, the construction of which is authorized by the act approved February 13, 1929, to be undertaken during the fiscal year 1929: Provided, That of the total amount hereby appropriated a sum not exceeding $200,000 may be expended for additional machinery and equipment at ordnance establishments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 11, to insert:

Improving and equipping navy yards for construction of ships: Toward providing and reconditioning building ways and providing additional equipment and facilities at navy yards and ordnance establishments necessary for the construction and equipment of ships, $570,000, to be immediately available, and in addition the Secretary of the Navy, upon approval by the President, is authorized to enter into obligations for this purpose, amounting in the aggregate not to exceed $1,725,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have two amendments which I was instructed by the committee to offer from the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the first amendment.

The CHIEF CERK. On page 47, line 25, after the word "plant," to insert a semicolon and the following:

and that no part of the moneys herein appropriated for the Naval Establishment or herein made available therefor shall be used or expended under contracts hereafter made for the repair, purchase, or acquirement, by or from any private contractor, of any naval vessel, machinery, article, or articles that at the time of the proposed repair, purchase, or acquirement can be repaired, manufactured, or produced in each or any of the Government navy yards or arsenals of the United States, when time and facilities permit, and when, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, such repair, purchase, acquirement, or production would not involve an appreciable increase in cost to the Government: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as altering or repealing the proviso in section 1 of the act to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels approved February 13, 1929, which provides that the first and each succeeding alternate cruiser upon which work is undertaken, together with the main engine, armor, and armament, shall be constructed or manufactured in the Government navy yards, naval gun factories, naval ordnance plants, or arsenals of the United States except such material or parts as are customarily manufactured in such Government plants.

Mr. HALE. This is simply the ordinary labor amendment that we have had in appropriation bills for the last four years. Added to it is a proviso that nothing in it shall in any way interfere with the provisions of the cruiser law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is the language the same?

Mr. HALE. The language is the same with one exception which I am going to add, where a few words were left out in the House and which I will ask to have reinserted.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Maine a question. If this measure is not in conflict with the cruiser law, what necessity is there for attempting to declare in the amendment offered that it is not to be in contravention of the provisions of that law?

Mr. HALE. There was some question whether under the terms of the amendment, if it was found to cost more to build ships in the navy yards than to build them by private contract, it might have barred their building in the navy yards, and this simply provides that in any event those which are provided for in the cruiser law the first and each alternate cruiser shall be built in the navy yards.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield to enable me to make an additional observation regarding the matter to which he is now addressing himself?

Mr. HALE. I gladly yield.

Mr. BRATTON. In further answer to the inquiry propounded by the Senator from Utah, the cruiser law provides that the first and each alternate ship thereafter shall be built in the navy yards. The provisions of that bill are mandatory in that regard. The amendment now proposed to the appropriation bill provides that as to the other ships preference shall be given to the navy yards, but as to the first and each alternate ship the mandatory provision contained in the cruiser law shall be carried out. It is to obviate a possible repeal by implication that the special language was inserted in the appropriation bill. It was thought by some of us that this being a later act and carrying merely the preference provision ordinarily inserted in appropriation bills, it might repeal by implication the mandatory provision of the authorization act, so we inserted this language in order to obviate any possible conflict.

Mr. HALE. The second part of the amendment was inserted at the request of the Senator from New Mexico, and I think is an excellent provision.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, does that make it possible to award them all to navy yards and none of them to private contractors?

Mr. HALE. I think that might be remotely possible, but I believe there is no chance of its being done. In the first place, we have not existing facilities enough to construct them all in the navy yards.

Mr. SWANSON. The eight cruisers are being built now.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. Consequently there is nothing to apply to those. Five of them are being built in private yards and three in navy yards. The only cruisers to be built, unless we have a submarine under the old authorization, would be those provided for in this bill. This carries out the cruiser law and does not modify or change it in any respect.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator if the amendment which is just offered, the entire meaning of which I did not catch because of the confusion, deals only with ships which are now in process of construction and the 15 cruisers authorized in the cruiser bill?

Mr. HALE. It deals with the appropriations that come under this bill and it applies to the cruisers now under construction and those started in this bill, and also to the three submarines which are started under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. KING. This bill authorizes the repair of ships. Does the amendment which the Senator offers preclude the Government having repairs made upon war vessels other than in navy yards owned by the Government?

Mr. HALE. The repairs on all war vessels are made in the navy yards of the country. I do not think this affects that question one way or the other. It simply provides that where the work can be done in a navy yard at a price not appreciably more than outside parties would charge, it must be done in the navy yards.

Mr. KING. Does the amendment seek to inaugurate a policy different from that which now prevails in that regard?

Mr. HALE. It does not change what we have had under existing conditions for the last four or five years. The only change is in regard to the 15 cruisers where it is provided that the terms of the cruiser law shall be complied with.

Mr. SWANSON. It does not change the law at all. It does not make the slightest change at all in existing law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maine in behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I have a further amendment which I send to the desk and which I have been instructed by the committee to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 54, after line 12, insert as a new paragraph the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to adjust the rates of pay of the drafting group in the field services of the Naval Establishment so as to be comparable with the increased rates of pay allowed other employees in the field service under the amended wage schedule of August 1, 1928, $154,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer from this appropriation to the appropriations under which the members of the drafting group are employed such sums as the Secretary of the Navy may certify as being required to meet the increased cost under each such appropriation.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, is this the amendment which affects the employees in the navy yards and Naval Establishment outside of the District of Columbia?

Mr. HALE. Yes; the draftsmen.

Mr. DILL. Is the amendment satisfactory to those who proposed it?

Mr. HALE. No; I think they ask for a larger amount. This is what the department recommended that they considered a fair adjustment.

Mr. DILL. How much of an increase will this provide?

Mr. HALE. It provides $154,000.

Mr. DILL. I mean how much of an increase to each man?

Mr. HALE. The increases will run from $66 to $394 a year.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Washington that it is not entirely satisfactory to the field men, but it was the best that could be gotten by those of us who spoke in behalf of the field men.

Mr. DILL. I know the Senator from Virginia spoke for them and I am inclined to go along with his suggestion.

Mr. GLASS. I think it is about time to meet their situation even more than this does, but it is the best we can do at this time.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, it will take two or three years at this rate to get their wages to equal those paid other employees performing like services. I think it is the best we could get and so we accepted it.

Mr. DILL. What does the Senator mean when he says the best he could get?

Mr. SWANSON. There was a dispute down at the department in connection with the question of whether they ought to go under the Welch Act or not, and whether they should be advanced from one grade to another.

Mr. GLASS. It was the best we could get, because they have been so long and so pointedly discriminated against that to put them now on comparable terms with persons doing like work here in the District would involve an appropriation so large as perhaps to interfere with the Executive's financial policy. To avoid any question, those of us who speak for those men accepted this as the best we could get under the circumstances.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I appreciate the position of those on the committee who have been working for the employees in question. I want to say in this connection that the action of the wage board in allocating some of the clerks, particularly in the navy yard at Bremerton, in my own State, to an 8-hour day where they had been previously working a 7-hour day, with practically no increase in wages, is a step that certainly should be prevented in future legislation. I shall not offer any amendment or legislation at this time, but I think that the action of the Secretary of the Navy in supporting the allocation of employees as it was made by the last wage board, compelling them to work eight hours a day at the same wage they had been getting for seven hours a day, is indefensible. I think it is a meting out of punishment to those employees against whose records there is no objection whatsoever. While the number affected is small, yet to them individually it is extremely important. I hope that the policy will not be enlarged upon by the Navy Department in the future.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I have another amendment which I now send to the desk and offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 47, line 21, after the word "thereof," insert the words "or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work," so as to make the sentence read:

No part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person or persons having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Maine what is the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. HALE. It simply provides what was in the bill the last time. It was stricken out in the House on a point of order.

Mr. KING. Upon examining the text I understand the purpose of the amendment, and I have no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I desire to offer my amendment, which is lying on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 48, line 24, strike out the numerals "$174,380" and in lieu thereof insert "$178,560," so as to make the paragraph read:

Naval Observatory, including $2,500 for pay of computers on piecework in preparing for publication the American Ephemeris and Nautical

Almanac and in improving the tables of the planets, moon, and stars, $178,560.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, this is an item affecting the Naval Observatory employees. I brought this matter before the committee and called their attention to the fact that the observatory had made an estimate of $177,320, and that the estimate was approved by the budget officer of the Navy Department. When it reached the Director of the Budget there was stricken from the total the sum of $4,140, which was an item intended to raise the salaries of 26 employees of that bureau whose salaries are very much below the average salaries of people in their grade. In fact, it was stated that this amount would cover only 50 per cent of the actual sum necessary to bring these employees, who number 26, to the average of the grades in their employment. At the time I submitted this matter I got the impression—I do not want to speak for the committee—that the committee favored it. The chairman of the committee made inquiry at the Navy Department, and we were told that an amendment adopted in the House—which, of course, was subsequent to the time that the Director of the Budget had acted—would take care of these employees. That amendment, which is found on page 50, reads as follows:

When specifically approved by the Secretary of the Navy, transfers may be made between the appropriations in this act under the respective jurisdiction of any bureau, office, board, or corps, in order to meet increases in compensation resulting from the reallocation by the Personnel Classification Board of positions under any such organization unit. Any such transfers shall be reported to Congress in the annual Budget.

At the time the chairman read the amendment to the committee I disagreed with him, because it would seem to me that if that amendment took care of those employees the Navy Department would not have approved its application. So yesterday, Mr. President, I wrote to the Chief of the Naval Operations, and, in order that the RECORD may show the whole transaction, I ask that my letter to Rear Admiral Leigh, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, be printed without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

FEBRUARY 21, 1929.

Rear Admiral RICHARD H. LEIGH,
Chief Bureau of Navigation, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR ADMIRAL LEIGH: You will recall that when the naval appropriation bill was before the Appropriations Committee I made certain inquiries of Admiral McVay concerning salaries paid the employees of the Naval Observatory, and I was told you had this information, which could be given later when you testified.

When before the committee your testimony was first directed to such changes as had been made in the House and to such amendments as were pending before the committee. Before I had an opportunity of taking this up and bringing out the facts the chairman of the committee was informed by the department that an amendment was added in the House, reading as follows:

"When specifically approved by the Secretary of the Navy, transfers may be made between the appropriations in this act under the respective jurisdiction of any bureau, office, board, or corps, in order to meet increases in compensation resulting from the reallocation by the Personnel Classification Board of positions under any such organization unit. Any such transfers shall be reported to Congress in the annual Budget"— met this case and would enable these employees to be cared for. I am advised that this amendment, above quoted, adopted in the House does not cover the cases estimated for these employees, because the additional amount requested was not to take care of employees promoted from one grade to another, but had been proposed to raise the average of these employees nearer the average of their grades, and that even the amount asked was only 50 per cent of the amount necessary to bring them up to the average of their grades.

The amount asked in addition to that allowed by the director of the bureau was $4,140. I am informed that the Naval Observatory estimate was $177,320, and that this amount had been allowed by the budget officer of the Navy Department, but disallowed by the Director of the Budget.

The naval appropriation bill comes up for consideration to-day, and inasmuch as my present understanding is that we were misinformed as to this matter, I would like for you to write me immediately as a member of the Appropriations Committee whether the Naval Observatory estimated the amount above stated and whether your department allowed this estimate. And, further, whether the amendment adopted in the House and quoted herein at the beginning of my letter would enable justice to be done in remedying in part the comparatively low salaries paid to the employees of the Naval Observatory.

I would consider it a special favor if you would write me at once, as I may need this information at any time. I may add that it was my impression that a majority of the committee were in sympathy with my efforts to try to increase this item, but desisted when we were told the amendment of the House took care of the situation.

Thanking you for an immediate reply, I am,

Yours very truly,

EDWIN S. BROUSSARD.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I now wish to read the letter in response to the one I wrote to Rear Admiral Leigh.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I have taken this matter up with the Navy Department, and I find the department mentioned it in their recommendation to the Budget, but the Budget turned it down. I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment, so far as I am concerned, and take it to conference, but I can tell the Senator that it is doubtful what the result will be.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I should like very much for the Senate to be made acquainted with this letter, and I want it in the RECORD because the House has not adopted this amendment and I should like to have this evidence made available. The letter, amongst other things, states that the provision of the House bill does not apply to these employees. The letter reads as follows:

FEBRUARY 21, 1929.

Hon. EDWIN S. BROUSSARD,
United States Senator.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have received your letter of February 21, 1929, with reference to the salaries under the Naval Observatory in connection with the naval appropriation bill, which you state will come up for consideration to-day.

The amount originally asked for by the Naval Observatory and approved by the Navy Department was $177,320, and the Director of the Bureau of the Budget sent in the estimate for $173,180, or $4,140 less than the Observatory felt it needed. Subsequent to the submission of the estimate the attention of the Bureau of the Budget was called to the fact that increases had been allowed by the Personnel Classification Board which further increased the Observatory's obligation by $1,200. This item was accepted by the Bureau of the Budget and the Committee on Appropriations of the House, and the bill as it came out of the committee provided for $174,380 for salaries, Naval Observatory. This amount still does not take care of the increases desired which amount to $4,140 and brings the total figure needed to $178,520, which represents the addition of the $4,140 to the figure finally allowed by the House.

It is this bureau's understanding that the amendment referred to in your letter is merely to meet increases in compensation resulting from reallocation of positions by the Personnel Classification Board in 1930 and is not applicable to the cases you have in mind to be covered by the $4,140.

Sincerely yours,

T. R. KURTZ, Acting.

In view of the fact that the chairman of the committee has accepted the amendment, I shall not speak longer upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk which I now offer and desire that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 44, at the end of line 19, it is proposed to add the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to maintain marines in Nicaragua or to transport marines to and from Nicaragua.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I shall speak but briefly on the amendment; but I want to remind the Senate that a year ago while the naval appropriation bill was here under consideration when a similar amendment was offered great emphasis was placed upon the fact that an agreement had been made through Mr. Stimson that the marines would be kept in Nicaragua in order to supervise the election which was to be held there last fall. That election has been held; the new President of Nicaragua is in charge; and yet we see no signs whatever of withdrawing the marines; in fact, we are occasionally treated to an announcement in the newspapers that some American boy in Nicaragua has been killed or wounded. Only this morning I read in a morning newspaper a statement to the effect that the new airport fields in Nicaragua are to be named after dead aviators of the American marines. Think what a beautiful memory it will be to the Nicaraguan people to be reminded in future years by the names of the landing fields in their country of the marines who have been among them shooting down their comrades from time to time! I quote from a newspaper clipping as follows:

Five landing fields in Nicaragua have been given the surnames of four marine aviators who lost their lives in service there during the last 18 months, and one honoring Capt. R. J. Archibald killed at Langley Field, Va., last November, who selected the 12 landing fields in Nicaragua.

The fields named are Archibald Field, Managua, for Captain Archibald, of Wheeling, W. Va.; Byrd Field, Puerto Cabezas, in honor of Capt. W. C. Byrd, Greenwood, S. C., killed at Esteli when his plane collided with a buzzard; Thomas Field, Ocotal, honoring Lieut. E. A. Thomas, Richmond, Va., killed in action against insurgents in a forced landing at Sepo lla Ridge; Dowdell Field, Apali, for Sergt. F. E. Dowdell, Carbondale, Ill., killed under similar circumstances; and Frankforter Field, Esteli, for Pvt. R. A. Frankforter, Quantico, Va., killed in the crash with Captain Byrd.

The rule of the American marines continues in a foreign land.

More than 20 years ago President Roosevelt induced the Central American Republics to join in a treaty by which it was agreed that none of them would interfere in the civil wars of their neighbors by taking sides either with the government or against the government. Within two or three years after that agreement was entered into the United States itself took advantage, contrary to what it had induced the countries of Central America not to do, of an opportunity to interfere on the side of one of the parties making trouble in Nicaragua. Our record in Nicaragua from that time until now has been a series of untenable and indefensible actions. After the election, which was held under our own auspices, with which certainly we ought to be satisfied, and with which the people of Nicaragua ought to be satisfied, it seems to me the marines could be withdrawn. The amendment does not propose to rush them out in 30 days or 40 days, but allows them to be retained in Nicaragua until the 1st of July, when it will become effective. When at last a government has been established in Nicaragua by the will of the people at an election honestly held and against which no complaint has been made by anybody, it seems to me that it is not an unreasonable proposal that the marines shall be withdrawn, as this amendment would compel them to be withdrawn, by the 1st of July.

Mr. HEFLIN obtained the floor.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BRATTON. I merely desire to ask the Senator from Washington a question. I have previously expressed myself as being entirely out of sympathy with the policy of maintaining indefinitely American marines in Nicaragua. I do not think the occurrences prior to this time justify keeping the marines there hereafter; but the question I desire to direct to the Senator from Washington is this: Suppose during the life of this appropriation bill new circumstances should arise which would obligate our Government to send marines to Nicaragua in order to protect the lives and property of Americans there—that is to say, an emergency enjoining the duty upon the Government to protect our people as to life and property—does the Senator think the amendment is broad enough to take away that power and make it impossible for the Government to discharge that well-recognized duty in an emergency of that kind? If so, does he think it is wise for us to go that far?

Mr. DILL. It may be that my amendment is a little too broad, in that it provides that the marines shall not be maintained there. My purpose, of course, is to compel the withdrawal of the marines and also to prevent their again being sent to Nicaragua and kept there unless American lives shall actually be in danger. The fact of the matter is that the only American lives that were in danger when the marines were sent to Nicaragua the last time were those of the American marines themselves who were sent there. There were not over two Americans who were in danger in the beginning.

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator and I are in accord on the principle involved. Let me suggest to him the wisdom of adding to his amendment language substantially to this effect:

Except in case of an emergency occurring hereafter endangering life or property or both of American citizens.

So that the amendment would apply to the present situation, but would not circumscribe the Executive as to circumstances transpiring after the approval of the act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have great sympathy for the amendment of the Senator from Washington; I think some such amendment ought to be adopted; but I hope he will accept the language suggested by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DILL. I am willing to accept it, although I think that the Marine Corps officers, and the President, if he so desired, might take advantage of it to keep the marines there; but, in order that there may be no question about the vote of the Senate on the proposal to withdraw the marines, I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I now wish to submit a few remarks. Senators can discuss the other phases of the subject after I am through.

The resolution referred to by the Senator from Washington is one which was submitted by me months and months ago, but no action has been taken by the Senate upon it. The suggestion has been made from time to time that the marines would be kept in Nicaragua until after the election there. As the Senator from Washington has correctly stated the election is over, and there is no excuse now, so far as I can see, for keeping the marines down there any longer, unless we are going to adopt an imperial policy and send our troops out to police various nations of the earth, to clean up their governments for them, to quell rebellion, and to permit one or the other of the belligerent parties, those on whichever side we may take, to retire, as was done in this instance, from the battle field, where there is danger and death, and put our troops in peril in their stead. That is what we did in Nicaragua. It is a bloody chapter, Senators, in the history of this Government. The soldiers of Diaz retired from the field.

They were no longer out in the mountain fastnesses and in the dangerous places, meeting the enemy in the open, and being shot down. It was our troops that endured that danger and went down to death, many of them, while engaged in that character of warfare.

I think we have done enough for Nicaragua. We have gone down there and kept our marines there at great expense, and many of them have died in the conflict. We have stayed, now, until they have set up a stable government. They have had an election. There is no reason for keeping them there any longer. The Senate owes it to the fathers and mothers of America whose boys are down there now to bring them back home and let them live under the flag in peace, instead of holding them there to carry on somebody's government in a foreign country.

Those people have their Government now. They have elected their President, and apparently they are getting along very well. I am in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL]. If such an emergency arises as the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] has suggested, his amendment does not keep the President from sending marines back. The President has the power now, if he ever had it in the outset, to send them down there; and the fact that we are withdrawing these marines now would not preclude the President from sending marines there again if a situation should arise that demanded it in the protection of American rights and interests. If any emergency should arise, we will be here in extra session from about the 10th of April until the 1st of July, and we can provide by act of Congress for any emergency.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. What is the amendment now, since it has been modified?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I shall be glad to have the Senator from New Mexico read his amendment.

Mr. BRATTON. The amendment now reads as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to maintain marines in Nicaragua or to transport marines to or from Nicaragua except in cases of emergency arising hereafter endangering life or property, or both, of American citizens.

Mr. CARAWAY. How are they to come home if we prevent their being transported from Nicaragua?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not see any necessity of preventing them from being transported from Nicaragua.

Mr. DILL. They must be brought home before the 1st of July.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not see any necessity for putting in there a statement that they can not be transported from Nicaragua. That is what I should like to do. I should like to have them transported from Nicaragua and then not transported back.

Mr. BORAH. I thought the amendment had been changed so that that could be done.

Mr. HEFLIN. So that we could bring them out?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, this amendment, if agreed to, as I take it, would require the Government to bring the marines back before this appropriation goes into effect.

Mr. McKELLAR. It would.

Mr. NORRIS. So that it would have the effect of bringing them out by the 1st of July?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes. I think that ought to be done.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BLEASE. Does not the Senator from Alabama think we had better leave them over there until the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] gets over there with his committee to look after the Nicaraguan canal?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; I am in favor of the joint resolution of the Senator from New Jersey. The able Senator from my State, who was here for a number of years, Senator Morgan, predicted that the time would come when we would have to build a Nicaraguan canal and that the Panama Canal would be out of commission if we did; and I think he was right about that. I think we ought to have two canals, anyhow, so that if anybody took possession of one we would have the other.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. DILL. In response to the Senator from South Carolina, I want to say that the adoption of this amendment would do more to remove opposition to the joint resolution of the Senator from New Jersey than any other one thing that could be done by the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. I think so, too.

Mr. President, I want to repeat that a fine boy from my State was killed in this Nicaraguan row. I asked the Government to send his remains home, and they reached home just a few days ago; and he has been buried down there in the old family burying ground in my State. He was killed a year or more ago. It is time that the Senate was giving serious thought to such acts as this that we have committed, of going down into Nicaragua and retiring from the field Diaz and his troops, removing them from danger, putting our troops out in front, having them bear all the brunt of the battle, getting them killed, spending vast sums of money, setting up a government for the people of Nicaragua, and then continuing to keep the marines there. I think we ought to bring them home.

I shall vote for the Senator's amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if Senators will remember the debate that took place on this subject at the last session of Congress, last year——

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to make a further suggestion?

Mr. NORRIS. I have only 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. NORRIS. If Senators will refer to that debate they must, it seems to me, reach the conclusion that every reason given then for maintaining an army in Nicaragua has now disappeared from the face of the earth.

After that debate had gone on for some time there was practically an agreement one evening, about this time of day, that would have brought about the unanimous adoption of a modified amendment. Next morning, however, when the Senate convened Senators had changed their minds about it, and the agreement was not carried out.

It was claimed then that while perhaps we had no right to send our marines down to Nicaragua in the first place, nevertheless we had them there; that since they had been there an agreement had been made that they should supervise an election; that an election should be held, and that the American Government, through its marines, would see that an honest election was held. It was claimed that that agreement had been made with these people in Nicaragua, and it was even said that most of the insurgent army had surrendered their arms on account of that agreement, and therefore, even though the agreement was contrary to law and made by the President without authority, that it would be a violation of good faith for us to take our army away until that agreement had been fully complied with and the election held.

Mr. McKELLAR. What excuse has he now?

Mr. NORRIS. The election was held last fall. The new officials have been installed in office. We were told by the Government officials that there were only a few bandits left. The other day I read that the Sandino army had been half captured; that one marine had captured a bandit, and the other member of the Sandino army unfortunately had escaped; and still we keep our marines there.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. NORRIS. If it is a question; yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Senator realize that the President elected was the Liberal, General Moncado, and that he himself, being afraid of the Conservatives, requests the retention of the marines?

Mr. NORRIS. Is that any reason why we should send our Army into a foreign country—because some representative of a political party or a faction asks that they be kept there? If that is a good reason, then we had better bid good-bye to international law, and say to the world, "Whoever wants our Army, ask for it; we will send it over to you and run your government for you."

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, we went to Nicaragua and established a government. We made an agreement with ourselves, in the first place, that we would supervise this election, and we have been there ever since. We went in there, I think, without any authority. We stayed there without any authority. We held an election without any authority in a foreign land at the point of the bayonet. We would not stand for holding that kind of an election here in our own country, under our own flag, and at the expense of the American taxpayer. It is such conduct as this that has brought us into disrepute and made all the nations south of the Rio Grande suspicious of our actions. Having made an agreement to hold an election, having practically a unanimous understanding here that when the election was held we would take away our Army; the election has been held, months have passed, we read in the paper every few days of the bandit army being exterminated, and still our Army is there.

I do not see any excuse for it; and if somebody who is elected President wants the marines to stay, that is not any reason why they should stay. Has the administration been fair with the country? Have we heard of all the accidents and the deaths of our own men that have been brought about on account of this foreign war? Have we ever been told of the hundreds of women and children and men—unarmed men, unarmed women, unarmed children—who have been killed by bombs dropped from the air by our forces? Do we know half of the truth now? And yet our Army still stays in Nicaragua.

Mr. President, it seems to me no reasonable excuse can be given why they should stay there any longer. If the President wants to keep an army in a foreign country it is his duty, as I look at it, to communicate officially with Congress, set forth the facts, give the reasons why in his judgment an army should be maintained permanently in a foreign country, and then let Congress pass on it; let the lawmaking body decide whether the money that is wrung from the American people by taxation shall be used for the purpose of carrying on war in a foreign country under a different name than war.

Why is it that we have not been told why the Army stays in Nicaragua? Why is it that the Army is still there? Why are we not entitled to official notice and information as to the judgment of those who are responsible, giving the reasons why they think the Army ought to remain? Who is it that should decide whether we shall maintain a standing army in a foreign country against the will and the wish and without the consent of the real people of that country, or even with their consent? Who is going to advocate as a proposition of international law that the President, without any act of Congress under our Constitution, can keep a standing army in a foreign country even with the consent of the officials whom as a matter of fact we have elevated to office?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Just what does the Senator mean by "we have elevated to office"?

Mr. NORRIS. I said a minute ago that as a matter of fact we established a government in Nicaragua at the point of the bayonet. Then we made an agreement with the Government. We did that when we agreed to the last treaty with the Government of Nicaragua, and we maintained that Government and kept it in power by our soldiers.

That is what I mean, that we established the Government. This Government which is now in power in Nicaragua is in power, I understand, by virtue of the election that has been held, which we supervised, and it was said then, "Everybody wants us to hold that election; both sides have agreed; only a few bandits oppose it." And it has been reported that there have been killed four or five times the number they were supposed to have. Both sides wanted us to hold the election so that it would be fair. It is said now that we held it and that it was fair. I presume that is true. I have no evidence to the contrary, and we can assume that it was fair. So under the theory of those who wanted to keep our Army there, everything is peaceful, everything is lovely. We have had an honest election. We have installed the people who were elected to office. Then what is the use of our Army down there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I do not know a clearer case than this for the application of the Turkish saying, "The dog barks; the caravan passes." It was only a few months ago that the very Senators who are now advocating this amendment were decrying in the bitterest language the course of our administration in relation to Nicaragua. What it has done in Nicaragua fully deserves what I said at that time by way of commendation of the action of our Government in all such cases. I said then that there has not been a case on record for generations in which our country has ever intervened in any foreign land except for the purpose of conferring a lasting blessing on it.

When all that invective was indulged in, of course the election had not come off in Nicaragua. Now it has been held. The action of our Government in refusing to withdraw its marines at that time has been completely, triumphantly, incontestably vindicated. For the first time in many, many years there has been a fair election in Nicaragua, an election not tainted by either fraud or violence, an election so fair that both of the national parties in Nicaragua are satisfied with it, and have so expressed themselves.

At this very moment our marines, as I understand it, are remaining in Nicaragua because the present Nicaraguan Government, the one chosen at that election, made a request that they should remain there a little longer.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BRUCE. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. It is my understanding, without having the figures at hand, that a large proportion of the marines have already been sent back to this country, and they are being sent back just as fast as it seems to be proper to return them, in view of the changed condition of the country.

Mr. BRUCE. I have no doubt that the Government is exercising the same good sense and the same sound discretion——

Mr. DILL. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRUCE. I am sorry, but my time is limited, and I can not yield further.

Mr. DILL. The Senator's suggestion was so misleading that I thought it ought to be replied to. The only marines taken out were the marines needed on the boats.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I think that is absolutely incorrect.

Mr. BORAH. The Government has taken out about 1,200.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland declines to yield.

Mr. BRUCE. For the purpose of my argument it is immaterial whether marines have left Nicaragua or not. My own belief is that the executive branch of this Government will not keep any of them there any longer than is really necessary for the accomplishment of what must be done, and when it is a sensible thing to bring such of our marines as are there back to this country the executive branch of the Government will bring them back.

The very success with which our Government has performed its mission in Nicaragua—the splendid success, the undeniable success—is made the basis for an argument by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] that we should bring the marines back now. "No longer," he says, "is there any occasion for keeping them there, because they have had an election—a perfectly fair election—an election satisfactory to both parties in Nicaragua." He is citing the success with which our Government has executed a part of its task as a reason why it should not be allowed to perform the balance of its task. What sort of logic is that?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

Mr. BRUCE. I yield.

Mr. DILL. The Senator will recall that I was in favor of withdrawing the marines a year ago.

Mr. BRUCE. I know the Senator was.

Mr. DILL. And then the Senator and others who agreed with him gave as the reason why we should not withdraw them the fact that they were to be there to take charge of an election. Now, when the election has been held—and I never questioned but that they would have an election—now that it has been held, the Senator has not any argument.

Mr. BRUCE. I stated also that they should remain there as long as it was necessary to assure the continuance of the beneficial fruits of that election. Why should the Senator from Washington be so dissatisfied with the situation when it seems there is no dissatisfaction on the part of the Nicaraguan people?

Mr. DILL. I am dissatisfied because American boys are down there.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator's conception of a soldier is very different from mine. I would just like to know to what better purposes one of these boys of whom the Senator speaks can be put as a soldier than that of risking his limbs or his life in the cause of his country?

Mr. DILL. Any purpose is better than to be kept there to allow Americans to exploit Nicaragua and collect loans by force of arms.

Mr. BRUCE. Now the Senator is leaving his other ground and taking a different ground. The Senator is talking about these boys as if they were ordinary civilians. They are soldiers; and if one of my sons had perished in Nicaragua, I should have been filled with pride at the thought that an airport in Nicaragua was to be named after him. We all know that the idea would never have been considered of naming those airports after any of our marines who perished in Nicaragua, except with the full consent of the Government, Nicaragua and of its people, unless you include among its people this mountain bandit, Sandino, and a small party of lawless ragamuffins who follow in his train.

There is a Senator who can clear up this whole situation without difficulty. If the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, fully in touch with the present situation, can say that there is any reason why we should withdraw the appropriation for this purpose, I for one am ready to vote for this amendment. If he is not prepared to say that to us, then I most assuredly for one will vote against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 44, line 19, after the word "fund," insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to maintain marines in Nicaragua or to transport marines to and from Nicaragua, except in cases of emergency arising hereafter endangering life or property, or both, of American citizens.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCKELLAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who is away on account of illness. I am told that if present he would vote as I intend to vote, and so I vote "yea."

Mr. FRAZIER (when Mr. NYE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. NYE] has been called from the Chamber. He is paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS]. If the Senator from North Dakota were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. LARRAZOLO] and vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES. I desire to state that the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

I also desire to announce that the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is necessarily absent.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is necessarily detained on official business.

Mr. OVERMAN. I rise to announce that my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. PHIPPS (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] and let my vote stand.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to announce that if my colleague [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] were present and voting, he would vote "yea."

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS];

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]; and

The Senator from Maine [Mr. GOULD] with the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—38

Dill	Ashurst	McMaster	Swanson
Barkley	Frazier	Mayfield	Thomas, Idaho
Black	Gerry	Neely	Thomas, Okla.
Blaine	Glass	Norris	Trammell
Blease	Harris	Overman	Tyson
Borah	Hayden	Pine	Walsh, Mass.
Bratton	Heflin	Sheppard	Walsh, Mont.
Brookhart	Jones	Smith	Wheeler
Capper	King	Steck
Caraway	McKellar	Stephens

NAYS—30

Bingham	Hale	Oddie	Steiwer
Broussard	Hastings	Phipps	Vandenberg
Bruce	Hawes	Ransdell	Wagner
Couzens	Johnson	Reed, Pa.	Warren
Deneen	Kendrick	Robinson, Ind.	Waterman
Edge	McNary	Sackett	Watson
Fess	Moses	Schall
Goff	Norbeck	Shortridge

NOT VOTING—27

Bayard	George	Keyes	Reed, Mo.
Burton	Gillett	La Follette	Robinson, Ark.
Copeland	Glenn	Larrazolo	Shipstead
Curtis	Gould	McLean	Simmons
Dale	Greene	Metcalf	Smoot
Edwards	Harrison	Nye	Tydings
Fletcher	Howell	Pittman

So Mr. DILL's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I reserve the right to have a separate vote in the Senate on the amendment.

I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 6 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, February 23, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, February 22, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by Mr. TILSON, as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou who dwellest in the heavens and earth, unto Thee will we lift up our eyes—Thou who holdest up the soul of the Nation and suffereth not its feet to be moved. Our souls are exceedingly filled with gratitude; let all the people praise Thee. We thank Thee for our country, with its broad lands and fertile vales, consecrated with the patriot's prayer and made billowy with our fathers' graves. Fortunate the people who can bring up their youth in the memory of the heroic deeds of patriots. Our thoughts stay on him who made possible our natal day, which proclaims the ideal Americanism. The heart of every lover of liberty, every dreamer of the finest ideals of free institutions, is going out in praise to Thee for the Father of the Republic, whose dust rests yonder beneath the terraced green of Mount Vernon. With him, intelligence, equal opportunity, and justice were the watchwords. Bless our native land, where life means growth, power, maturity, and Christian service. Allow no discord to mar our national brotherhood, but may all seek to serve all. Remembering Thy bountiful providence, we pray that the Gentle One, whose soft touch fell on the upturned foreheads of little children and opened wide His sheltering arms to all, doth now enfold in the infinite stretches of His mercy and wisdom our civilization and the world. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 4084. An act for the relief of the persons suffering loss on account of the Lawton (Okla.) fire, 1917;

H. R. 9168. An act for the relief of Simon A. Richardson;

H. R. 9597. An act for the relief of Fred Elias Horton.

H. R. 9659. An act for the relief of F. R. Barthold.

H. R. 10191. An act for the relief of G. J. Bell;

H. R. 11385. An act for the relief of Dr. Andrew J. Baker;

H. R. 14153. An act to authorize an additional appropriation of $150,000 for construction of a hospital annex at Marion Branch;

H. R. 14924. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to grant to the city of Salt Lake, Utah, a portion of the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, Utah, for street purposes;

H. R. 14466. An act to provide for the sale of the old post-office property at Birmingham, Ala.;

H. R. 16568. An act to repeal that portion of the act of August 24, 1912, imposing a limit on agency salaries of the Indian Service; and

H. J. Res. 135. Joint resolution for the relief of special disbursing agents of the Alaska Railroad.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R 924. An act for the relief of Joe D. Donisi;

H. R. 4266. An act for the relief of certain officers and former officers of the Army of the United States, and for the settlement of individual claims approved by the War Department;

H. R. 5769. An act to authorize the consolidation and coordination of Government purchases, to enlarge the functions of the General Supply Committee, and for other purposes;

H. R. 11285. An act to establish Federal prison camps; and

H. R. 13461. An act to provide for the acquisition of land in the District of Columbia for the use of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1688. An act for the relief of Gabriel Roth;

S. 2204. An act to amend section 284 of the Judicial Code of the United States;

S. 2213. An act providing against misuse of official badges;

S. 4817. An act for the relief of the Federal Construction Co. (Inc.);

S. 5349. An act to amend section 9 of the Federal reserve act and section 5240 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes.

S. 5632. An act to provide for producers and others the benefit of official tests to determine protein in wheat for use in merchandising the same to the best advantage, and for acquiring and disseminating information relative to protein in wheat, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 100. Joint resolution to provide for appropriate military records for persons who, pursuant to orders, reported for military duty, but whose induction into the service was not, through no fault of their own, formally completed on or prior to November 30, 1918.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3848) entitled "An act creating the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission and defining its purposes and powers."

ADDRESS OF HON. FRANKLIN FORT

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech delivered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FORT] before the Lincoln Club of St. Paul on February 12, 1929.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me by the House I desire to insert in the RECORD an address delivered by Representative FRANKLIN FORT, of New Jersey, before the Lincoln Club, of St. Paul, on February 12. Under the title, "National Problems," Mr. FORT outlined some of the problems which now confront our country and which will engage much of the time of the Seventy-first Congress. Mr. FORT's clear grasp of his subject evoked much favorable comment among those who were so fortunate as to hear him, and I have received a number of very commendatory letters from Minnesota leaders who heard him on that occasion.

The speech is as follows:

NATIONAL PROBLEMS

It will hardly startle you when I say that last November we Republicans won an overwhelming victory which will be finally consummated on March 4 by the inauguration of Herbert Hoover and CHARLES CURTIS and the seating of a vastly increased majority in the House and a safe majority in the Senate. If you accept the judgment of the press, the plums are ours as the fruit of the victory.

To me, this is sheer nonsense. A party which wins control of the Government of this Nation wins responsibility, not reward; and the responsibility is greater in proportion to the size of its majority. And the party which, when it has won, approaches March 4 in the mood of exultant victory rather than of sober thoughtfulness will have its sober mood after the next election.

Our exultation to-night is not as we look ahead, but behind. For 52 out of the last 68 years of American history, the Republican Party has been in control of the Government of this country. And as a whole, those 68 years have marked the greatest period of advancement, both in material progress and in the higher things of life, of any like period in the history of any nation in the world. This could not have been if our policies had been unwise or our administration unworthy.

The three great economic struggles of the period have been for the abolition of slavery, the establishment of sound money, and the preservation of our home market for our own producers. On all we have been right; we have won; and to-day our opponents no longer oppose. The development of our fine transportation systems; the opening of the great western half of the country; and now the vast enlargement of our foreign commerce have all been under Republican guidance. And no one will deny that all of these splendid economic policies and achievements have gone hand in hand with the development of education and recreation, with shorter hours of labor and care of the needy. Upon this record we can exult. And with this behind us we can not but feel doubly charged with responsibility—responsibility to the Nation and responsibility to hand on that fine record of service which has come down to us, unimpaired to the hands that shall carry on when we are through.

So to-night it seems to me that we may well study the problems that confront us and see what kind of a job we have to perform.

Broadly speaking, the problems which concern our Government fall into two classes—those which are economic in character, affecting chiefly the business structure of our country and the material well-being of our people, and those which affect the intangible things of life, the mental, the moral, and the spiritual. The line of demarcation is often not clear, however. It would be difficult, indeed, to say, for example, whether the moral or the economic effect of Lincoln's abolition proclamation outweighed the other.

But, roughly, the motive for the adoption of policies of government falls either in one or the other class. And generally the economic problems which affect the material prosperity of the people or the distribution of shares in that prosperity evenly among the people are the problems of most immediate and vital interest.

In the three-quarters of a century since the Republican Party was formed the whole economic structure of the Nation was changed—at no time with more dazzling rapidity than in the last eight years. In the fifties factories were merely for local supply and were generally close to their raw materials. Transportation was limited to a few railroads with no unity of operation and a few canals. Beyond the territory these served horses were the motive power, with mud for a roadbed. The cities were supplied with their foodstuffs chiefly from near-by farms, refrigeration was practically unknown, and the winter's chief supplies were warehoused in the city itself. Telegraph and telephone were unknown as the nerves of commerce. Publicity and advertising as we know them were unthought of. Goods were sold on the reputation of the merchant, not of the brand. Practically all forms of business were owned by individuals or partnerships and were handed down from father to son.

Then, partly with Government aid, our railroad systems expanded and rapidly increased both the extent and efficiency of their service. Factories, able to get their raw materials in and their finished product out on these improved railroads, grew rapidly in proportion as their product was good. Still, however, they remained near their source of fuel, for that was the bulkiest of their freight in and out. Consequently the great bulk of industry settled east of the Mississippi River. Consequently, also, the cities east of the river began to grow by leaps and bounds, and as they grew they had to reach farther and farther for their supplies of food and clothing. No longer could the neighborhood supply their wants.

The telegraph and telephone came and communication between distant points became a matter of minutes instead of days and weeks. Orders could be transmitted and accepted over thousands of miles of intervening country in less time than an old-time long-hand letter took to write. Advertising as we now know it began, and goods began to be sold on trade names instead of the individual character of the merchant.

Corporations took over practically all forms of business except agriculture, smaller retailing and some of the groups of middlemen. In the majority of cases, however, dominating ownership and management of business remained in the hands of the old owners and operators.

Thus, did our economic structure look at the beginning of the World War. We were still in debt for vast sums to Europe; our exports, other than of agricultural products, were small; our needs for further capital investment were great and growing; and our major industries, our railroads and our utilities were owned in part abroad and for the balance largely by a relatively few rich men.

During the war, two things of vital importance occurred. First, we became a creditor instead of a debtor nation and educated our own people to invest. Second, we developed the mass-production methods exemplified by Henry Ford to an extent previously undreamed.

In the after war period, these two major changes brought a host of new situations. First, our new-found investing ability made it possible for our starved railroads to find the money first for refunding their debt and then for much-needed expansion and improvement. With the stabilization of their rates and a sufficiency of new capital their efficiency improved, until now ordinary freight moves faster than mail moved 50 years ago. As to many commodities this rapid movement of freight is relatively unimportant and the additional expense to the shipper and consumer unjustified, although, of course, from the general viewpoint the perfection of our present railroad service is of infinite value. The further improvement of our communications by wire, air mail, and radio has brought in yet closer touch producing and consuming centers and permits immediate dissemination of vital market news.

Simultaneously there has been an enormous expansion in our generation and distribution of electric power and a corresponding increase in our production of petroleum and its use as fuel. These two newly used sources of power have opened new territory as the possible site of industry, overcoming, as they do, the disadvantage of distance from the fuel market heretofore suffered. Along with this, the mass-production methods, involving in most industries the preparation of parts in vast quantities, have led to the erection of assembling plants in considerable numbers, to which parts are shipped from a central location. All of these developments have coincided to produce both structural and operating changes in industry. The structural change has been a rapidly accelerating movement toward merger of previously competing industries, partially to cut overhead, partially to secure a volume of business justifying mass production, and partially to secure strategic locations for manufacture, assembling, and distribution.

Other economic reasons have entered into the trend toward merger in different cases and, of course, many mergers have been largely for stock-market purposes. The latter class can result in profit to others than their promoters only if they produce genuine savings or new income greater than their promotion cost.

For the accomplishing of these purposes there has been a growing tendency toward an expansion of the functions of the corporation itself. This has taken two forms. In some cases the one-time producer of raw material only, as, for example, the Anaconda Copper Co., has also gone into the manufacture of the finished product and the public advertising of that finished product. In others, such as the General Motors Corporation, an entirely dissociated type of product, such as the electric refrigerator, has been added to the manufactured line as a source of revenue to help carry the enormous structure in the event of slack times in the main business and because it could be economically manufactured in connection with the electric-battery part of the main business. Thus the mergers have tended to produce major operating changes through bringing closer contact in the one case between production and utilization of the commodity, with corresponding vastly improved control of inventory, and in the other a reasonable assurance of continuity of operations in some division, no matter how slack times may become in another.

Inventory reduction with its accompanying reduced need of working capital has run hand in hand in many of our products of high-priced manufacture with the creation practically of a new form of credit in the installment-buying program in such products as motor cars, sewing machines, radios, and countless other articles of high value. The credit upon which these operations are based has been found largely from the decrease in use of credit in retail trade. A few years ago the necessities of life were purchased on credit and the luxuries for cash. To-day the necessities of life are purchased for cash, the luxuries on credit. Time only can tell how this will operate in a period of serious unemployment and business depression, but it would appear probable that at such a time the re-creation of credit systems for the necessities of life will be necessary.

This will certainly be true unless the savings campaign of recent years carries the bulk of the public through unemployment periods with cash or cashable resources. It may be that this will happen for, simultaneously with the creation of these enormous mergers, there has come a diffusion of ownership of our industry and utilities. Campaigns, first for consumer ownership; second, for employee ownership; and third, for the spread of ownership among the public, have resulted in a unique situation where, in some of our largest corporations, those actually operating the business as directors and officers own insignificant amounts of the capital stock. I have been told that in one of the largest and best known of all of our great corporate enterprises not over 1 per cent of the stock is owned by any one interest. In some cases, the ownership is so diffused that the total number of stockholders runs up toward a half million.

Along with all this has come a still further development of publicity in various forms. Nation-wide advertising campaigns without number, carried on at enormous expense, have built up trade names for almost all articles of consumption to the point where the quality and uniformity of the product and the name and personality through whose hands it reaches the public, is relatively of minor significance. In an older time, Emerson said that if a man in a wilderness invented a better mousetrap than anyone else had made, the world would beat a path to his door. To-day, if he failed to advertise the brand of cheese he used, probably not even a mouse would beat its way to the trap.

Running along with these changes has come a vast increase in the services which our people require. The operation of our communication systems, of our recreational devices, and, perhaps more than anything else, our tremendously developed insurance system requires the service of hundreds of thousands of people who, in the old sense, produce nothing. These services, with the concentration of publicity, of selling supervision as well as of industry in large communities, have caused our cities to grow far more rapidly than of old and the population of our cities to shift from point to point within the city and from city to city with a rapidity unknown a few years ago. All of this in turn has reflected again upon the status of the retail merchant as there ceases to be a steady neighborhood population to whom his name is a guaranty of fair dealing.

To sum up the whole situation, the trend of modern economic development in this Nation has, since the war, been notably adverse to the small producer, whether on the farm or in the factory, and to the small distributor, whether at wholesale or retail. Yet I think it will be disputed by no one that the small independent merchant, farmer, or manufacturer owning and operating his own business is a necessity if American life is still to provide its leaders and its sound second thought from the body of the people.

It will readily be seen that old governmental methods and old trade practices can not be made to apply without change to such a group of changed conditions. For example in transportation, canals and waterways, with their tedious delays, were practically abandoned as arteries of commerce as the railroads improved. To-day we need cheaper transportation, particularly for those bulk commodities in the delivery of which time is not so much of the essence. The railroads can not justly be asked to give cheaper transportation, for to do so would lessen the efficiency and speed of their general service, which in turn is vital to such commodities, for example, as the dairy products of Minnesota. Consequently, we must return, in the interest primarily of our agriculture and secondarily of our fuel and ores, to the slower and cheaper handling of bulk commodities by waterways. I have no fear that this will diminish more than temporarily at the worst the prosperity of our railroads, for it is apparently a fact—illogical as it seems—that more transportation begets more freight. Otherwise, certainly our railroads could not have had the most prosperous period in their history simultaneously with the recent vast development of motor transportation. On this subject the path of the Government seems absolutely clear.

We must forthwith proceed with the development of the Mississippi and Missouri waterways and the building of a waterway from the Great Lakes to the sea. Such work belongs to the Government to perform, and I believe its performance by the Government is as assured as the adoption of any other policy now before the American people.

The indirect benefits of this policy should be quite as great as the direct ones, for industry has shown a natural disposition to settle at points of easy transportation. The increasing of the number of such points can not fail—particularly with the assembling method of manufacture of which I have spoken—to establish new industrial centers throughout the Nation, thus affording employment to many who now are engaged only in seasonal industry. Such relocation of manufacture is of particular interest in the farming communities, since it will afford an additional source of community income, furnish a larger near-at-hand market for the perishable commodities, and cheapen to some extent the cost of what the farmer must purchase. In its latter effect it should also benefit the small retailer, whose first cost of goods in competition with the chain store groups will be diminished the nearer he is to the factory which makes them.

Another vital need is a revision of our distributing system in the handling of many commodities. Already in some industries—copper, for instance—export trade is handled practically entirely cooperatively by all producers. In some domestic trades, goods are sold direct from the manufacturer to the consumer, either through mail orders or manufacturer's branch stores. All of this has resulted in changing the profession of salesmen very materially, and all of it in the domestic trade is the result of our publicity methods. For the expansion of their markets many other trades probably must unite in some form of cooperative selling. To my mind, there is absolutely no question but that this is true of most, if not all, of the products of agriculture.

I do not mean necessarily that the present form of cooperative association is the ultimate form, but it is and has always seemed to me an absurdity for 2,000,000 men growing wheat or cotton to sell competitively, one against the other, to a few buyers.

Nor does such a policy necessarily look toward the elimination of middlemen. Where those middlemen perform a service of economic value, for which they secure a return simply compensatory for the value of their service, there is no reason for their elimination. There are some trades where the elimination of the present middleman structure would be fatal, perhaps for years, to the whole industry. But, nevertheless, the value of cooperative effort in the elimination of competition between sellers and the consequent establishment of bargaining power for the group can not be successfully denied.

At the same time there is possible a like tremendous development of cooperative purchasing, not only as has heretofore been chiefly the case by community groups, but even more by groups of retailers. There are certain commodities of course where the element of taste or fashion applies, as to which the retailer's individual judgment will still prove his best guide and in which his real community service as against the chain store can best be performed, since he knows better what his community wants and will use; but, on the bulk of standardized commodities, the development of cooperative purchasing will give to the small merchant more than one of the great advantages now possessed by the chain-store systems. It will in the long run secure his commodity at lower price and it will reduce his capital investment in inventory through his ability to secure shipments from central distributing points maintained by his purchasing agency. Of course there are developments now going on within trade itself which may demonstrate that the efficiency of our old-time wholesaler-retailer system can be so improved as to render unnecessary these major departures from established trade systems. But only those middlemen can exist in any line of trade who prove their efficiency and who charge no greater toll for their services than the actual economic value of those services.

A place where some form of legislation must be devised, without question, is the further standardization of products and the further regulation of truth in advertising. Trade names established by advertising are capable of misuse without the knowledge of the consumer by minor modification of the quality of the product, without affecting the size of the package or its weight or volume content. Modern purchasers are willing to pay for quality and they are entitled to protection against misrepresentation on this point through the misuse of trade names or advertising assertion.

Advertising having taken the place in the purchaser's mind that formerly was occupied by the reputation of the retailer, must assume the retailer's old-time danger of the loss of his good name through deception.

Similarly, standardization in many commodities is in the interest of the producer. The gravity of oil, the thermal units in coal, the protein content in wheat all affect the price that the original producer receives for his product. He is entitled to a definite fixation of these factors at that place in the distributing system where he will gain the benefit from high quality. Otherwise the Nation loses the incentive to high-quality production.

A completely new problem of the last eight years is due to the wide diffusion of stock ownership in our great corporations. The net result of it has been that the control at elections of directors is exercised by the holder of proxies from perhaps hundreds of thousands of absent stockholders. The effect also is that the operating management has a greater stake in the continuance of their control, and therefore of their salaries, than they have in the ultimate good either of the public or of the owners. This control is being pushed still further away from the real owners of the business by the vast increase in investment trust holdings of stock in other corporations. The real owners, of course, are the stockholders of the investment trust, but the management they have selected to run the investment trust issues the proxies to determine the management which shall run the industry. Out of this has come some benefit to the public and to labor, since the average management in these days of mass production is chiefly interested in the continuity of production and therefore often serves the public with lower prices and labor with higher wages to maintain this production. The management further regards the stockholder as one who must be kept happy by sufficient dividends, but whose money otherwise is for the expansion of the business.

The board of directors thus through proxy control, since they alone possess lists of stockholders and genuine information as to corporation internal affairs, have become of recent years practically self-perpetuating oligarchies. In most but not all cases this power appears to be and to have been honestly and capably exercised in the interest of both the public and the stockholders. For the first time, however, since this development a controversy is on in one of our great corporations in an effort to oust the dominating factors in the company.

I hold no brief either for Mr. Rockefeller or Colonel Stewart, but I regard the controversy between them as more pregnant in possibilities than any like event in American economic history. The issue is whether or not the directors of a corporation shall be retained in control simply upon the basis of the returns paid to the stockholders, or whether in these vast organizations of modern business their duty to the stockholders does not also include the recognition of a real public interest in the conduct of the business and the ways in which the profits are earned. Of course, these great industries can not escape public regulation if they use their power and size adversely to the public interest.

A new form of suffrage has come into existence—the right of a stockholder of a corporation to vote as such stockholder on the duty of his corporation to the Nation. In the particular controversy now waging the facts from the records of the United States Supreme Court disclose that there have reached the treasury of the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana profits unlawfully earned in a transaction against the public interest. The issue being raised by Mr. Rockefeller's demand for the retirement of the management responsible for this proceeding, that management counters by pointing to the vast growth of the company, the substantial dividends paid, of which it says these elusive profits were a part, and then caps the climax by voting a special stock dividend and a special cash dividend on the eve of the election. Of course, these latter proceedings simply give to the stockholders now profits heretofore withheld by the directors, presumably in the interest of the company's development, but in effect the proceeding is one of an effort to bribe the stockholders with their own money to vote their belief that the only duty of the management is to earn profits, no matter how or from what source.

If the result of the election in the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana shall be to indicate that the stockholders of that company approve of that theory of the duty of corporate managements, a vast increase in the degree of Federal supervision over industries in interstate commerce is inevitable and will be necessary. For the vindication of our managers of big business themselves, for the integrity of American business itself, I sincerely hope that the results of the election are a sweeping condemnation of the conduct of its management. American stockholders are on trial quite as much as is the management.

In this hasty and inadequate sketching of the trends and possible needs of our economic system I do not for a moment mean to assert even my own conviction that many of the changes which have occurred are necessarily bad. Indeed, I fully believe that many of them are of the highest value. For example, the socialization of the control of industry involved in the diffusion of stock ownership both promotes the public well-being and prevents or postpones at worst any thought of state socialism. But I have tried to sketch both problems and possible remedies affecting so many different phases of our life in order to point your thought to our problems as interrelated and not local or divergent. We are in the midst of an almost irresistible wave of economic change. We can not dam up its progress. The best we can hope to do is to guide it into the channels which will diminish its powers of destruction and increase its utility. This can not be done by short-cut legislative proposals nor accomplished in a day. It will need and must have the best thought of the best minds of the Nation.

For, after all, there is a group of problems more serious to our Nation, as a nation, than any of these economic problems. That group comes from the danger of sectionalism—sectionalism of interest, sectionalism of race, of creed, of class, of mental outlook, as well as the sectionalism that comes merely from location. Of course, some of us are producers of one type of commodity and some of another. Each producer, though, is also a consumer of what the other one produces. Each producer, therefore, benefits by the prosperity of the other producer, because through his prosperity he becomes an additional purchaser. Each section geographically in this Nation is directly dependent for its real prosperity upon the prosperity of every other section, and the same is true of every group within the Nation. The Civil War made us truly a United States. The Spanish War made us a united Nation, and the World War apparently made us a united people. We must not allow that great gain to be lost in the consideration of our merely economic problems nor permit our differences of racial ancestry, of the creed we believe, of mental approach to the problems that affect us all, of interest or of geography, to divide us on the consideration of those problems in which all of us are equally and vitally concerned. To me the greatest problem that faces the new administration—a problem emphasized by the nonsectional character of its majority—is the problem of amalgamating the American people's thought and feeling into an approach toward our material problems from the standpoint of the united interest of the Nation as a whole.

Madison, in the Federalist Papers, said that the Government would always be a government of compromise, because the diversity of interest of different sections would prevent any one section from acquiring control. The wisdom of this observation has been proven repeatedly. The danger of abandonment of this principle comes from the assertion of sectional interest by great groups with the modern utility of organized propaganda. To the utmost of our influence as individuals we must resist the approach to public questions from this viewpoint.

In doing so we must recall that our Constitution has functioned with remarkable and unprecedented success and carried us through, under the guidance of Lincoln, a catastrophe that would have wrecked any other nation in the world. Realizing this we should not permit ourselves to be hurried into disregard of its fundamental principles for the solution of a temporary or new trouble. Similarly our institutions—by which I mean, for example, the policy of American individualism, the policy of real fair play, the policy of acquiescence in the will of the majority, which sometimes are threatened by suggested cures for real or fancied troubles—have proven too wise and too beneficial to be hastily abandoned. On all these great economic questions, therefore, our first procedure must be to seek and find a remedy which keeps the Government out of business, which leaves the American owner of property, or the American business man, hampered as little as possible by the interference of Government agents, which preserves to him the right to control and operate his own affairs in his own way, so long as he does no wrong to his neighbor.

Another problem which confronts us now is that of observance and enforcement of law. This in its public acceptation, as a topic of controversial discussion, centers on the eighteenth amendment and the laws passed in pursuance thereof. It is a fact conceded by everyone that the eighteenth amendment is a permanent part of the Constitution of the United States. It is further conceded by all who have studied the question that no substantial change in the enforcing acts which would satisfy any great number of people now dissatisfied with them would carry out the constitutional mandate. We are therefore faced as a Nation with the question as to whether we as individual citizens will help to break down the respect for all law by nonobservance or direct defiance of one law.

To me this is not primarily a problem of enforcement but is a problem as to the best means of convincing the American people that the sporting thing to do is to bow to the authority and dignity of their Government and accord to its laws the same acquiescence that any good sport does give when he loses. Enforcement will become simple when otherwise good citizens cease to think it smart to flout the prohibitory statutes.

To many who, like myself, pride themselves upon a conservative outlook on public affairs, many of the problems I have discussed and many of the remedies I have suggested will seem to fall within the class of the hated word "Socialism," and they will look on substantial changes in our relations of government to business as disastrous to our institutions and particularly to our prized individualism. At times when I find myself in this attitude of mind I think back to the campaign of 1896, when all of us good Republicans went up and down the land shouting that Bryan's program was anarchistic. Well, what was it that we called anarchistic? First, the graduated income tax; second, graduated inheritance taxes; third, woman suffrage; fourth, prohibition; fifth, regulation of railroad rates and of industrial combinations. They have all come to pass, and never in the history of this or any other Nation have individuals prospered more greatly, have larger incomes been enjoyed, have greater fortunes been acquired and passed on at death, nor has the general well-being of the Nation been greater than in the last eight years in the United States, since all of these things were in simultaneous operation. The genuine rights of the individual have suffered not at all, although our construction of the powers of the Government in reference to personal property have changed so immensely. Similarly, we probably face in the future revisions of our notions as to real property. Indeed, almost without recognition, we are passing through such a period of change to-day. When I studied law I learned that the owner of a piece of real estate owned from the center of the earth to the zenith. To-day, as a property owner, I can not control the use of my land for the transmission of radio waves or the air for an airplane; nor, indeed, under modern zoning amendments, can I control the use I make of the surface of my land; and yet I do not see anyone giving away his real estate. It may well be that in the next generation or less the Nation will have to assert in the interests of posterity a measure of control over the use men make of the ores or oils under the surface of their lands. I believe that such changes, if the trend of the times requires them, can be made with as little disturbance to the real interests and welfare of the individual, his real freedom of action in essentials, as have the changes which have come since Bryan's day.

For the solution of these problems as a Government act, where the Government can act, I have only one or two suggestions. The first is popular recognition of what is meant by the representative system of government. To me this system is the absolute negation of direct action. In other words, you here in Minnesota should pick as your Representatives in Congress a group of men fairly representative of the average intelligence and character of their districts. Those men should then go to Washington to debate and listen to debate, to study these vast and complicated interrelated problems, and then to vote as in their judgment you would vote if you had been present, had debated and had studied, not with an eye singly to what at the moment seems the self-interest of their districts, but for that policy or group of policies that promises in the long run the most satisfactory results for the United States of America as a whole. The following out of this theory will, if I am right in the true unity of our interests, inevitably bring to each section more satisfaction and less trouble than will the system which makes the Representative a mere messenger boy for what the people "back home" think they want. If the job of a Member of Congress is to vote the sentiment of the people back home on legislation which changes its form from day to day, and consequently its intent and its possible performance, the Member might far better stay home, to know what the sentiment is, and vote by mail. On this question of public moment, where Members are left alone by their constituents, the judgment of the Congress of the United States is, to my way of thinking, apt to be right ninety-nine times in one hundred. I have sometimes told my people back home that the chief problem of a Member of Congress is his constituents. The development of a recognition of what representative government really is will do more to promote good government than any other one thing. You have from Minnesota to-day a splendid body of men in the House of Representatives, who are doing their work loyally and earnestly. Some are among the outstanding figures in the House. I honestly believe they will do a better job for you if you let them vote their judgment unhampered by instructions than if you insist upon their conceiving of themselves merely as your recording machine.

The second great thing that is needed is an enhanced sense of party responsibility. Nations of Europe, where the term of the executive and the legislative branches automatically ends when the executive ceases to have the support of the legislative, can possibly operate under a system containing three or more political parties. In the United States, however, where the term of the executive and the legislative officers is fixed by the Constitution, a different condition prevails.

The representatives can not and do not come home for instruction and reelection at every difference of opinion. Consequently, it is essential for the proper functioning of our system that the Executive should have the backing in the legislative branch of a genuine majority, with which he can work in harmony. Only the 2-party system can produce this result. Only the 2-party system can prevent government by blocs, which, in the last analysis, means, in this country, at least, government by some sectional group, who hold the balance of power, but who represent only a minority or a section of the people. This form of government will not operate in America.

Party responsibility can only be justly enforced by the people if the party representatives in official position are a unit in governmental action. This, in turn, can obtain only if party organization is efficient and militant.

There has been a wave in recent years of sentiment for so-called independence of party, and particularly of independence of party organizations. By party organization, of course, I do not mean so-called machines, but I do mean that group of devoted men and women who, believing in the fundamental principles of their party, regard it as their patriotic duty to make every effort to increase and maintain the strength of the party, because of its greater value as an instrument of government. As it seems to me, it is the duty of Americans to join actively one or the other of our great parties and to use their influence to see that that party is on the right side of public questions and picks men and women of the right caliber to administer them. I have little sympathy with the person who insists on drawing himself aside from this part of an American's duty and hides behind the title of independent. America can not be run that way. Of course, you and I and all of us reserve the right to punish our party and to defeat its representatives if they prove unfit and unworthy, or if they get on the wrong side of any major public question, but in the long run we will be better governed, and the Nation more unified, if men and women generally would take an active part in the affairs of a political party.

We Republicans can urge this upon our friends with pride in the record of our party; we can urge it with pride in the present of our party; we can urge it with confidence in the future of our party. We have given the Nation the leadership of Lincoln for our greatest time of internal travail. We have given to it the leadership of McKinley to help heal the wounds of the Civil War. We have given it the leadership of Roosevelt to teach those who grasp for power that the Nation was greater than any man or group of men. We have given it the leadership of Coolidge to reaffirm the confidence of the people in the honesty of their Government and to produce economy and efficiency in the administration of its affairs. And now we have given it, for the period when the most perplexing of economic problems press for solution, the best-trained economic mind that ever came to the chair, in the man who has never failed—Herbert Hoover.

OLIVER C. MACEY AND MARGUERITE MACEY

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (S. 1648) for the relief of Oliver C. Macey and Marguerite Macey.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts calls up the conference report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1648) entitled "An act for the relief of Oliver C. Macey and Marguerite Macey" having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said House amendment insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Oliver C. Macey, of Anne Arundel County, Md., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500 in full compensation for the death of his infant daughter, Eleanor Macey, who was killed December 14, 1925, by reason of the negligence of the operator of a United States Navy commissary truck.

"SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is also authorized and directed to pay to Marguerite Macey, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,250, in full compensation for personal injuries, medical and funeral expenses, and loss of automobile, which resulted by reason of the negligence of the operator of a United States Navy commissary truck."

And the House agree to the same.

CHARLES L. UNDERHILL,
JOHN C. BOX,
Managers on the part of the House.
THOMAS F. BAYARD,
GERALD P. NYE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 1648 submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

The amendment $3,750 agreed to provides $2,500 for the death of Eleanor Macey and $1,250 for injuries sustained by Marguerite Macey.

CHAS. L. UNDERHILL,
JOHN C. BOX,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER, CARROLLTON, KY.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 5630) authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Carrollton, Ky., a similar bill being on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois calls up the bill S. 5630, a similar House bill being on the House Calendar. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the reading of the bill will be dispensed with, it being in the usual form, and the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Carrollton, Ky., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS CHOPTANK RIVER, NEAR CAMBRIDGE, MD.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 5465) authorizing V. Calvin Trice, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Choptank River at a point at or near Cambridge, Md., a similar bill being on the House Calendar.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois calls up the bill S. 5465, a similar House bill being on the House Calendar, and without objection the reading of the bill will be dispensed with, it being in the usual form, but will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, V. Calvin Trice, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Choptank River at or near Cambridge, Md., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Maryland, any political subdivision thereof within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches and any interests in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or condemnation in accordance with the laws of such State governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge and its approaches the same is acquired by condemnation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion cost, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 3. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by any municipality or other political subdivision or subdivisions of the State of Maryland under the provisions of section 2 of this act, and if tolls are charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid for such bridge and its approaches as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of acquiring the bridge and its approaches shall have been provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper care, repair, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches. An accurate record of the amount paid for the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for operating, repairing, and maintaining the same, and of daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 4. V. Calvin Trice, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall, within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War, and with the Highway Department of the State of Maryland, a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and at the request of the Highway Department of the State of Maryland, shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said V. Calvin Trice, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns shall make available all records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 2 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 5. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to V. Calvin Trice, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 6. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MOUTH OF GARNIERS BAYOU, FLA.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 5129) authorizing Thomas E. Brooks, of Camp Walton, Fla., and his associates and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the mouth of Garniers Bayou, at a point where State road No. 10, in the State of Florida, crosses the mouth of said Garniers Bayou, between Smack Point on the west and White Point on the east, in Okaloosa County, Fla., a similar bill being on the House Calendar.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois calls up S. 5129, a similar House bill being on the House Calendar, and without objection, the reading of the bill will be dispensed with, it being in the usual form, and will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate intrastate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, Thomas E. Brooks, of Camp Walton, Fla., his associates and assigns, be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the mouth of Garniers Bayou, in Okaloosa County, Fla., at a point where State road No. 10, in the State of Florida, crosses the mouth of said Garniers Bayou, between Smack Point on the west and White Point on the east, in Okaloosa County, Fla., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon Thomas E. Brooks, of Camp Walton, Fla., his associates and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Thomas E. Brooks, of Camp Walton, Fla., and his associates and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of tolls so fixed shall be legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Florida, any public agency or political subdivision of said State, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of the State of Florida governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interest in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the State or public agencies or political subdivisions thereof, or by either of them, as provided in section 4 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rate of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not exceeding 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rate of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. The said Thomas E. Brooks, and his associates and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War and with the Highway Department of the State of Florida a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real estate necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, upon request of the Highway Department of the State of Florida, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said Thomas E. Brooks, his associates and assigns, shall make available all of their records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The finding of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 4 of this act, subject only to review in the court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the said Thomas E. Brooks, of Camp Walton, Fla., his associates and assigns; and any corporation or person to which or to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House bills 15525, 16349, and 16764, corresponding to the Senate bills just passed, be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bills 4793, 5059, and 5165, now on the Speaker's table, be indefinitely postponed, similar bills having passed the House and Senate, and having been approved by the President.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the consideration of the bills referred will be indefinitely postponed.

There was no objection.

THE POLITICAL PHILOSOPHY OF GEORGE WASHINGTON

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] to address the House for one hour on the life of George Washington. [Applause.]

Mr. BECK of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, we do well, my fellow Members of the House of Representatives, to pause in our deliberations to recall the immortal memory of the noble founder of the Republic, and I am greatly honored in being the interpreter on this occasion of the grateful sentiments which this sacred anniversary inspires.

Nothing is further from my purpose than to attempt either an eulogium or an apologia—certainly not the latter, for of recent petty aspersions upon Washington's fair fame one need only say, as Franklin in Poor Richard: "Dirt may cling to a mud wall, but not to polished marble." [Applause.]

Eulogy seems equally superfluous. His great fame has long since outstripped the power of praise. Even Lincoln, master of felicitous phrase, confessed his inability to pay any adequate tribute to Washington, and simply said:

> In solemn awe pronounce his name, and in its naked, deathless splendor leave it shining on.

[Applause.]

Indisputably "first in the hearts of his countrymen," yet a larger and more splendid fame has been Washington's—and he shares it with no character in profane history—he is also first in the affection of the world. If the wise and the good of every civilized nation could be polled as to the three noblest characters in history, Washington alone would be on almost every list. The greatest of the Victorian novelists, Thackeray, has thus voiced the verdict of posterity:

> What a constancy, what a magnanimity, what a surprising persistence against fortune. * * * The chief of a nation in arms, doing battle with distracted parties; calm in the midst of conspiracy; serene against the open foe before him and the darker enemies at his back; Washington, inspiring order and spirit into troops hungry and in rags; stung by ingratitude, but betraying no anger, and ever ready to forgive; in defeat invincible, magnanimous in conquest, and never so sublime as on that day when he laid down his victorious sword and sought his noble retirement—here indeed is a character to admire and revere, a life without a stain, a fame without a flaw.

[Applause.]

It is true that a few hypercritics—not worthy to untie the latchets of his shoe—have questioned his intellectual powers.

A sapient college professor, speaking a few years ago at an English university, patronizingly said that Washington was "a man of few natural gifts, self-educated, and somewhat slow-witted."

Again, in a recent biography of Aaron Burr, the authors refer to Washington's "failure to rise above the mediocrity of a small Virginia planter."

My good friend, Claude G. Bowers, in his otherwise admirable book on Jefferson and Hamilton, gives these two the center of the stage, and relegates the august figure of Washington to the wings.

Such was not the judgment of those who best knew him. Jefferson—not wholly a friendly critic—spoke of his intellect as "great and powerful"—no mean praise—and Patrick Henry said that, of all the members of the First Continental Congress, Washington was foremost for "solid information and sound judgment."

The indisputable fact is that, from the beginning of the struggle for independence until the end of his half century of useful service, George Washington was the master spirit in the political life of America. [Applause.] He was the one man who commanded the confidence of all, and this fact alone would refute the theory of his intellectual inferiority, for the fathers were not fools. Always he was the "tower of strength, that stood foursquare to every wind that blew." Of what act in his whole career is America to-day ashamed? What doctrine of his would it now disavow? What writing of his would it delete? None. Name one of his contemporaries, indeed, name any statesman of any era of the world, of whom this could be said in equal measure.

He was largely "self-educated." Farmer, hunter, frontiersman, pioneer, and pathfinder, realities and not verbal abstractions interested him. The formative years of his life were spent on the plantation and in the forest. Doubtless he often thought, as did Shakespeare's banished duke in the Forest of Arden:

> Are not these woods
> More free from peril than the envious court?
> Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
> The seasons' difference, as the icy fang
> And churlish chiding of the winter's wind,
> Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
> Even till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
> "This is no flattery. These are counsellors
> That feelingly persuade me what I am."

Yes, he was "self-educated" in the arduous school of nature, and his keen mind, again as the banished duke, found—

> Tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
> Sermons in stones and good in everything.

This lifelong communion with nature gave him little patience with the more artificial institutions of man. He listened with ill-concealed impatience to the lengthy speeches of the lawyers in the Constitutional Convention, in whose deliberations of four months he spoke only once.

The quarrels of two lawyers in his Cabinet, Jefferson and Hamilton, embittered him.

On August 23, 1792, he addressed a letter to Jefferson, Hamilton, and Randolph, in which, after deprecating the fact that internal dissension should "be harrowing and tearing out our vitals," he added:

> That unless there could be more charity for the opinion and acts of one and another in governmental matters * * * it would be difficult to manage the reins of government, or keep the parts of it together, * * * and thus the fairest prospect of happiness and prosperity, that ever was presented to man, will be lost perhaps forever.

He therefore asked that—> instead of wounding suspicions and irritating charges there may be liberal allowances, mutual forbearance, and a temporary yielding on all sides.

As I read the history of those eventful days, my sympathies are not with Jefferson or Hamilton. They are with Washington, who stood alone, and who could have said in truth: "A plague o' both your houses."

For editors, with their "I am Sir Oracle" snap judgments upon matters, of which they knew little, he had a profound contempt. Charged by one with being a "Nero," he said he "would rather be in the grave than emperor of the world."

There is little evidence that he placed any great dependence upon doctors, and this is not surprising in that age of Sangrados, for two doctors, after torturing him with blisters, finally bled the grand old man to death for a swollen windpipe.

Washington, as all the supremely great men of history, was a realist. For legal abstractions he had little patience. With him "things were in the saddle" and only facts counted. He was not an empiricist. He distrusted phrase making. He doubted panaceas by law. He knew that no constitution could be devised that would be foolproof. Far better than the lawyers and jurists of his time, he knew the futility of leagues or confederations patterned on the Greek models, whose authority was only moral. He summed up all the folly of the old Articles of Confederation in the one terse phrase: "Influence is not government."

No one saw more clearly and advocated more earnestly the necessity of creating a nation and not a mere league of States, but he did not believe that this could be done alone by paper constitutions, but only by an antecedent spiritual union, based upon sympathies and economic solidarity. He saw more clearly than the learned legal theorists that, in the last analysis, no government can be essentially different from the spirit of the people which created it.

Give me your indulgent attention while I seek to show these facts from the text of the Farewell Address, for it contained the statement of his political philosophy.

On an autumn day of the year 1796, President Washington, weary of official life, worn out by his public service of half a century, and desiring to seek the noble retirement which he had so richly earned, sent for the editor of a Philadelphia newspaper, and handed him a manuscript, with a request that he publish it. It was his farewell testament to the people whom he loved so well and whom he had led to high achievement. The political literature of the world contains nothing nobler. [Applause.]

It was not written upon a hasty impulse or with scant preparation. Gray required seven years to write his famous Elegy. Washington had made the first draft of the Farewell Address five years before he sought its publication. A diffident and modest man, he had sought the advice of Madison, Jefferson, and Hamilton, but the final form was his own and he twice corrected it in the proofs before it was published in the Philadelphia National Advertiser.

I am first impressed with the fact that it is dated September 17, 1796. He could have selected any date and it is possible that he chose that date because it was the ninth anniversary of the final formulation of the Constitution. In the nine years that had intervened, he had brought that sickly infant—as it then seemed—to a vigorous youth and, as the message was largely devoted to a vindication of the Union and its organic instrument, the Constitution, it is possible that the date was deliberately selected. There was, in any event, great propriety in the date, for if the Constitution is "the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man," then the great fame of Washington could be safely rested upon that achievement alone. [Applause.] He may not have written a line of the text, but it is incontrovertible that, without his great influence, it would never have been formulated by the convention or ratified by the States, and it is probable that the new Government would have had short life had not the practical statesmanship of Washington in its first eight years put it on a firm foundation and gained for it the confidence of the people. [Applause.]

You will note, in the second place, that it was not addressed to the Congress of the United States or to any public official. Speaking of himself as an "old and affectionate friend," he addresses the people as "friends and fellow citizens." Therein lies the first great thought which Washington sought to convey by the Farewell Message. He believed that the only salvation of the people lay in themselves.

Shortly after the close of the Constitutional Convention and when the Constitution was undergoing the perilous process of ratification, Washington wrote, on September 7, 1788, to his friend and comrade in arms, Lafayette, and, after praising the Constitution as a wise instrument of government, he added that the new Government would be in no danger of degenerating into a monarchy, oligarchy, or aristocracy, or any other form of despotism, "so long as there shall remain any virtue in the body of the people." He then continued:

> I would not be understood, my dear Marquis, to speak of consequences which may be produced in the revolution of ages by corruption of morals, profligacy of manners, or listlessness in the preservation of the natural and unalienable rights of mankind, nor of the successful usurpations that may be established at such an unpropitious juncture upon the ruins of liberty, however providently guarded and secured, as these are contingencies against which no human prudence can effectually provide.

Washington regarded any form of government as but a means to an end, and that it could never be better than the people themselves. Like Plato, he believed that a constitution must correspond to the "ethos" of the people, meaning thereby not merely the spirit of the people, but the aggregate of their habits, conventions, and ideas. These obviously change from generation to generation. If there be any conflict between the Constitution and the genius of the people, it is not the will of the people that is broken but the Constitution. Therefore, to insure vitality, there must be a reasonable correspondence between the Constitution, as interpreted, and the spirit of the people.

He reminded them that—

> It is of infinite moment that you [the people] should properly estimate the immense value of your National Union to your collective and individual happiness.

To him the surest foundations of that unity were sentiment and interest, and of the sentimental tie he spoke first, as follows:

> Citizens by birth and choice of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of America, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have, in a common cause, fought and triumphed together; the independence and liberty you possess are the work of joint counsels and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings, and successes.

Thus he sought to impress upon successive generations the noble memories of the heroic days of our colonial development, culminating in our struggle for independence. He bade them remember the "rock whence ye are hewn." He knew that no nation can be truly great without an heroic past and a conscious remembrance of it. He realized, as Lincoln did, that, in times of strife and disunion, these "mystic chords of memory" would yet "swell the chorus of the Union, when touched, as they will be, by the better angels of our nature." [Applause.]

You will note his use of the word "America," instead of the "United States." He generally spoke of our Nation as the "Union," and by it he meant the sympathetic and sentimental bond that bound the Colonies together long before the War of Independence. To him the American Commonwealth dated, not from the 4th of July, 1776, but from the first Virginia settlement. In Washington's eyes America was born of those "spacious days" which gave Shakespeare and Bacon, Raleigh and Drake, Jonson and Spenser, to an astonished world.

Having thus emphasized the binding ties of those "mystic chords of memory," struck by the blood-comradeship of arms, Washington next passes to a practical consideration, which he regarded as greatly outweighing even the sentimental tie. He addresses himself to the indissoluble wedlock of economic interests, which, far more than the theories or formulas of lawyers, had welded the inorganic union of the Colonies into the organic Government of the United States. In a passage of great length and equal wisdom, he dwells upon the inevitable interdependence of the North and the South and the West, and to this end advocates "the progressive improvements of interior communication of land and water." These, he predicted, would bring about an "indissoluble community of interest as one nation."

Time has vindicated his prophecy. The Union has been held together for nearly a century and a half, not by the Constitution alone, but by an ever-developing economic unity. I have always believed that the Union was safe when the last spike was driven in the Union Pacific Railroad. [Applause.] Even if the Civil War had terminated differently, and the sections had been divorced by a decree of the sword, they would have been long since reunited in the lasting wedlock by steam and electricity. [Applause.]

That the Union must largely depend upon an economic solidarity was a long-cherished belief of Washington. Even when our country was a feeble congeries of straggling and separated colonies on the Atlantic seaboard and its statesmen regarded the Appalachian Range as their inevitable western boundary, Washington had the sagacity to look beyond the Alleghenies and to see in the undeveloped wilderness to the west a great future for America, if convenient trade routes could be provided.

Denied the vision of the railroad and the telegraph, he interested himself in the construction of canals. He was the first colonial statesman to advocate the linking of the Atlantic coast with the Mississippi Valley, then seemingly impossible. His correspondence shows that the possibility of water routes to develop and cement the union of the Colonies was constantly in his mind. As early as 1774 he introduced a bill in the Virginia House of Burgesses for the improvement of the navigation of the Potomac for 150 miles beyond tidewater. On his victorious return from the war he again plunged into the subject which had fascinated him from the time when, on horseback, he had penetrated into the unknown wilderness beyond the Alleghenies. He was a great explorer and pathfinder. Writing to Lafayette after the Revolution, Washington tells him that he is planning to leave Mount Vernon and find his way through the trackless forest to Lake Erie, thence by the Great Lakes to a point near the present city of Chicago, thence down the Des Plaines and Illinois and the Mississippi Rivers to New Orleans, and thence back to Mount Vernon. Even in these days such a trip would be an arduous journey, but in those days it would have taxed the strength and skill of the most ardent explorer, and Washington was then an old man. While he never carried out this ambitious plan, he did make extensive journeys to New England and the South.

In a letter to Edmund Randolph, in 1785, he said:

> The great objective for which I wish is for the navigation of the rivers James and Potomac extending to connect the western territory with the Atlantic States. All others to me are secondary.

Always a broad-minded American, his interest was not confined to the transportation route for his native State, for he advocated long before Clinton the practicability of a water connection between Lake Erie and the Hudson River.

Writing on October 10, 1784, to the Governor of Virginia, Washington, having traced out the different routes and distances from the Potomac to Detroit, and having emphasized the economic value to Virginia of some connection with the "fur and peltry trade of the Lakes and for the produce of the country which lies within," then added:

> But in my opinion there is a political consideration for so doing, which is of still greater importance. I need not remark to you, sir, that the flanks and rear of the United States are possessed by other powers, and formidable ones, too; nor how necessary it is to apply the cement of interest to bind all parts of the Union together by indissoluble bonds, especially that part of it which lies immediately west of us, with the Middle States.

In another letter to David Humphreys, dated July 25, 1785, Washington wrote:

> My attention is more immediately engaged in a project which I think big with great political, as well as commercial, consequences to these States, especially the middle ones; it is by removing the obstructions and extending the inland navigation of our rivers, to bring the States on the Atlantic in close connection with those forming to the westward by a short and easy transportation. Without this, I can easily conceive they will have different views, separate interests, and other connections. I may be singular in my ideas, but they are these: That, to open a door to and make easy the way for those settlers to the westward (which ought to progress regularly and compactly) before we make any stir about the navigation of the Mississippi, and before our settlements are far advanced toward that river, would be our true line of policy.

His belief in waterways justifies us in assuming that nothing to-day would interest him more than the proposed waterways from the Great Lakes to the Gulf and to the Atlantic Ocean. [Applause.]

It is of this empire builder, whose foresight was exceeded by none of his contemporaries, unless we except Franklin, that the college professor spoke as "slow witted."

Having thus developed the moral and economic argument for a union, Washington proceeds to discuss the importance of the Constitution. He says:

> Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay [meaning the Articles of Confederation] by the adoption of a Constitution of government better calculated than your former for an intimate union and for the efficacious management of your common concern. This Government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The bases of our political systems is the right of the people to make and alter their constitutions of government; but the Constitution which at any time exists, till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established Government.

Has anyone better stated the moral sanction of constitutionalism?

He was not so foolish as to believe that any written document could lastingly hold successive generations within its wise restraints, and he, therefore, proceeded to warn his fellow countrymen against any destruction of this Constitution. He said:

> Toward the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite not only that you steadily discountenance irregular oppositions to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretexts. One method of assault may be to effect, in the forms of the Constitution, alterations which will impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what can not be directly overthrown.

If only the later generations had remembered that wise counsel, we to-day would not be appalled at the unceasing erosion of the Constitution and the vanishing rights of the States! The Constitution has withstood outward attacks, but it has been, and is still being, slowly undermined.

Washington continues:

> In all the changes to which you may be invited, remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments as of other human institutions; that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing Constitution of the country; that facility in changes, upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion, exposes to perpetual change from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion.

I again interrupt to say that time and habit have done more to interpret the Constitution than all the learned decisions of the Supreme Court.

Nor did Washington believe that the chosen officials of the Government, even though they acted under the sanctity of solemn oaths to support and maintain the Constitution, would always respect its wise restraints. To them, by anticipation, he also gives his wise advice:

> It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding, in the exercise of the powers of one department, to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it, which predominates in the human heart, is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal, against invasions by the others, has been evinced by experiments, ancient and modern; some of them in our own country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance, in permanent evil, any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Washington thus foresaw the menace to our institutions of an undue exaltation either of Congress or of the Executive. There is little danger of the former, for Congress is a many-headed body, and, as such, has little appeal to the imagination of the people. The tendency is to disturb the balance by an undue exaltation of the Executive. The framers of the Constitution wisely intended to create a strong Executive, but they never intended to assimilate him to a king. He is the first servant of the people and his great powers and heavy responsibilities require them to respect him as such.

The tendency, however, is to go further and to incarnate the majesty of the Republic in the individual who is temporarily the Chief Executive and that is the essential idea of kingship. There is a growing tendency to regard the President as the "Little Father" of the people and the Congress as little more than his "faithful Commons." Thus, in almost every controversy between the Executive and Congress, the sympathies of the people are with the former, for they can visualize him and make a legend of him, but Congress is impersonal.

Washington foresaw this, and in his earnest plea for a due equilibrium between the Executive and the Congress, which I have just quoted, he warned America against the evil of one-man power, for Washington knew that the love of power, like jealousy, "grows by what it feeds on." Fortunately, our Presidents have generally been men of the people—true democrats—but if the day shall ever come when we have an inordinately ambitious and unscrupulous Executive and a subservient Congress, we may then realize the wisdom of Washington's solemn warning that such undue exaltation of the Executive "is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed." [Applause.]

O wise old counsellor! How well he foresaw in the last two sentences of the portion of the Farewell Address which I last quoted that spirit of political pragmatism, which is willing to sacrifice an eternal principle to gain some immediate good, an imponderable for a ponderable!

Time would not permit me to pursue further his wise counsel as to the public credit, the diffusion of education to insure an intelligent electorate, and, finally, the necessity of keeping our country free from any foreign entanglements that would impair its liberty of action. He never claimed that ours should be a hermit Nation. Independence, and not isolation, was his ideal of our foreign relations. To quote his own words, he would have us "independent of all and under the influence of none."

It is evident from the Farewell Address that he viewed with alarm the development of political parties, especially when formed on sectional alignments, and greatly feared that, in the heated collision of their passions and interests, the bonds of unity would be severed. The Civil War was a fearful vindication of this prophecy. Washington believed in our dual form of government, and to-day his concern would be to defend the reserved rights of the States against the undermining forces of centralization.

Nothing more strikingly illustrates the profound changes in our constitutional idea, due to the "ethos" of the people, than the question of centralization. When the Constitution was adopted, the States had a very real consciousness of their own sovereignty. The success of the National Government and the immense moral influence of George Washington slowly developed the idea of a powerful Union. But even more potent have been the changes brought about through mechanical inventions. The Union is held together to-day not so much by the Constitution as by the shining pathways of steel, over which our railroads run, and the innumerable wires, which, like antennae, coordinate the mighty energies of the Americn people.

To these must now be added one of the most potent unifying forces of all—namely, the radio. While the press served as a consolidating influence, yet the influence of a newspaper is limited to the zone of its circulation. To-day, however, any responsible leader of thought may, on occasion, speak to 20,000,000 of people. Thus, both time and space have been annihilated, and the people have been irresistibly drawn into the consciousness of a central government which far overshadows the consciousness of the States. This has caused a profound change in the "ethos" of the people in this respect, and our institutions have become so unified that the old struggle against centralization has largely passed away. Each of the old political parties when in power vie with the other in consolidating the Union by multiplying bureaucratic agencies and as a result many matters hitherto within the power of the States are now controlled from Washington. To the extent that this is the result of economic forces it is irresistible, even if not always desirable; but to the extent that it is the result of the greed for bureaucratic power, it is a grave peril.

The problem of the future is to hold this centripetal tendency measurably in check; for it is as true to-day as when the Constitution was adopted that our Government will not always continue if the planetary system of the States be absorbed in the central sun of the Federal Government. [Applause.] Our Nation is too vast in area and our people too numerous to be governed altogether from Washington. The safety of the Union depends upon the preservation of the rights of the States, and the difficulty is to preserve these rights when the elemental forces of steel and electricity continue to weld the country into a powerful unity and to reduce the political consciousness of the States almost to the vanishing point. The problem of the future will be to preserve, so far as now possible, the just equipoise, which the Constitution vainly sought to maintain, between the power of the Central Government and the power of the States. [Applause.]

We are still a young country. In my youth I might well have known a distinguished lawyer of Philadelphia, Horace Binney, then over 90 years of age, who as a young boy had seen Washington and Franklin conversing in front of Independence Hall during the sessions of the Constitutional Convention. This measures the brief span of our existence. Centuries are still before America; and who can safely say, if it becomes too centralized for efficient government, that one day there may not be a powerful movement toward disintegration, especially if there develop between the sections powerful economic conflicts of policy? The history of nations is an unending cycle of integration and disintegration, of consolidating and then redistributing the powers of governments. Human institutions, like the globules of mercury, tend to scatter and unite. For more than a century the tendency of America has been to consolidate; but let us remember that, if the movement proceed too far, the tendency to disintegrate will begin. The ideal of every patriotic American should be "the indestructible Union of indestructible States." [Applause.]

And this suggests a final thought.

The salvation of our form of government, in the last analysis, rests with the people, as Washington so clearly said; and the most discouraging sign of the times is their indifference to constitutional questions. What I have elsewhere called "constitutional morality" was never at a lower ebb. This is largely due to the overshadowing importance and grandeur of the Federal Government. Like the central sun, it blinds our vision, and—at least in popular consciousness—the States are gradually fading in importance, even as the planets can not be seen by day because of the omnipresent rays of the sun.

At the beginning of the Republic there were 13 self-conscious States which had behind them a century or more of traditions. But the Union is now composed of 48 States, many of which are but the creation of yesterday and which have no such background of tradition to stimulate the consciousness of the people. Most of them are the creation of purely artificial boundaries and, while there is local pride, yet they naturally regard themselves as the children of the Federal Government, whereas the historic 13 Colonies had, at least at one time, the proud consciousness that they created the Federal Union and that the Federal Union did not create them. I confess I can not see the way to combat this changed consciousness of the American people, largely due to mechanical forces, which no written constitution can wholly overcome.

The loss of the sense of constitutional morality, without which it is difficult for any constitution to survive, is also due to a subtler cause and one that is too little appreciated. Our very dependence upon a written constitution and our belief in its static nature and its self-executing powers have tended to deaden the political consciousness of the American people. We live in an age of specialization and the people, forgetful that, in the last analysis, they must save themselves, feel that a constitution will execute itself and that the special and exclusive method of determining all constitutional questions is by resort to the courts.

This is especially perceptible in our legislative bodies. Time was when Congress felt that it had the primary duty of determining whether proposed laws were within its constitutional power. Many of the greatest debates upon the meaning of the Constitution took place in the Halls of Congress and not in court rooms. Next January a full century will have elapsed since Daniel Webster, of Massachusetts, and Robert Y. Hayne, of South Carolina, engaged in their momentous discussion as to the true nature of the Government. To-day such a closely reasoned debate would be impossible. In this age of specialism we unwisely believe that these questions are only for the judiciary. A century ago, the controversy over the power to create a United States bank and later the power to make internal improvements were questions which Congress had no disposition to shift to the judiciary, but which they preferred in the first instance to decide for themselves. This is as it should be, for every Member of Congress takes an oath, as a judge, to support and maintain the Constitution of the United States.

In recent years there has been no disposition to argue the constitutional phase of any proposed law in Congress. Such a debate would be regarded as a loss of public time, as the question must ultimately be determined by the Supreme Court. Laws are frequently passed of very doubtful constitutionality and their validity left to the processes of litigation. This might be a satisfactory division of governmental work if the Supreme Court had unrestricted and plenary power to disregard a constitutional statute or Executive act, but such is not the fact. Many laws are politically anticonstitutional without being juridically unconstitutional.

The fact is that the Supreme Court does not have, as so many believe, plenary and unrestricted power to nullify unconstitutional legislation. On the contrary, there is a vast sphere of political activity in which the true construction of the Constitution is involved but on which the judiciary, ex necessitate rei, can not possibly pass judgment, as, for example, censoring appropriations, for appropriations, as we all know, can be made for unconstitutional as well as constitutional objects, and in a constitutional sense no governmental activity is more destructive. The unlimited power to appropriate money is the "wooden horse" which may yet make a future America say of our dual form of government, "Ilium fuit."

The distinction between a law which is politically anticonstitutional and judicially unconstitutional is somewhat subtle and is not one that readily occurs to many who study our form of government. Leaving aside the wide sphere of legislation in which, if a litigated case ever arises, the Supreme Court can correct our errors, the fact remains that there is still a large sphere in which the Supreme Court is powerless to act, either because of the necessity of the case or because the question, to use a lawyer's phrase, is essentially political and not justiciable. The Supreme Court, with a conservatism that certainly can not be called too moderate, has said it will invalidate no law unless it be indisputably repugnant to the Constitution, with the result that we pass many laws, about which you and I are at least doubtful as to their constitutionality. Then when the constitutionality of such a law is argued before the Supreme court, perhaps a quarter of a century after it has been in force, the court does not determine the unconstitutionality of the statute, but when such legislation is supported by the breath of popular opinion and has the pragmatic advantage of some supposed good, the court is human enough to conclude that it is not so indisputably repugnant to the Constitution as to justify the court in annulling it. Through that breach in the dike a great volume of legislation flows for which there is no sanction in the Constitution, and such laws are not nullified by the judiciary because either of their doubtful character or because they are unconstitutional by reason of the motive of Congress or by some powerful political consideration, and thus those laws become precedents for another law and gradually, like the ocean in front of my summer home at Sea Bright, N. J., the high tide sometimes seems to reach a farther mark and sometimes to recede, but in the long run, taking it by years and not by months, there is the steady eating away of the true coast line of our Government. [Applause.]

Thus the Constitution itself is slowly "undermined," even as Washington predicted.

Therefore I plead for an awakened conscience on the part of our legislators and the people themselves in the matter of constitutional morality. They should primarily determine these grave issues of constitutionality for themselves. Unless they do so they are in grave danger of losing the benefits of the wisest instrument of statecraft that the wit of man has yet devised. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

Washington died shortly before Napoleon won his great victory on the plains of Marengo. We can imagine the old soldier in his retirement at Mount Vernon following with eager vision the extraordinary developments in the Old World and the rising sum of the new Cæsar. I can picture him in that last autumn of his life, seated on the porch of his beloved Mount Vernon in the gathering twilight—emblematic of the dying day of his life—and silently gazing upon the Potomac as it moved to the sea, a symbol of the infinite mystery of time.

It was on such an October evening a few months before he died, with the autumn leaves falling from the trees upon the green lawns of his much loved home, that he retired to his study and wrote his last expression of opinion as to the affairs of the world, and what he thus wrote can be applied to the conditions of the present hour as expressing his opinion if he were alive to-day. He said:

> The affairs of Europe have taken a most important and interesting turn. * * * My own wish is to see everything settled upon the best and surest foundation for the peace and happiness of mankind, without regard to this, that, or any other nation. A more destructive sword never was drawn, at least in modern times, than this war has produced. It is time to sheathe it and give peace to mankind.

[Applause.]

Thus spoke and still speaks the world's noblest citizen, and to that ideal of peace mankind is steadily marching. In the progress of humanity the character of Washington is a great factor, for "the path of the just is as a shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

Let us to-day reverently thank the God of our fathers that Washington's influence is still a shining light. It illuminates as none other the soul of America. It is to-day, as it has ever been, a vital force. From his grave in Mount Vernon he still guides the destinies of the American people. When the seas are smooth we little feel his presence, but when the ship of state plunges into a storm and is threatened by angry seas his mighty shade is again our helmsman.

The Arthurian legend tells us that King Arthur sleeps at Avalon, but that he will come again and unsheathe his sword if ever England were in desperate need.

Our Arthur, bravest of the brave and knightliest of the knightly, sleeps at Mount Vernon, but whenever disaster menaces our institutions the American people again become conscious of his potent influence, and while that influence remains the Republic will endure. [Applause.]

VIRGINIA'S CONTRIBUTION TO THE WAR OF THE REVOLUTION

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a brief discussion by Charles William Hart on Virginia's contribution to the War of the Revolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, last December the Sons of the Revolution in the District of Columbia arranged to award a gold medal for the best essay on Virginia's contribution to the War of the Revolution submitted by a pupil of any school in the District. The essay written by Charles William Hart, of the Eastern High School, won the medal, which is being presented to him to-day at the Washington anniversary celebration held in this city by the District of Columbia Federation for Patriotic Observance. At the request of Brig. Gen. George Richards, who is so prominently identified with all patriotic activities, I obtained permission from the House for the publication of the essay in the RECORD, and now avail myself of the privilege of inserting it. The essay follows:

In the War of the Revolution the part played by Virginia was probably second to that of no other colony. Her contribution was made manifest through her military leaders, her statesmen, her soldiers in the ranks, her natural resources and material wealth, and the spirit of her people. While the statesmen of the colony were participating in verbal battles the colonial soldiers were preparing by temperate and frugal living and by elementary but effective military training for the conflict that was to come. Her statesmen, two of whom were later to serve as chief magistrates of the country, were prominent in molding and crystallizing public opinion, and were extending their influence to the others of the United Colonies.

Probably the greatest and most fervent speaker of the period was Patrick Henry, whose matchless oratory aroused the colonists to a fever pitch of enthusiasm at a time when they were most anxious to throw off the yoke of tyranny and oppression. He challenged the right of the King to exercise a controlling influence in colonial affairs, when he argued that a sovereign 3,000 miles away had no right to veto a needed law passed by the colonial legislature. In 1765 he introduced a resolution against the stamp act, denying the right of Parliament to regulate the internal affairs of a colony, and sounded an "alarm bell to the disaffected" among the colonists, who were ready to be led from the wilderness of doubt and oppression to the open land of certainty and liberty. His brilliant speeches were applauded throughout the country, and Jefferson said of him that he "spoke as Homer wrote." Under his able leadership Virginia led in the movement for a stamp-act congress, and her leaders were prominent in the meetings of this body. The Virginia Assembly, although dissolved by the royal governor, met in Raleigh Tavern and voted a nonimportation agreement which won favor in all of the colonies. The Virginia Assembly proposed the organization of a Continental Congress, which met in Philadelphia in September of the same year. On the eve of the war Henry's stirring call to arms before the house of burgesses lent additional fervor to the patriotic feelings of the colonists. The final sentence of his speech, "I know not what course others may take; but as for me, give me liberty or give me death!" was the keynote of the whole Revolution.

When the Continental Congress was ready to select a leader for the Army, George Washington was chosen, not only because of his remarkable ability as a commander but in part because of his being a Virginian—and Virginia's enthusiastic aid was needed if the war were to be carried to a successful conclusion. A convention met in Virginia in the spring of 1776 to consider a new form of government for the Colony, and on May 15 a resolution was adopted, instructing Richard Henry Lee to make a motion for independence. On June 7 Lee moved "that these united Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States," and Congress was sufficiently impressed to appoint a committee to draw up a formal declaration. Thomas Jefferson, another Virginian, was chairman of this committee, and although only 32 years of age at the time, was selected to draw up the immortal document bearing the title of "The Declaration of Independence." The clarity and simplicity of the declaration, together with its dignity and irrefutable logic, made it an outstanding example of patriotic and forceful statesmanship and linked Jefferson's name forever with the early history of America's struggle for political and economic freedom.

During the first three years of the war George Washington and Daniel Morgan were outstanding in the military operations of the Continental Army. Washington's Fabian policy, his skillfully executed retreat across New Jersey, and his remarkable successes at Trenton and New Brunswick featured a campaign fraught with hardships for both the soldiers and the commander; and through his genius of leadership the campaign was conducted in a manner unparalleled in military history. In the darkest days of the Revolution the knowledge that Washington was in command gave the colonists an abiding faith in the ultimate success of their struggle. At the two battles of Bemis Heights, Daniel Morgan and his Virginian riflemen helped the gallant Arnold to halt the advance of the British troops, and in the second of these battles they aided immeasurably in the final and crushing defeat of Burgoyne's forces.

Although the greater part of the fighting was in the North, the settlements in Kentucky, then a part of Virginia, were constantly threatened by the Indians, who were being incited to war by the British under Hamilton. George Rogers Clark, one of the most famous of Virginians, asked Gov. Patrick Henry for permission to enlist a force for the protection of Kentucky and for the capture of a number of the British posts in the Northwest. Clark's conquest of the forts, his capture of Hamilton, and his diplomacy in securing the friendship of the French, Spanish, and Indians, who had heretofore been loyal to the British, form one of the most dramatic chapters of American history. As a result of Clark's efforts the Northwest Territory was ceded to the United States at the close of the war.

Early in 1781 Daniel Morgan was sent with a small force to watch the movements of Bannister Tarleton, the famous British Cavalry leader, and in a battle near Cowpens Morgan distinguished himself by routing Tarleton's superior force. Later in the war Virginia found herself the battle ground of the combating armies, and her soldiers were a vital factor in bringing about the final defeat of the British at Yorktown.

Virginia's contribution to the War of the Revolution was easily as great as that of any of the thirteen Colonies. Patrick Henry contributed his fiery eloquence and masterful statesmanship; Thomas Jefferson gave his wisdom, diplomacy, and literary ability; George Washington gave his statesmanship, his strategic ability, his gift of leadership, and his private fortune; Richard Henry Lee and George Mason gave their statesmanship; George Rogers Clark gave his personal magnetism and audacity; Daniel Morgan and William Washington gave their acumen and military genius; and thousands of Virginians gave their lives on the altar of liberty. The value of Virginia's contribution to the War of the Revolution can not be measured, however, in numbers of men, nor in numbers of victories won, nor in the sacrifice of material wealth; but only in terms of the everlasting gratitude which is in men's hearts for her great contribution to the extension of liberty, freedom, and justice throughout all America.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a report made by certain members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, who were designated by the chairman to visit the United States Military Academy at West Point pursuant to the act of May 17, 1928, providing for the appointment of the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

FEBRUARY 22, 1929.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Pursuant to an act of Congress approved May 17, 1928, providing for the appointment of the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy, the following members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives were designated by the chairman of that committee to visit West Point in December, 1928:

The Hon. JOHN M. MORIN, thirty-fourth Pennsylvania.
The Hon. J. MAYHEW WAINWRIGHT, twenty-fifth New York.
The Hon. HUBERT F. FISHER, tenth Tennessee.
The Hon. VIRGIL CHAPMAN, seventh Kentucky.
The Hon. JAMES A. HUGHES, fourth West Virginia.
The Hon. HAROLD G. HOFFMAN, third New Jersey.

In accordance with the provisions of the above-mentioned act, the board hereby submits the following report: The board spent three days at the academy, during which the following program was carried out:

PROGRAM OF THE BOARD OF VISITORS, UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY, DECEMBER 6, 7, 8, 1928

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 6

Visit administration building.
Visit cadet gymnasium.
Visit Cullum Hall.
Watch corps march to dinner.
Visit cadet mess hall.
Luncheon—cadet mess.
Visit new cadet mess hall.
Visit basement, East Academic Building.
Visit East Academic Building.
Visit West Academic Building.
Visit commandant's office.
Visit cadet barracks.
Visit cadet store.
Review by Corps of Cadets.
Visit cadet gymnasium during athletic period.
Visit Hotel Thayer.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 7

Enlisted and post activities.
Visit post school No. 1.
Visit Motor Transport and Coast Artillery Corps barracks.
Visit post commissary.
Visit Army service barracks.
Visit quartermaster stables and storehouses.
Visit post exchange.
Visit field music barracks and band practice room.
Visit married bandsmen's quarters.
Visit post school No. 2.
Visit railway station and dock.
Visit cavalry barracks.
Visit artillery stables and gun sheds.
Observe poor roads.
Visit administration building.
Lunch with superintendent.
Meeting with Academic Board.
Review by Corps of Cadets.
Visit riding hall.
Visit cadet chapel.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 8

Visit station hospital.
Visit new apartment building.
Visit library.
Visit ordnance museum.
Lunch at Hotel Thayer.
Attend Saturday inspection of cadets.

The board upon its arrival called on the Superintendent of the Military Academy, who went over with the members of the board the proposed program for the visit. The superintendent at this time explained the mission of the Military Academy and the necessity of completing the reconstruction of West Point that was begun in 1902 but which has never been completed.

During the three days which the board spent in going over the historic grounds at West Point the members were impressed with the peculiar fitness of the description of the site by Gen. Horace Porter, who said:

"It is in every sense an ideal site on which to have founded an institution to teach the science and the art of war. Here the academy sits, enthroned in the fastness of the legendary Highlands, the cold, gray, rugged rocks which form her battlements are symbolic of the rigor of the discipline exacted of her children; her towering hills seem to lift man nearer to his God; the mist-laden storm clouds may lower above her, but they break upon her crags and peaks as hostile lines of battle have so often broken upon the sword points of her heroic sons. Her abode is incomparably beautiful at all hours and in all seasons. At one time we find her mountains reverberating and her plain trembling with the thunder of her guns as their volleys rend the air in mimic warfare, or as with their crimson breath they utter their notes of greeting to an illustrious soldier President who honors her imposing fête day by his distinguished presence. At another time stillness rules her camp; the snowy whiteness of her tents glistens in the golden light of a midsummer moon, the prevailing silence is broken only by the cadenced footfalls of her trusty sentinels or the rippling of the waters of the noble stream which flows at her base, bearing to the sea those great argosies of commerce which measure a nation's material prosperity."

The mission of the Military Academy is to give to each cadet a fundamental education, both scientific and cultural, upon which he may build in order that the academy may produce leaders for the high command of our armies in time of war as well as material for trained staff and combat officers. West Point is not a school to train young men to become lieutenants in the Army, as is so often and erroneously stated. West Point molds the characters of selected young men from all parts of this great country and gives them a basic education and equips them with a fine physique. West Point then sends them forth well tempered after four years of severe mental and physical training that has been given in an atmosphere pregnant with the tradition and history of our country. From these young men have come the great leaders of our wars—Grant, Lee, Sherman, Jackson, Sheridan, Longstreet, Pershing, March, and many others whose names are known to every schoolboy. This fact was emphasized by the late President Theodore Roosevelt when he said in speaking of West Point:

"This institution has completed its first hundred years of life. During that century no other educational institution in the land has contributed as many names as West Point has contributed to the honor roll of the Nation's greatest citizens."

After spending three days in the atmosphere of West Point and inspecting carefully all of its activities, the board is of the opinion that the superintendent, the academic board, the officers and enlisted men on duty at the academy, and the Corps of Cadets are all responding in a splendid and enthusiastic spirit to the execution of West Point's mission.

ACADEMIC

In visiting the academic side of the institution the board was particularly impressed with the system of instruction, which has been in effect at West Point for nearly 100 years. This system requires in effect "Every cadet in every subject every day." There are no elective courses nor what are known as "cuts" in colleges. Every cadet is subjected to a thorough course of mental as well as military discipline to teach him to reason readily and accurately, to apply right principles to cases of daily occurrence in the life of a soldier. To this end the cadet is required to pursue a strict course of mathematical and scientific study, with applications to the various branches of the military sciences. But the cultural side of the academy is not neglected. In the visits made by the board to the classes in modern languages it was noticed that the cadets in French and Spanish were making decided progress in both languages. The instructors, who are all officers of the Army, with the exception of two civilians in French and one in Spanish, gave evidence of a thorough knowledge of the language. This is the result of the policy of sending the instructors to Europe, in some cases for a year prior to their assignment to duty at the Military Academy, which policy the board highly commends.

In the academic work the courses appear to be well taught, the reasoning faculties of the cadets strongly exercised and disciplined, and a system of habit and thought acquired that is invaluable in the pursuit of any profession. The board is of the opinion that the academic requirements should be maintained as high as possible and that the time allotted to these subjects should not be curtailed by the injection of practical subjects to too great an extent. The latter can usually be learned in a short period after graduation, but it is in youth when the mind is plastic and responsive that the mental discipline should take place. Training the mind is like creating a strong beacon light that will always be available to be turned upon any subject and to elucidate a solution.

The superintendent of the academy, however, is of the opinion that the entrance requirements are too low, and he is interested in bringing about a reform in this matter that will be beneficial to the academy and to the Army of the future. He has caused to be made very complete studies over a period of 37 years, showing the percentages of cadets who have been discharged from the academy through deficiency in studies, with especial attention to those who have been so discharged since the introduction in 1914 of the system of admitting cadets on certificates from accredited schools. The figures are most illuminating and disclose the facts that cadets who have been found deficient in studies and discharged are three times more numerous from the group that entered upon certificate than from the group which entered by examination. The cost to the Government of these discharged cadets has been very great, as they are kept at the academy but a short time without any return. The figures show that the financial loss is five times as much from those who entered on certificate and who were subsequently discharged as the loss from those who entered upon examination and who were later discharged for deficiency in studies. It would appear, therefore, that the privilege of entering upon certificate should apply to individuals who have at least had a high-school education. The superintendent has taken steps to remedy this situation, and while the board is not qualified at the present writing to state definitely what should be done, it is of the opinion that the recommendations of the superintendent in this important matter should receive careful consideration by the War Department.

PHYSICAL TRAINING

The board has been favorably impressed with the system of supervised athletics that was instituted seven years ago. The course in physical training has been developed along sound and progressive lines. The present course is an extension of the excellent system of military gymnastics that was in practice for many years at West Point. During the allotted afternoon period, military drill and intramural athletics alternate for all classes. In this way every cadet must participate in all major sports during his course under the supervision of officer instructors. This change is excellent, for it forces young men to test their mettle in all branches of athletics and enables each cadet to form his taste for an especial sport in which he feels that he excels. The immediate benefits to the cadets are profound and the future benefit to the Army will prove far-reaching. Not the least attractive feature about this system is the competition that it engenders among the companies. The company teams are not restricted to upper classmen, but are composed of cadets of all classes, including the fourth classmen or plebes. The board heartily approves of the development of the course in physical training. Certainly, the appearance of the cadets leaves little to be desired. They are erect, well set up with fine muscular bodies and clear healthy skins. The board saw them engaged in all of their activities—swimming, wrestling, boxing, fencing, gymnastics, and basket ball—all of which sports were being practiced simultaneously in the gymnasium, which has outgrown its capacity and which should be enlarged.

EQUIPMENT OF THE ACADEMY

The board visited all of the buildings that are part of the plant at West Point, both the new buildings that have been constructed under the original plan of the board of officers in 1902, those subsequently constructed, and those which are in great need of rebuilding. The board found the following condition with respect to the construction at West Point. As will be recalled, the plan to rebuild West Point was authorized in 1902 by Congress and a complete and comprehensive architectural scheme was adopted. After a competition in which the leading architects of the country engaged, the award for the reconstruction was made to Cram, Goodhue & Ferguson, of Boston. Congress authorized $5,000,000 for this project based on estimates made at the time. This amount was to cover the reconstruction of the academy both for the cadets and for the enlisted men on duty as well as to provide officers' quarters. As time went on, the amount was increased to $7,500,000 and the reconstruction proceeded until all funds had been exhausted (1913). At this time the plans were made for a Corps of Cadets of a strength of 511. The amounts that were appropriated, however, were not sufficient to carry out all of the plans that had been made originally, and before more money could be obtained from Congress to execute the program, the Corps of Cadets was increased by the act of June, 1916, to 1,332 cadets. Instead, therefore, of completing the original plan, the military authorities were obliged to ask Congress for funds to meet the immediate needs of the expansion, with the result that the original program was suspended while the necessary barracks and other buildings for the Corps of Cadets were under construction. But even the program that was made to cover this expansion was never completed due to lack of funds so that to-day West Point finds itself in the position of having never caught up in reconstruction. It is the opinion of the board that the time has come when the reconstruction of West Point should be completed as originally planned and authorized by Congress and by the War Department, but on a scale that is commensurate with the present strength of the Corps of Cadets (1,384).

The board visited the cadet barracks where it was found that 1,155 cadets were living three in a room, 32 cadets were living four in a room, and only 76 cadets living two in a room. The living conditions are entirely too crowded as the rooms were intended for two cadets only. To remedy this situation, however, Congress has already authorized $825,000 for new cadet barracks, but when this money was authorized, it was with the understanding and upon the representation made by the War Department that it was necessary to provide for only 1,200 cadets. In fact, all of the items of the last board that considered the building project at West Point were based upon a strength of 1,200 cadets.

The board understands that as far as the reconstruction program of West Point is concerned, the War Department is following the recommendations of the Cheatham Board, a board of officers that was convened in August, 1927. The $825,000 referred to was an item on the program of that board. Other items recently authorized by Congress include quarters for officers and noncommissioned officers. The board is in agreement with the recommendation of the Secretary of War that there should be no more apartment buildings for the officers at West Point, but that there should be separate quarters instead, and it is of the opinion that the amount for officers' quarters should be increased sufficiently to house all of the officers who are now living off of the reservation. At the present time, there are 68 officers who are not provided with quarters but who are obliged to live in the neighboring villages of Highland Falls, Cornwall, and Newburgh. Rents are high and apartments difficult to obtain in these places, but in addition the distance of these places from West Point makes it extremely difficult for officers to commute conveniently. The Government is paying out in commutation of quarters yearly $38,000 for the above officers, and the board feels that it is not economical to continue this practice, and what is of even greater moment, that it is a system that should be remedied without delay. The board made an inspection of the quarters and barracks assigned to the enlisted men, of the post school, and of the quartermaster activities. It emphasizes the fact that all of these activities have been on the original program since 1902, but it has not been possible to give any attention to their reconstruction for the reason that all available funds were necessary for catching up in construction to correspond with the increases in the Corps of Cadets. This part of the post of West Point is in need of attention, and the program as heretofore studied, should be carried out in its main lines. The board went over this matter thoroughly with the superintendent, and as a result of the conferences held, it is of the opinion that new construction should progress as rapidly as possible in the following priority:

1. Schoolhouse (grammar and high).
2. New band barracks and practice room.
3. North wing to gymnasium.
4. New barracks Army service detachment.
5. Quartermaster storehouses and shops.
6. New barracks for quartermaster corps detachment Coast Artillery Corps, Signal Corps, Motor Transport Corps.
7. Quartermaster stables and sheds.
8. Post exchange.
9. Annex to cavalry stables to correspond with that built on the artillery stables.

It is the opinion of the board that the construction of items 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 should be undertaken immediately. This section of West Point is in great need of appropriate buildings to replace old ramshackle structures that have outlived their usefulness.

Every year some money is expended upon these shabby structures to make them last a while longer, but it is throwing good money after bad, and dreadful waste. In any such system of temporary expediency there must come a time when the various additions become so complex as to demand a general reorganization and so expensive to keep in repair as to make such reorganization economical in the long run. This part of West Point has reached this stage. It is a situation that calls for energetic remedial action.

Plans for the reconstruction of this part of West Point were completed as long ago as 1906, but the funds have never been available.

For many years one of the greatest needs at West Point was a modern hotel. This need has finally been met, and the board were guests during their visit at West Point at the Thayer Hotel, a modern hotel in every sense, beautifully equipped and furnished, and operated under a thoroughly first-class management. This hotel was built by private capital, but it is located on the military reservation. It is indispensable for the accommodation of the relatives and friends of cadets who go to West Point. The board was impressed with the importance of the Government lending every possible assistance to the management of the hotel with a view of keeping the rates within reasonable bounds. Whatever can be done in this matter should be done.

The board recommends that consideration be given to the proposition of furnishing heat and light for the hotel at Government rates and that the Government also cooperate in developing the grounds around the hotel so as to provide means of recreation in the immediate vicinity for the cadets and their friends who are guests at the hotel.

The board feels it should commend the music at West Point. The Academy band is one of the finest military bands in the world. An organ recital rendered for the special benefit of the board in the beautiful cadet chapel was impressive and inspiring.

It is the opinion of the board that West Point represents something more than an Army post or a military academy. It is, in addition, a great institution, peculiarly American, in which the people of the Nation take a personal pride. For this reason the character of the buildings should be of greater beauty and splendor than would be necessary on an Army post and should conform to the harmony of the existing architecture.

Respectfully,

JOHN M. MORIN, Chairman.
J. MAYHEW WAINWRIGHT, Member.
HUBERT F. FISHER, Member.
VIRGIL CHAPMAN, Member.
JAMES A. HUGHES, Member.
HAROLD G. HOFFMAN, Member.

FEDERAL PRISON CAMPS

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 11285) to establish Federal prison camps, with Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASES

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5769) to authorize the consolidation and coordination of Government purchases, to enlarge the functions of the General Supply Committee, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan rise?

Mr. MAPES. I rise to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question, if I may.

Mr. WOOD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAPES. In what way does the Senate amendment differ from the original House bill?

Mr. WOOD. I will say that the only way the Senate amendment differs from the House bill is in this. It adds a provision with reference to the construction of a warehouse for the use of the supply committee.

There is a bill pending on this side to the same effect and a similar bill was introduced on the other side by Senator SMOOT at the same time I introduced the bill here, and in order that the general supply committee may function as it ought to function and purchase goods as it ought to purchase them, in quantity, to get the discounts, and so forth, they will of necessity have to have a warehouse.

Mr. MAPES. How large and how expensive a building is contemplated by the Senate amendment?

Mr. WOOD. The amendment states the dimensions of the building. The amount of floor space is 400,000 square feet.

Mr. MAPES. Has any estimate been made of the cost?

Mr. WOOD. There has been a tentative estimate made by the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Public Parks. It is proposed to build it in sections. I think they have a plan and ground in view upon which they think it can best be built, where the railroads come together.

Mr. MAPES. What is the tentative cost?

Mr. WOOD. The completed cost of all the sections will be in the neighborhood of $1,500,000.

Mr. MAPES. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana what committee reported the bill originally?

Mr. WOOD. The Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MAPES. Has the Committee on the Judiciary considered the Senate amendment?

Mr. WOOD. The Judiciary Committee has considered the bill which I introduced on this side, which is exactly like the Senate amendment, and it has received the approval not only of the Judiciary Committee but also the approval of the President, the Budget, and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MAPES. Has any committee considered the bill as it comes from the Senate?

Mr. WOOD. No; it has just come from the Senate. It is very important that it pass at this session.

Mr. MAPES. Does the gentleman from Indiana call up this House bill with a Senate amendment without the consultation of any committee having charge of the bill?

Mr. WOOD. I will say to the gentleman the bill has just come over on this side, but it is of vast importance and if it is referred to a committee we can not possibly hope to get it through. If this bill becomes a law, I know from the evidence adduced before the committee and from interviews I have had with the heads of the different bureaus of the Government it will save more than $500,000 a year.

Mr. MAPES. Being of such vast importance, does the gentleman think it ought to come up without any consideration at all by any committee or that it should be considered by the House in this way?

Mr. WOOD. It has been considered, I will say to the gentleman, and it is very well understood by all those who have given it consideration; and if I were not perfectly sure that I am right in my action, I certainly would not take advantage of this time to ask for its consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

PRINTING THE ADDRESS OF MR. BECK

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the admirable and scholarly address delivered to-day by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] may be printed as a public document. I am pleased to say that this request is made not only on an impulse of my own but at the suggestion and with the approval of many gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the address by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] may be printed as a public document. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman how many copies will be printed?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I can not tell the gentleman offhand. I do not know what the usual number is. I am asking for the printing under the general rule.

Mr. SNELL. Up to the amount allowed under the general rule?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I would like to have quite a number of copies, for I know that my people will appreciate them, and I want a number printed sufficiently large to give us all quite a number of copies.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am making the only request I can make now. If there be more required than the amount allowed by law, that can be taken care of later.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

POSITION OF THE BUREAU OF PUBLIC ROADS UPON THE CONSTRUCTION OF TOLL BRIDGES

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, there is considerable controversy as to the attitude of the Bureau of Roads on the question of building toll bridges. I have requested the director, Mr. McDonald, to submit an article on this question, and he has done so. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing this statement of the Director of the Bureau of Roads.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the cities, counties, States, and the Federal Government are expending each year more than a billion dollars for the construction and maintenance of highways. We are far behind in the construction of highway bridges.

The cities, counties, and States are unable to provide the revenues necessary to construct bridges that are now greatly in demand to facilitate travel along the highways that have been built and are being built, and this has created a lively interest in the building of toll bridges. The present needs of travel and commerce can not be served by the slow processes of the ferryboat.

We must have more bridges, and if the revenues of the cities, counties, and States are not sufficient to construct them, then we must look to other means to meet this need.

The promotors of the construction of toll bridges have been very active. The question arises, In what way can the interest of the public be best served? I desire to call to the attention of the Congress and the country an illuminating statement made in writing to-day by the Hon. Thomas McDonald, Chief of the Federal Bureau of Roads. Mr. McDonald is one of the best-informed men on the road and bridge subject in this country or in any other country. He has no interest to serve except the welfare of the people of the Nation. His statement is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF PUBLIC ROADS,
Washington, D. C., February 21, 1929.

Hon. JOHN M. ROBSION,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. ROBSION: In response to your request for a statement as to the position of the Bureau of Public Roads upon the matter of toll bridges, I welcome the opportunity to make very clear both the position and the reasons which substantiate it.

We do not oppose public toll bridges. We support strongly the building of toll bridges by the public where funds are not available for the building of free bridges or the construction would be too long deferred. We favor the building of public toll bridges upon the basis of revenue bonds. It is not necessary for the public to issue bonds to be paid from property taxes or to place one cent of property other than the bridge itself and its earnings behind such bonds in order to finance a public toll bridge. This is a development of only the past few years in this country, although the plan has been long and widely used abroad by the public to finance public improvements. The interest and the bonds are retired from the earnings of the bridge or the public utility itself, and not one cent of property tax is obligated; the bonds are not a debt in the sense of the constitutional meaning of indebtedness against the State or municipality which uses this plan.

Some of the best investment bankers prefer to finance the public rather than private companies, and the public can borrow on the basis of revenue bonds at an equal or less rate than can a private individual or a private company. The public does not have promotion charges, is not in the business to make a profit, and therefore can build and operate at a less cost than can a private company, and as soon as the bridge is paid for out of earnings it becomes a free bridge.

We are strongly opposed to private toll bridges on any part of the public highway system. We have become more strongly opposed since through inquiry we have developed the fact that in every way possible the cost to the public has been increased beyond any reasonable amount—through promotion, organization, discount, noncompetitive contracts, and overcapitalization.

We have instances and can give the figures for capitalization in excess of 100 per cent of the original cost of the bridge, and the public is expected not only to put the money into the securities on the basis of the excess capitalization, but it is also expected to pay tolls in order to pay profits on the basis of the excess capitalization.

The authorizations which have been granted by Congress do not provide adequate protection to the public in financing, in the plans and specifications, in supervision of construction, or in the operation of the structures.

The States are moving rapidly to pass laws which will permit them to build toll bridges on the basis of revenue bonds. This plan will not increase the taxes upon property, and will not increase the bonded indebtedness, the bridge service will be rendered at a less toll rate than private companies would demand, and in a relatively short time the property will be owned by the public and can be operated without tolls or at a very nominal cost. The revenues from the automobile registrations and gas taxes are increasing very rapidly, so that in fact the public is now demanding tolls from every user of the highways.

The highway officials of the Federal Government and of the States are opposed to the granting of further authorizations, either Federal or local, for private toll bridges. All we request is a reasonable time to get the necessary State legislation to build any bridge which ought to be built. Many of the franchises which are being asked for by private concerns can not support the investment from the earnings, and the failures will destroy the confidence of investors in this type of securities to the extent that the public will not be able to finance needed structures which have a potential earning capacity sufficient to make them sound projects.

It must be remembered that after the promoter has taken his commissions he is no longer interested in the structure. It is the public which pays and continues to pay.

Very truly yours,

THOS. H. MACDONALD,
Chief of Bureau.

He makes it clear that the Federal road authorities are opposed to privately owned toll bridges, but Mr. MacDonald does say that where it is necessary the public (the cities, counties, and States) should build these bridges and to issue revenue bonds against the tolls. These tolls will be reasonable and the bridge become free to the public within a reasonable time. Mr. MacDonald has investigated the subject and he advises that investment bankers prefer to finance the public rather than private companies. The public can borrow on the basis of revenue bonds at an equal or less rate than can a private individual or a private company, and he points out that where these bridges are built by the public we can save promotion charges and we can build and operate it at less cost, and when the earnings pay for the bridge it becomes a free bridge.

In view of the fact that the public spends annually a billion or more dollars for the construction and maintenance of highways, it appears in the interest of the public welfare that these bridges be built by the public, controlled by the public, and become free without additional burdens and costs. Kentucky and many other States have passed laws providing that the State shall construct these toll bridges and have charge of them, and when the earnings have paid for the bridges that they then become free to the public.

Any community that permits a private toll bridge to be built may expect to have no end of trouble over the question of what is the fair and reasonable cost of construction, maintenance and upkeep, and the fair and reasonable tolls to be charged.

It seems to us that there can be no argument against the public keeping these important public-service utilities in their own hands, and it ought to need no argument to keep us from turning them over to private individuals and corporations. No one favors our permitting private individuals or corporations to build our highways, fix the matter of cost, tolls, and so forth.

The public issues bonds and levies taxes on gasoline and fixes licenses in order to raise the money to build roads. We may not be able to do this in building a bridge, but the next best thing is to let the State, county, or city build a bridge and issue bonds against the tolls of the bridge, and thereby avoid all unnecessary costs, profits, salaries, and keep the control in the hands of the public.

I strongly favor this policy not only for the people of Kentucky but for the Nation. We are interested in having fair treatment for the traveling public throughout the country.

ADDRESS OF HON. R. WALTON MOORE

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an address by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] on the life and character of Washington's physician and friend.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, on October 14, 1928, there was unveiled in the churchyard of the old Presbyterian Meeting House in Alexandria, Va., a monument to the memory of Dr. James Craik, who from the beginning of General Washington's military career in the French and Indian wars to the end of the Revolution was the medical officer most intimately associated with him, and was his family physician until his death. Among those who participated in the ceremonies were Maj. Gen. M. W. Ireland, Surgeon General of the Army. I desire to insert the address delivered by Representative R. WALTON MOORE, of Virginia, in whose district Alexandria and Mount Vernon are located. The address follows:

DR. JAMES CRAIK, A REVOLUTIONARY SURGEON GENERAL

In his biography of General Washington, Henry Cabot Lodge says of the man whose memory we are now honoring that "Doctor Craik was the companion of Washington's youth and his lifelong physician, was always his dear and close friend, and the regard between the two is very pleasant to look at as we see it glancing out here and there in the midst of state papers and official correspondence." Based upon such documents, we have just heard from the distinguished Surgeon General of the Army an interesting narrative of the activities of that officer of the Revolution who, whatever his title, must be thought of as in reality one of General Ireland's predecessors.

To me is assigned the task of trying to gather up into a sort of tapestry, however drab and imperfect, the information respecting the personal qualities and attitude of the physician, and his relation to the soldier and statesman who is now universally acclaimed as the world's greatest citizen. The task is marked by difficulty due to the fact that Doctor Craik did not write his reminiscences and has had no biographer to laboriously and carefully consult the sources from which more of him might be learned. The public records of the places where he resided should be examined. The newspaper files and particularly those of the Alexandria Gazette should be minutely examined. Nothing should be omitted which can be done to portray more adequately the patriot who so richly deserves to be remembered.

We can not forget the two localities with which Doctor Craik's life was mainly connected—Scotland, the land of his birth and this portion of America to which he came in his young manhood, where he lived and wrought, where he died, and in whose soil, within the shadow of this church he now sleeps in the goodly company of several of those who were at the front in the Revolutionary era.

The region in Scotland of which he was a native is radiant with the fame of those the mere mention of whom starts fascinating reflections. It is the region which boasts among its sons William Wallace, Robert Bruce, and John Knox, and another son, Robert Burns, who has sung of its attractions in undying verse, and who has also sung of the leader of our Revolution. From that region there came here numerous seamen and merchants of strong intellectual and moral fiber, without whose character and work the history of northern Virginia and this the principal town of northern Virginia would be far less glorious than it is. They constitute a long roll of resolute and adventurous pioneers, who did their utmost in times of peace to build up civilization in the new land and never shunned the bitter sacrifices which in times of war were demanded.

The home of the Craik family, which was a family of prominence, was at Arbigland, not far from the town of Dumfries, a home which more than a hundred years later was described as still beautiful with trees and flowers surrounding an impressive mansion. There overlooking the waters of Solway Firth from its north shore, James Craik first saw the light in 1730, and thus was just a little the senior of the soldier and statesman who two years later was born in our own county of Westmoreland. A circumstance of genuine interest is that at that home there was employed by Craik's father as his gardener the father of John Paul Jones, who himself was born at Arbigland. And accordingly in the struggle for American independence Washington had by his side the Arbigland physician, and at the same time there was fighting on the sea, while Washington led the forces of the Revolution on land, the Arbigland sailor who was the progenitor of the American Navy.

It is a coincidence that in 1778 John Paul Jones began to menace the commerce of England on the ocean in the very year Doctor Craik was disclosing to Washington the effort of the Conway Cabal to displace him from the command of the Army of the Revolution.

From the data which are available we know this: Craik left Scotland in 1750, when he was 20 years old, but I am ignorant of the reason which impelled him. It is stated he had been educated at the University of Edinburgh for service as a physician in the British Army, but I can only conjecture whether on leaving Scotland he was a member of a military expedition, or if so, for what length of time after arriving on this continent, he continued to wear the uniform of the British Army. He landed in one of the islands of the West Indies, and following a brief stay there was in Norfolk and then in Winchester, but could have been in each place but a short time before he participated in an expedition to the frontier, where he was to come in contact with the man with whom for so many years he was to be identified.

Some time subsequent to that expedition, exactly when I do not know, but it seems upon his marriage he took up his residence at Port Tobacco, the county seat of Charles County, Md., where still stands the house he occupied. The date of his marriage was 1760, and his wife was the daughter of Charles Ewell, of Belle Air, Prince William County, who was a cousin of General Washington, and of that marriage there were born six sons and three daughters, some of whose descendants are here to-day.

That his political views, prior to the Revolution, accorded with those of Washington, is very clear. Here in May, 1774, the year I believe in which this church was established, there was a meeting of the freeholders of Fairfax County, of which Alexandria was the county seat, to protest against the oppression of the city of Boston by the British. Washington presided at the meeting and the resolutions—the Fairfax resolves—setting forth many of the doctrines afterwards announced in the Virginia Bill of Rights and the Declaration of Independence were written by George Mason. Less than two months later Craik participated in a similar meeting in Charles County, and was appointed a member of the committee on correspondence which it created. After the close of the Revolution, I think it was in 1784, he settled and practiced his profession here, his residence being within a stone's throw of this church. In his old age he retired from practice and spent the last few years of his life at Vaucluse, a few miles west of Alexandria, with his son, George Washington Craik, and his grandchildren, and there he died on February 6, 1814. The son was named for his friend and there is a letter preserved containing a generous offer by Washington in respect to the son's education.

Our idea of Doctor Craik's personal appearance is obtained from a silhouette of a very handsome young man wearing a military hat and from a portrait painted in his maturer years. It is hardly too much to say that even if we had less knowledge of them, we might easily conclude, from looking at the pictures of Washington and Craik that they resembled each other, in that while they were unafraid and daring, they were deliberate and cautious. It was their way to look forward carefully before acting and then act with vigor and determination. They observed the injunction of Lord Bacon that "In meditation all dangers should be seen; in execution none unless they are formidable." Doctor Craik's life spanned a period of 84 years and in one of the little sketches of him he is described as being toward the end a "stout, hale, cheery, old man, perfectly erect, fond of company and children, and amusing himself with light gardening work."

It is noted that almost up to the time of his death he often walked from Vaucluse to Alexandria and back, and that a few weeks before his death he was in such excellent health as to engage in a foot race with a young grandson. An article in the Alexandria Gazette of February 10, 1814, four days after his death, stresses his unswerving devotion to Washington, his fine ability, his unsullied character, his close affiliation with the people of the community, and the warm esteem in which he was held by all.

On one point there can be no question, that while practicing his profession in Maryland and Virginia, he stood forth as a capable, earnest, and beloved physician. In that aspect he is commended by all of his contemporaries who refer to him. Since the towns were then mere villages and beyond their limits the population was sparse and scattered, in pursuing his profession he was compelled to endure all the exertions and hardships incident to traveling day and night over wretched highways threading extensive areas. I like to think of him as a county physician of that group who then and in less remote days excelled all others in the simple self-sacrificing service of humanity. He was a Scotchman, and nowhere is the country physician such as he was, more strikingly depicted than in the Bonnie Brier Bush stories of A Doctor of the Old School. You recall how the author tells that as they laid to rest Doctor McClure, the hero of those stories, a gentleman standing by the grave said, "We have buried here the remains of one who served the Glen with a devotion that has known no reservation and a kindness that has never failed for more than 40 years."

And then the minister preached from the text, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend." And then an old peasant tenderly quoted that other text, "Come ye blessed of my Father. * * * I was sick and ye visited me." All of this would have been appropriate as Doctor Craik was laid to rest in the churchyard with the survivors of the Revolution, his fellow Masons, those who worshiped with him here, and the people of the town, lamenting his death.

Turn to the relation in which he stood to General Washington. You remember how when Washington was just passing beyond his boyhood, the western wilderness in the neighborhood of what is now Pittsburgh was the scene of the opening contest between the French and English for the control of the headwaters of the Ohio River; how Washington was sent to that frontier on a mission of peace to the French which failed, and how in 1754 the war drums sounded and Virginia organized a regiment to march to the scene of a conflict which was irrepressible. Joshua Fry was appointed colonel of that regiment and Washington was lieutenant colonel. The regiment moved in two detachments from Alexandria, one under the command of Washington and the other under the command of Fry, with whom was Doctor Craik.

Fry died near what is now the city of Cumberland and his detachment went forward and joined Washington, who succeeded him as colonel. I need not relate that the two forces having united, a battle was fought at Great Meadows at which the French prevailed, and that near there the Virginians strengthened the little fortification called Fort Necessity where Washington made his defense against the French and Indians but which he was compelled to surrender because outnumbered and with no supplies to maintain his command. It was then and there that the friendship between Washington and Craik was formed which never weakened. It was such an enduring and cloudless friendship as Washington, who throughout his life did not escape persistent hostilities and criticism, perhaps never enjoyed with any other individual. A little later they were again together in the same western wilderness in the Braddock campaign. Together they fought to preserve a remnant of the army which Braddock's inexperience and rashness had exposed to destruction. Most of the officers being killed, Washington as Braddock's only surviving aide-de-camp assumed command and was in the very thick of the conflict. Two horses were shot under him and there were four bullet holes in his coat and yet he was uninjured.

Doctor Craik in relating that experience was frequently heard to declare that nothing but divine interposition could have preserved Washington's life in that hour of carnage and disaster. It is from him also that we have the story that when he and Washington were again on the same frontier in 1770, an Indian chief who came to meet them told of trying to kill the young officer who was rallying his men to a supreme effort. The chief said he singled him out and fired his rifle at him many times and directed his warriors to do the same but that to his astonishment there was no result, and that he had come to pay homage to the man who was evidently the particular favorite of Heaven and destined never to die in battle. Craik had attended Colonel Fry in his fatal illness; he ministered to Braddock as he was dying, and he stood by Washington as the latter read the burial service over the English general.

As soldier and physician Craik served through the Revolution with conspicuous usefulness and gallantry, always approved by Washington and most of the time in immediate association with him. He had the entire confidence of the wonderful leader, who referred to him in his last will and testament not only as his "old and intimate friend" but as his "compatriot in arms." No man ever lived who would not have been thrilled by such commendation.

Doctor Craik, because of his unbroken intimacy with Washington, perhaps had a clearer conception than anyone else of his temperament and disposition. When Washington Irving was preparing his biography of the great Virginian he eagerly reached out for any correspondence which might be in existence. He called on Lawrence Lewis, a nephew of Washington, who had for a time lived with Doctor Craik and was disappointed to be told that a large package of the Washington-Craik correspondence had in some way been lost. But Mr. Lewis was emphatic in confirming Irving's belief that to no one was Washington knit by such strong ties as to his physician.

Doctor Craik also had a better opportunity than anyone else of knowing that Washington's health was much less vigorous than has generally been believed, and he made it his duty to guard him as far as possible against risking it. After the Braddock campaign, upon Craik's advice, Washington gave up his military activities in order to rest and recuperate at Mount Vernon. After the Revolution, Washington persuaded Doctor Craik to locate in Alexandria so as to be near Mount Vernon. There is ground for believing that he urged this move in 1784 when he and Craik once more journeyed to the West at the time Washington, with broad vision of a coherent union with better means of transportation, was beginning to plan the construction of a canal connecting the Ohio and Potomac Rivers. He did locate in Alexandria, and in the Washington diaries recently published, comprising four volumes, I think that no one is mentioned as a visitor to Mount Vernon and otherwise so often as the physician, not even Hamilton and other statesmen to whom Washington was strongly attached. And Washington was a frequent visitor at the Craik home here in Alexandria.

Look for a moment at some of the Washington letters which have fortunately been preserved. During the first administration, when New York was the seat of the Federal Government, he was prostrated by illness and wrote the Secretary of War asking for an appointment for Doctor Craik which would enable the latter to be near him. In that letter he said, "The habits of intimacy and friendship in which I have long lived with Doctor Craik and the opinion I have of his professional knowledge would most certainly point him out as the man of my choice in all cases of sickness. I am convinced of his sincere attachment to me, and I should with cheerfulness trust my life in his hands; but how far circumstances at present would justify his quitting his practice in Alexandria and enabling him to gratify his inclination and my wishes, I am not able to say; but, could it be made consistent with his advantage to be near me, I am sure it would be highly pleasing to me."

When he was no longer President and a war with France was anticipated, and appointments in the Army were being considered, Washington, who was to be the commander in chief, again wrote expressing his unbounded faith in his physician. In that letter he said, "I have already been applied to by a gentleman to recommend him for director of the hospital, which I have refused, as well on general grounds as because if I ever have occasion for a physician or surgeon I should prefer my old friend Doctor Craik who, from 40 years' experience, is better qualified than a dozen of them together."

In that time the style of letters written by friends to each other was very formal, and Washington was not emotional or given to using terms of familiarity, but in writing Doctor Craik he addressed him not as "Sir" or "Dear Sir" but as "Dear Doctor" and sent messages to his family, and in closing expressed his affection for him.

When, on that Saturday morning in December, 1799, after his last ride over the Mount Vernon estate on the preceding Thursday, and the last entry in his diary on Friday, Washington became apprehensive that he was seriously sick, he asked that Doctor Craik be sent for, who soon arrived and remained until the curtain fell on the final scene of the most memorable career which history has recorded.

It was a sorrowful scene for the man who during almost half a century had had the opportunity of appreciating not only the great intellect but the great heart and sympathetic nature of the founder of the liberties and institutions of our country who was about to pass away. As the dark shadows gathered, Craik sat by the fire agitated by the grief which he was hardly able to control. When the fatal moment was approaching he was at the bedside holding Washington's head to his bosom, pressing his hand, hearing his last words, and then closing his eyes when the spirit had taken its flight. He was one of the mourners at the tomb, and afterwards he said, "I, who was bred among scenes of human calamity and had so often witnessed death in its direst and most awful forms, believed that its terrors were too familiar to my eyes to shake my fortitude; but when I saw this great man die it seemed to me as if the bonds of my nature were rent and the pillars of my country's happiness had fallen to the ground."

Doctor Craik was the surgeon who cared for many of the officers wounded during the Revolution, including Lafayette. When peace had not yet been secured he hastened from Yorktown to care for Mrs. Washington's son, John Custis, a member of the Virginia Legislature from Fairfax County, who was then sick at Eltham, in New Kent County. He was with Mrs. Washington in her final illness. He was the trusted physician not only of the Washingtons but of other outstanding families of the neighborhood. George Mason, of Gunston Hall, in writing an account of his mother, tells how she was "attended by Doctor Craik, * * * an intimate and personal friend of General Washington as he was of my father."

A scientist has stated that a shadow never falls upon a surface without leaving a permanent trace which would become visible by resort to processes which might conceivably be devised. What a picture we would have if there could be thus represented the forms of those identified in the past with this particular locality. In the picture the most shining figures would be those of the father of his country and the author of the Virginia Bill of Rights. And not far from them in priority of distinction would be the figure of the remarkable physician whose character and services entered into the web and woof of those achievements which as the generations come and go can not be forgotten unless our Republic should become faithless to its ideals and its hopes.

BRIDGES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order of the House the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] for 45 minutes.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, a great man of letters has said somewhere that sometimes there is only one step from the sublime to the ridiculous. We have just had an opportunity to listen to a splendid address on the life of Washington by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK]. I hesitate to invite your attention to a subject such as I am going to discuss immediately following that address.

I sometimes think that in political principles and their application to the government of nations there has not been much progress from Washington's time to our own. But in the material things of life, those things that go for the conveniences, the comforts, the pleasures, and the advantages of life there has been a wonderful progress since Washington lived at Mount Vernon.

I go out to Mount Vernon every time I have an opportunity, because I like to sit out there and reflect on the changes that have taken place in the material things of life since his time. I like to think of how he would ride from Mount Vernon to Alexandria, and perhaps to Baltimore and Philadelphia in his old-time coach, hauled by two or four horses, while we in going from Mount Vernon to Washington or to Baltimore or Philadelphia ride in our splendid motor cars. In his time he had to drive with his company from Mount Vernon to Alexandria or to Baltimore or Philadelphia or New York through mud that was almost immeasurable and at some seasons entirely impassible, while in a short time we will be able to travel from Mount Vernon to Washington over a splendid concrete memorial bouleyard constructed by the Government which he helped to found; and we can now go from Mount Vernon to Philadelphia or New York without getting dust on our cars.

When General Washington traveled from Mount Vernon to Philadelphia or New York he could only cross the rivers by means of antiquated ferryboats, there being no bridges; if weather conditions were unfavorable, or if it was in the night time, he would have to remain in a near-by village or town until the next day.

Times have changed since then with the great increase of population and the improvement of our highways and the transportation of interstate commerce over them, the rivers of the country have become bearers to the movement of commerce on land and there is a universal demand for the construction of highway bridges to afford safe and rapid transit over the rivers. There are some who still prefer to compel the people to cross our rivers by the old antiquated ferries or by modern ferries rather than to permit toll bridges to be constructed to replace them. It is the view of our committee that if the States or municipalities are not in a financial condition to build free bridges at important crossings, private individuals ought to be given a right to construct toll bridges with private capital and they ought to be allowed to operate them as toll bridges until such time as the public authorities can take them over and make them free. In all franchises now granted by Congress we give the right to the State or municipalities to take over the bridge constructed under its provisions for the purpose of making it free. We do not believe that the people ought longer to be required to use ferries where a safer and quicker method of crossing the rivers can be provided, even if it has to be provided for the time being by private capital and operated under private management.

I am not going to discuss to-day the jurisdiction of the Federal Government over the navigable waterways of the country. I have spoken in this Chamber on other occasions when I gave references to decisions of the courts, and discussed generally the jurisdiction of the Federal Government over our navigable rivers. I am going to ask permission of the House to insert at the close of my remarks a brief that I have prepared showing the concurrent jurisdiction of the States and the Federal Government over the navigable waterways of the United States and showing the superior jurisdiction of the Federal Government whenever it chooses to assert it. I shall insert that at the close of my remarks for the benefit of any who may be interested in that subject.

The courts hold that the States and the Federal Government have concurrent jurisdiction over navigable waters within the boundaries of their respective States, but that, of course, the jurisdiction of the Federal Government is supreme and the States can do nothing with reference to rivers within their borders that will conflict in any way with the exercise of its superior jurisdiction by the Federal Government.

In 1890 Congress enacted a law in the rivers and harbors bill of that year which prohibited anyone from building any structure in or over any of the navigable waters of the United States until approval for such structure had been obtained from the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War. I think that was the first general legislation that Congress enacted upon that subject; but in 1899, by section 9 of the rivers and harbors act, Congress went further than that, and I am going to take the liberty of asking the Clerk to read section 9 of that act in order to advise the Members of the House of the first action taken by the Congress asserting its supreme jurisdiction over the navigable waterways of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Section 9 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899]

SEC. 9. That it shall not be lawful to construct or commence the construction of any bridge, dam, dike, or causeway over or in any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, navigable river, or other navigable water of the United States until the consent of Congress to the building of such structures shall have been obtained and until the plans for the same shall have been submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and by the Secretary of War: Provided, That such structures may be built under authority of the legislature of a State across rivers and other waterways the navigable portions of which lie wholly within the limits of a single State, provided the location and plans thereof are submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and by the Secretary of War before construction is commenced: And provided further, That when plans for any bridge or other structure have been approved by the Chief of Engineers and by the Secretary of War, it shall not be lawful to deviate from such plans either before or after completion of the structure unless the modification of said plans has previously been submitted to and received the approval of the Chief of Engineers and of the Secretary of War.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Is it the gentleman's intention in the course of his remarks to define the real test of navigability?

Mr. DENISON. I do not think I shall have the time to go into that, but I shall define it very briefly in a few moments.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And I should like the gentleman to attach to the paper which he states he will have permission to insert, a citation of those decisions which he has collated, so that they may be readily acceptable.

Mr. DENISON. I will be glad to do that.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Assuming now that bridges have been built within a State, wholly within a State, with the approval of the War Department, does that subject any of these folks who have these bridges to criminal liability?

Mr. DENISON. Oh, no; not to any criminal liability, but if the bridges have been built unlawfully the Chief of Engineers can order them removed.

Mr. ABERNETHY. But they have been built under the direction of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. DENISON. If they are lawful structures, they can not be removed unless, of course, they should obstruct navigation. As to the question of what is a navigable waterway, that is a question of law and fact. It has been adjudicated in numerous cases that have gone to the Supreme Court, and the courts have held that if at any time in the history of a particular river it has been used for transportation purposes, however primitive, if it has been used as a highway for commerce at any time in its history, it is to be classed as a navigable waterway of the United States. A great many of the smaller rivers in the early years of our history were used by the pioneers for transporting their produce from one part of the country to another.

They may have been used by hunters for transporting their pelts, or they may have been used for various purposes. The early French explorers used our rivers for traveling and transporting their property in their canoes; the court will inquire into the history of the river, and if it finds from the history of the river and from all other facts before the court that it has been at some time used as a channel of commerce, it will hold it to be a navigable waterway under the laws of the United States.

I have just had read section 9 of the act of 1899 when Congress first asserted its authority over these navigable waterways. In 1906, on March 23, the first general bridge law became effective, in which Congress repeated substantially the act of 1899 which I have just had read, but we went further in that act, and dealt more specifically with the construction of bridges over navigable waterways, and among other things it was provided in section 4 of that act as follows:

If tolls shall be charged for the transit over any bridge constructed under the provisions of this act, of engines, cars, street cars, wagons, carriages, vehicles, animals, foot passengers, or other passengers, such tolls shall be reasonable and just, and the Secretary of War may, at any time, and from time to time, prescribe the reasonable rates of toll for such transit over such bridge, and the rates so prescribed shall be the legal rates and shall be the rates demanded and received for such transit.

Now, every bridge that has been built over the navigable waters of the United States under acts of Congress since March 23, 1906, has been built subject to the provisions of that act, and the Federal Government has the right to regulate the toll charged for the use of the bridge.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This law defining reasonable rates must be construed as to reasonableness in the same way as it applies to railroad rates? They can not be arbitrary rates of the Secretary of War. They must be based on the figures of the bridge company? Am I correct?

Mr. DENISON. No; the gentleman is not correct. They are based upon these considerations: If it is claimed by a responsible person that the owner of any particular bridge is charging tolls that are unjust and unreasonably large, the Chief of Engineers will order the district engineer under whose jurisdiction that particular bridge is located to make an investigation. He will have a public hearing; the owner of the bridge will be heard, and anyone else who is interested will be heard. The engineer transcribes the evidence and sends the evidence as transcribed, together with his report, to the Chief of Engineers. In that inquiry the engineer will ascertain what the bridge cost, and what it costs to maintain it and keep it in repair; he will inquire as to the tolls charged upon other bridges of a similar character, and will hear evidence upon any question that may properly enter into consideration in determining what will be fair and just and reasonable tolls to be charged; and then the Chief on Engineers, if he finds that the tolls charged are unreasonable or unjust, will fix the tolls that ought to be charged, and from his finding there is no appeal.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Is there any instance where the department is doing what the gentleman has just stated?

Mr. DENISON. Yes. They are doing it to-day.

Mr. DOWELL. And arbitrarily fixing the rates?

Mr. DENISON. I did not say they were arbitrarily fixing the rates.

Mr. DOWELL. I understood you to say he arbitrarily fixed the rates.

Mr. DENISON. I said that after hearings were held and he finds from the evidence what is a just and reasonable rate, he fixes the rate. That is not an arbitrary fixing of the rate.

Mr. DOWELL. But my inquiry was this: Does he have the power to fix the rates when he hears the evidence?

Mr. DENISON. He has.

Mr. DOWELL. Has that been done by the War Department?

Mr. DENISON. It is repeatedly done.

Mr. DOWELL. Another question. It is a well-known fact that there is no uniformity whatever as to toll rates on any two toll bridges over the country. Is it not a fact that that is one of the functions of the War Department, and when it has passed upon this question it is in a case where something extraordinary has happened and the matter has been brought before him. Is it not usually true that there is no consideration given whatever to the tolls?

Mr. DENISON. No; it is not true. I do not know where the gentleman got that impression.

Mr. DOWELL. I got that opinion from traveling over the toll bridges. I know they are entirely out of harmony with any kind of equity.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman from Iowa ought not to judge whether the War Department is doing its duty by merely riding over the different toll bridges of the country. I would suggest to the gentleman that he confer with the Chief of Engineers and then reach his conclusion. Then the gentleman will find that they do just as they are told to do by the act of Congress. They have a hearing and enter into all the phases of the question, and they try to determine what would be just and reasonable rates to be charged, so far as can be determined from the evidence.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman permit one other question for information?

Mr. DENISON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman give us some statement now upon what basis the War Department fixes the rate of toll? Is it the value of the toll bridges? Is there a system in the War Department, or rather a program approved by the department, by which all these toll bridges have their rates fixed?

Mr. DENISON. No. In the nature of things that could not be. Whenever the Chief of Engineers has an investigation made of any particular bridge, evidence is heard as to that particular bridge, and the tolls are fixed with reference to that particular bridge. The tolls fixed would depend upon a number of circumstances. All the evidence is taken into consideration. I have not the time now to make a further analysis of that subject.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I think this is information of great importance to the country because, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] has said, there is a great deal of confusion in the country on the subject. The law says, "Fix reasonable tolls." Is that based on the cost of the bridge, or the value of the bridge, as they claim it to be, after we have expended millions of dollars by State and Federal Government in building highways? For instance, in my district there is a bridge that cost $3,700. They are collecting $30,000 from that bridge every year. They claim now its value is $50,000. What is the basis?

Mr. DENISON. I will have to say to my friend from Kentucky that I never have participated in one of these hearings. I have read to the House the act by which Congress placed this duty on the Chief of Engineers. I am told that the Chief of Engineers tries to perform that duty as best he can under the mandate of Congress. I do not know, of course, just what elements he takes into consideration in arriving at his conclusions. But here is the law, and the Chief of Engineers and Secretary of War are the officials charged by law with the duty of making an investigation wherever charges are filed and, after a full and fair hearing, fixing what they find to be just and reasonable rates of toll.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. That authority having been placed in the War Department, I was wondering how efficiently and effectively that law is operating for the benefit of the public.

Mr. DENISON. I will say to the gentleman that wherever there has been a complaint made the War Department has acted promptly; they have had full hearings and considered the cases carefully and very often have reduced the tolls to a point where there was no further complaint about them.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I yield.

Mr. BURTNESS. Has not one difficulty been found in this, that there is no law to regulate the tolls charged over a bridge built prior to 1906?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; the gentleman from North Dakota is correct.

Mr. BURTNESS. And the most severe complaints have been made as to bridges built prior to that time?

Mr. DENISON. That is true.

Mr. BURTNESS. Then I want to ask the gentleman one other question, which he can answer in his own time. Has the gentleman given any consideration to the question as to whether Congress could constitutionally adopt legislation now for the regulation of tolls over bridges built prior to the 1906 act?

Mr. DENISON. Well, that is a pertinent and important inquiry. Of course, we must remember that before March 23, 1906, the Government did not attempt to regulate the tolls charged on bridges, and there are quite a few toll bridges in the country that were built prior to 1906. Those are the bridges about which there is so much complaint.

The War Department can not now, under existing law, regulate the tolls on such bridges; and there is a very just complaint against the charges now being made for transit over some of those bridges. I will say, in answer to the question of the gentleman from North Dakota, that I believe Congress has the power to pass legislation regulating the tolls over bridges constructed before 1906.

Mr. BURTNESS. I am very glad to hear the gentleman say that, because it seems to me that situation is no different from what it was, for instance, with reference to railroads built prior to the adoption of the interstate commerce act. These bridges are agencies of interstate commerce—being built across navigable streams, so that they are arteries of interstate commerce—and over which we have jurisdiction.

Mr. DENISON. There is no question in my mind but that Congress, under the commerce clause of the Constitution, has the power to pass legislation regulating the tolls that are charged on those toll bridges constructed prior to March 23, 1906, especially if they are bridges constructed over rivers that constitute the boundary line between States; because all the commerce that goes over such bridges is in the very nature of things interstate commerce. With reference to bridges of that character which have been built within the different States, if those bridges are now located on highways that have been constructed through Federal aid and are now used as channels of interstate commerce, I believe the Congress has the power to pass legislation regulating the tolls charged for those bridges.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. DENISON. For a brief question; yes.

Mr. DOWELL. In view of the fact that most of the road construction has been carried on since 1906, and in view of the opinion of the gentleman that we are able to pass legislation fixing the rates or regulating the rates over the bridges, does not the gentleman believe his committee should immediately bring a bill to this House and immediately have it passed to regulate these tolls so as to forever stop the objection that has been made with reference to these toll bridges on Federal-aid highways?

Mr. DENISON. I will say to the gentleman that I have a bill pending for that purpose.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is the gentleman cognizant of any situation such as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] described the other day with respect to the resistance of certain bridge companies to the orders of the Chief of Engineers in reference to the regulation of tolls on one or more bridges of this character?

Mr. DENISON. No; I am not familiar with that.

Mr. BRIGGS. I understood the gentleman from Missouri to say the other day, when we were considering some bridge bills on the Consent Calendar, that some concern that had one of these toll bridges, which was receiving rather extraordinary returns from the tolls charged, was making quite a good deal of resistance to the regulation of those tolls.

Mr. DENISON. Of course, I do not suppose we can pass any law which will prevent people from litigating if they want to do so. It is natural for people to resist having their incomes reduced.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does not the gentleman think the practical way to deal with this, until general legislation is obtained, would be to carry in bridge bills a reservation of the right to regulate tolls?

Mr. DENISON. We do that in all of the bridge bills that are now passed. In all of the bills now presented to the House we reserve the right to regulate the tolls.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. At the time these bridges are under construction by the bridge companies, or soon thereafter, are they required to file with any public official the amount expended on the construction of a particular bridge?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; we require that in reference to all bridges.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield for just a short question?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it not true that the decision of the Secretary of War as to rates is final to the people or to the State complaining of excessive rates, but if the company deems the rates fixed by the Secretary of War to be confiscatory on the basis of its own valuation, they may resort to the courts?

Mr. DENISON. Why, of course. No agency of the Government can confiscate private property, and whenever it is claimed that that has been done, the parties always have the right to resort to the courts to determine whether there has been a confiscation.

I will have to proceed now because my time is passing, although I realize these questions bring out matters that are of importance to the House; if I have enough time I will be glad to answer any question I can.

Since the passage of the first Federal-aid road act in 1906 and the establishment of the policy of the Federal Government aiding in the construction of roads, there has been a wonderful growth of road building all over the country. Improved highways are being constructed everywhere, and commerce is growing on these highways. We have developed a new form of transportation, namely, by motor truck and by motor bus, and this kind of transportation is impatient at delays that are occasioned by having to wait and take the old-fashioned ferries to cross the rivers. So there has developed throughout the country a demand for the construction of bridges at all important highway crossings.

Here in Washington we feel it because it comes to the Members of Congress and they are asked to file bills to permit the construction of bridges.

I find that in the Sixty-sixth Congress, which was the second Congress after the enactment of the first Federal-aid road act, there were 100 bridge bills passed by the Congress in the two years; that is, about one for each State for each year.

In the Sixty-seventh Congress there were 115 bridge bills passed. Of course, these bridge bills were mostly for railroad bridges. When I first went on the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee we hardly ever had an application for a franchise for a highway bridge. There were no highway bridges built in those days except bridges like the large one at St. Louis or the ones at New York or in other large cities; but along about the Sixty-seventh Congress applications began to come in for permits to build highway bridges, and as the highway system of the country has improved, these applications for franchises to build highway bridges have been steadily increasing.

In the Sixty-eighth Congress there were passed 150 bridge bills of all kinds, railroad, interurban, and highway; in the Sixty-ninth Congress there were 213 bills passed; and in the Seventieth Congress, including those that are on the calendar now, there are about 375 bridge bills that have either been passed or will be passed before we adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. DENISON. I yield to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman state to the House the percentage of bridges that are actually built out of the number authorized by the Congress?

Mr. DENISON. Of course, we grant many franchises to build bridges, but various things happen to prevent their construction. I presume there is not 50 per cent of the bridges built under the franchises we grant. Sometimes they are unable to raise the money to build them. Then, sometimes, they are unable to present plans for the bridges that will be approved by the War Department; sometimes we grant franchises to municipalities or to counties or to the highway departments of the States, and they in turn have to submit these questions to a vote of the people, and the people, being unwilling to tax themselves, vote down the proposition; and sometimes we grant permits to State highway commissions and they submit to a vote of the people the proposition of issuing bonds to build the bridges and they are voted down; other reasons may arise that prevent the construction of the bridge, and under the general law these bridge franchises become ineffective unless construction is begun on the bridge within one year after the act is passed. So there is no necessary relation between the number of franchises we grant and the number of bridges that are built.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. What I had in mind was the fact that these bridges are not really constructed except at such places where public necessity or public demand justifies it.

Mr. DENISON. That is true.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Notwithstanding the very large number of permits?

Mr. DENISON. That is true. Of course, when a Member of Congress files a bill for a bridge franchise our committee respects his wishes and his action, as far as we can, and we treat all Members alike. These bills are all referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and this leads me now to a discussion of the policies of that committee, of which I would like to have the Members fully informed.

In the first place, it is the policy of that committee to give prompt consideration to all bills of this kind that come to it. [Applause.]

We respect the wishes of all Members of Congress alike, and we assume that when a Member of Congress files a bill for a franchise to build a bridge in his district, he is acquainted with the sentiment in his district, he knows what the people there want, and he is trying to carry out their wishes when he presents the bill; so our committee gives it prompt consideration. If we find there is any opposition to the bill, we give prompt hearings and let everyone who is interested come before the committee and be heard; then, after the hearings are completed, we give prompt consideration to the bill, and if we are convinced that it is a proper bill we report it and it goes on the calendar; and up to this time it has been the policy of the committee to lend its assistance to the authors of such bills, in so far as we can, in helping to get the bills through the House.

Now, another policy of the committee is to encourage the building of bridges by public authority. We feel, gentlemen of the House, that wherever the public authorities can do so they ought to build bridges, and this is especially true within the different States. If a bridge is to be built in a municipality or city, that city ought to build the bridge if it is in a financial condition to do so. If it is a county bridge, the county ought to build it if it can do so. If neither of them can build the bridge, we feel the State ought to do it if it is in a financial condition to do so. So we encourage the building of bridges by public authority wherever it can be done.

Now, how do we do this? We give preference to bills that are filed for franchises for public authorities. If there is a bill filed asking for a franchise for a private person or corporation to build a bridge at a particular place and there is another bill filed by the State or the State highway department or a municipality to build a bridge at or near the same place, we give preference to the public authority.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Why do you give it to the public authority?

Mr. DENISON. The reason ought to be apparent—I think if the bridge is built by a public authority, under a proper franchise granted, it will in time become a free bridge, and we all want free bridges.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit me, Mr. McDonald, director of roads, has made an investigation in this country. Three or four years ago the moneyed men would not finance a municipality or a State in the building of a bridge, but to-day the policy has changed within the last three or four years. Financial concerns now had rather furnish funds to States or municipalities than to finance private individuals or corporations.

Mr. DENISON. I am not so sure that that is the fact, although it may be true in some instances. But, as I say, the committee shows preference to the public authorities in this way. If a Member files a bill asking for a franchise for a private individual or a corporation to build a bridge at some particular place, the committee asks the author of the bill to file with it a statement over his signature stating whether or not there is any possibility or probability that the municipality or State will build a bridge at that place in the near future. We require that in all cases. If the Member can not give the committee such a showing we do not approve the bill. But when the Member comes before the committee and files the statement showing that there is no chance to get a publicly constructed bridge, we grant a franchise to the private individual.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. Is the highway commission of the State consulted or notified of the application of the parties for a franchise to build a bridge? Do they know of the application here?

Mr. DENISON. The Member who files the bill is supposed to get that information and furnish it to the committee. The committee could not make such inquiries itself. The committee submits the question to the Member who files the bill, and we expect him to file with the committee such information.

Mr. DOWELL. Under the present system the State highway commission is the one that fixes the place for the bridge and ought to be the one who would have the most information as to the propriety of Congress granting the franchise. Ought not the highway commission to have full notice of the application for granting a franchise at any given place?

Mr. DENISON. My own view is that that would be asking too much of the committee.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. A day or two ago a bill was passed to build a bridge at Maysville, Ky., giving the franchise to a private concern. The State of Kentucky has set aside $1,750,000 to build that bridge. I was wondering if it was required of the author of that bill to find out whether the State was likely to build the bridge or not.

Mr. DENISON. That was required of the author of the bill, and it will appear in the report of the committee.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I yield.

Mr. BURTNESS. Is not the position of the committee this: That the highway commission should be consulted, but the committee expects the individual Member of Congress who introduces the bill to consult with the State highway commission; and does not the committee require an answer to the specific question sent to them by the clerk of the committee as to whether or not there is any prospect of the State itself building the bridge?

Mr. DENISON. That is true, as I have already stated. I answered the gentleman in this way: I do not think our committee ought to be expected to make that investigation. We do expect the Member who files the bill to make it. He is the one most vitally interested. It is in his district, and he is supposed to represent the public of that district. When he presents a bill we inquire of him and expect him to furnish an answer to the inquiry, and we take the information he furnishes in good faith.

Mr. DOWELL. That is the question I asked—if your committee required that information, and was it furnished. I did not ask if the committee went out to get it.

Mr. DENISON. My answer is that if the gentleman from Iowa, for example, should file a bill for a franchise to build a bridge in his district—that is, for a franchise to a private individual—we would submit to him the inquiry whether his State highway department or the county or city is likely to build a bridge at this place. We would not undertake to tell the gentleman from Iowa how he shall get the information; we would assume that, being a Member of Congress, he would do what is right and proper and get the information from the very best sources.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The committee does not include in that inquiry, however, a request for information as to whether or not the State highway commission approves the building of the bridge there?

Mr. DENISON. No; we do not, because when Congress feels that a bridge ought to be built at a certain place in the interest of interstate commerce, we do not recognize the right of anybody to veto or disapprove it. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. For a short question, because I must get on if I am going to talk about what I intended to at all.

Mr. SCHAFER. Would it not be a good thing if the committee would amend its rules pertaining to these bridge bills and require that the Member of Congress introducing the bill shall send a copy of the bill to the State highway commission of his State and ask whether or not that commission has objections, and have them filed with the committee, so that the committee can have before it their objections or recommendations?

Mr. DENISON. Our committee does not feel that we ought to treat Members of Congress quite that way. We feel that we ought to treat them as Members of Congress elected to represent their districts, and we treat them just as we would want to be treated ourselves. But I must get ahead if I am to get any opportunity to say any part of what I intended to say about the policies of the committee.

Our committee does not recognize the right of anyone to own a monopoly in the crossing of a navigable water of the United States, so we grant no monopolies. If a bill is filed for permission to build a bridge, and we grant it, then if another bill is filed for permission to build another bridge in the same locality, if there are no objections presented that we consider valid, we grant the franchise to the second applicant also.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BEEDY). The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentlemen's time be extended 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. TILSON. Will it take that much time for the gentleman to finish?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. I hope the gentleman will finish within that time, because we have a number of very important matters to take up this afternoon.

Mr. DENISON. I appreciate that, but this is the first time that I have taken the floor this session. This is not a matter that is of particular interest to me, but I thought it would be to the rest of the House, because Members have been asking many questions about the policies of our committee.

Mr. TILSON. The discussion of the gentleman has been very useful to the House.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman has yielded very freely to Members to ask questions, and I think the time should be extended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. The Federal Government is not concerned about how many bridges are built over its navigable waters, provided they do not interfere with navigation, and, of course, the War Department will not permit that. So that we do not grant any monopolies. Some people came in to see me this week and called my attention to the fact that there is a certain bridge between two cities out in one of the Western States, and that there are now bills before our committee asking for a franchise to build one or two additional bridges there. These people came to me and said that if we granted those franchises it would bankrupt their company. That presents a very serious question, but our committee knows but one course to follow in such cases. Whoever invests money in a bridge does it with knowledge that there may be another bridge constructed in that vicinity. That is one of the hazards of that investment. I have always contended that an investment in a bridge over a navigable waterway is a hazardous investment, and that such investment is entitled to a large return in the way of dividends because of that hazard. But we can not help situations of that kind. We do not recognize the right of anybody to have a monopoly on the right to cross the navigable waters of the country, and so far as our committee is concerned we grant as many franchises as there are applications, if they are made in good faith and are presented by Members of Congress.

That is important for another reason. If we grant a monopoly, then, just as soon as we grant it, it would have a high speculative value, and a man could take these franchises and sell them at a high value to other people, because those people would have no competition. In order to prevent speculation in franchises, to prevent them from having any commercial value, we announced to the country that no one is justified in paying anybody $1 for a bridge franchise to cross any river in this country, because he can come here to our committee and get one for nothing.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. PARKER. I think the gentleman made one statement that he did not exactly intend to make and that is in the matter of a monopoly. The only monopolies granted by our committee are monopolies to municipalities.

Mr. DENISON. The chairman of the committee is correct in that respect. Of course, if there is a public bridge, we will not grant a franchise to a private individual to build another bridge at that point unless there is an urgent need shown for another bridge.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I call the gentleman's attention to this fact: Before the United States district engineers in Memphis the other day the owners of a bridge costing less than $200,000 filed a statement in which they placed the value of their franchise at $350,000.

Mr. DENISON. They can place its value at $3,000,000 if they want to. That does not make it so. We do not pay much attention to statements of that kind because they do not amount to very much.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I call that to the attention of the gentleman to show the abuses.

Mr. DENISON. But that is merely an abuse of language. Of course we hear these abuses of language every day, but as Members of Congress we ought not to allow those things to influence us in the performance of our duties. There ought not to be any value on franchises to build bridges that are granted by Congress, and this committee is doing everything it can to prevent these franchises from having any value; if people will go to a man or a company that has a franchise to build a bridge and pay anything for it, that is their fault. There is no reason for doing so. We can not prevent them from doing that, because men will buy gold bricks and will buy worthless stocks, and will buy real estate that has no title to it. Men will invest their money foolishly; but the point I make is that so far as the committee is concerned, we are following the policy of preventing these franchises from having any value, and we announce to the country that no one is justified in paying anybody one cent for a franchise to build a bridge, because Congress will grant them a franchise free if they will come to us and ask for it.

Mr. DOWELL. But hasn't it a value under the system that we have when it is built on one of the Federal-aid highways and where it has protecting roads on both sides of the bridge? It does have a real value, irrespective of the fact that another franchise may be granted. The man who had the other one granted would know that he is in competition with another one.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman from Iowa now is talking about the value of the bridge. I was talking about the value of the franchise before the bridge was built.

Mr. DOWELL. No; I was talking about the value of the franchise.

Mr. DENISON. Now, how do we protect the public interests when we grant these franchises? I want to show to the House and to the country briefly how we protect the public interests. In the first place, in all the bridge franchises that we grant we reserve the right to fix the tolls. There is no reason why the people should be imposed upon by unreasonable charges on toll bridges, especially on bridges built now, and in every bill that we pass we reserve the right to fix the tolls.

In the next place, in all franchises we grant to-day for the construction of bridges we require the owner or builder to make a sworn itemized statement of the cost of the bridge. That statement must be filed with the highway department of the State in which the bridge is located, and with the Chief of Engineers here in Washington within 90 days after the completion of the bridge. The franchise further provides that the Secretary of War may, and upon request of the highway department of the State shall, within three years after the completion of the bridge, make a complete investigation of its cost and make a finding as to the reasonable cost of the bridge; and such finding shall be conclusive for the purposes or recapture and rate making. With your permission I shall insert here this provision as to statement of costs and its investigation by the Secretary of War, which your committee now inserts in all bridge franchises granted to private individuals:

The ———, its successors and assigns (or his or their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns), shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War and with the highway departments of the States of ——— and ———, a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and upon request of the highway department of either of such States shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said ———, its successors and assigns (or his or their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns), shall make available all of its records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 4 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. LINTHICUM. How do you determine the charges?

Mr. DENISON. The War Department does that by conducting a full hearing in which they investigate every element of cost and consider all circumstances connected with the bridge, and from their investigation determine the reasonable charges that should be made.

Then in granting franchises to private individuals or corporations to construct bridges, we further protect the public by providing for the recapture of all such bridges whenever the public wishes to recapture them. With your permission I shall insert here the provision which our committee inserts in all bridge franchises granted to private parties to construct toll bridges:

SEC. 2. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of ———, any political subdivision thereof within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of such State governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of ——— years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion cost, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

It will thus be seen that either the State or the county or the city in which any privately owned toll bridge may be constructed is given the right to either purchase or condemn the bridge and take it over for the purpose of making it free. We even encourage the States or municipalities to take over privately owned toll bridges by allowing the States or the municipalities to operate any bridge so taken over as a toll bridge until the amount paid for the bridge has been amortized. It will be noted that we first give the public authority the general right to take over the bridge by purchase or condemnation at any time after its completion. We then further provide that if the public authority—the State, county, or city—takes over such a bridge by condemnation after a limited number of years, stated in the franchise, they can do so by the payment of a limited measure of damages; that is, the measure of damages is provided by the franchise to be the actual value of the physical structure, and in fixing the measure of damages in a condemnation proceeding nothing shall be allowed for going value or earning power or prospective profits.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. SEGER. Does the committee fix the time in which this power can be exercised?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; if it is a small bridge which does not cost much, or if it is in a sparsely settled community, we fix the time at five years. If it is a large bridge, we fix the time at 10 years. In some instances, where the cost of the bridge runs up into many millions of dollars, we would fix the time at 20 years. The time after which the limited measure of damages would apply is determined by the facts in each case. Since this right of recapture by the public upon terms that are entirely fair and just to the public is reserved in all franchises granted by Congress to private individuals to construct toll bridges, it ought to be plain to all of us that there is not the slightest reason why the public should be imposed on very long by the owners of private toll bridges. The public has a complete remedy if it chooses to exercise it.

In the next place, we try to further protect the interests of the public by requiring in all privately owned bridge franchises that all contracts made in connection with the construction of the bridge wherein the amount involved exceeds $5,000 shall be let by public bidding to the lowest responsible bidder. Whenever bridges are built by the States or counties or municipalities they are generally required by local law to let all contracts to the lowest responsible bidder. The committee thought that by requiring the same practice to be followed by private parties in constructing bridges the cost of the bridge would be kept down, and this becomes important in view of the fact that tolls may be based upon the cost of the structure, and the original cost of the structure is an element to be considered if the public should ever decide to take advantage of the recapture provision in the franchise. With your permission, I will insert here the provision I have just discussed with reference to the letting of contracts in connection with the construction of bridges:

All contracts made in connection with the construction of the bridge authorized by this act and which shall involve the expenditure of more than $5,000, shall be let by competitive bidding. Such contracts shall be advertised for a reasonable time in some newspaper of general circulation published in the State in which the bridge is located and in the vicinity thereof; sealed bids shall be required and the contracts shall be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder. Verified copies or abstracts of all bids received and of the bid or bids accepted shall be promptly furnished to the highway department of the State in which such bridge is located. A failure to comply in good faith with the provisions of this section shall render null and void any contract made in violation thereof, and the Secretary of War may, after hearings, order the suspension of all work upon such bridge until the provisions of this section shall have been fully complied with.

Finally, I call attention to the provision of the general bridge law of March 23, 1906, which requires that before any bridge can be constructed over a navigable waterway of the United States, either under a franchise granted by Congress or under State law, the bridge can not be commenced until the plans therefor and the location thereof have been submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War. These requirements are provided in the interest of navigation. Years ago when Congress granted consent for the construction of a bridge provision was made in the bill for the exact location of the bridge, for the width of the spans, and for the vertical height of clearance above the water line. But by the act of March 23, 1906, Congress delegated to the Chief of Engineers and to the Secretary of War the duty of passing upon such engineering questions connected with the construction of the bridge. The Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War are thus charged by law with the duty of safeguarding navigation on the rivers by preventing the erection of any bridge that will obstruct or endanger the free navigation of the waterway over which it is constructed.

I wish to call attention further to the act of March 23, 1906, which contains the following provision:

That whenever Congress shall hereafter by law authorize the construction of any bridge over or across any of the navigable waters of the United States, and no time for the commencement and completion of such bridge is named in said act, the authority thereby granted shall cease and be null and void unless the actual construction of the bridge authorized in such act be commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of the passage of such act.

Our committee never extends the time for beginning and completing the construction of bridges in the original franchise granting the right to construct. We invariably allow this provision of the general law to govern. So that all bridges authorized by the franchises we are now granting must be actually begun within one year and completed within three years from the date of the passage of the acts authorizing them. Very often causes arise which make it impossible to begin the construction of a bridge within a year after the franchise is granted. Sometimes it requires months to make the necessary borings to determine whether there is a suitable foundation for the bridge piers at the particular location chosen. Sometimes it requires months to have the plans for the bridge approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War. Sometimes floods or bad weather conditions make it necessary to delay the beginning of construction of the bridge. Where the franchise is granted to a State, or county, or municipality the proposal to issue bonds generally has to be submitted to a vote of the people, and if it fails it has to be again submitted; sometimes difficulty is experienced in obtaining the necessary finances to construct the bridge. In all such cases the parties usually come back to Congress and ask for an extension of time to begin and complete the construction of the bridge. This explains why our committee reports so many bills to extend the time for the beginning and completing the construction of bridges. In each case of that kind the committee makes inquiry to learn what was the reason for not beginning the actual construction of the bridge within the time allowed by law. If the reasons furnished the committee are found to be sufficient, and if the committee is convinced that the owner of the franchise has made a good-faith endeavor to begin the construction of the bridge within the year, we favorably report the bill granting an extension of time.

Mr. Speaker, I have briefly discussed some of the more important provisions of the law governing the construction of bridges and the policies of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce followed in the consideration of bridge bills. It is unfortunate that Congress has not been able to pass a general bridge law embodying these various provisions which we are now inserting in individual bridge bills. I have a bill for that purpose that has been pending since the beginning of this Congress. But I have not urged it because I have myself been uncertain as to the wisdom of some of its provisions. It would be difficult to provide general bridge legislation which would fully protect the interests of the public, and which would not prevent the construction of bridges by the use of private capital where the public authorities are not in a financial position to build them. Until such legislation can be formulated and passed it is necessary for Congress to do the best it can to accomplish those purposes by the provisions inserted in each individual bridge bill. I hope during the next Congress to be able to present to the House a general bridge bill revising existing bridge law and providing such new law as, in the judgment of our committee, will fully protect and promote the public interests and not prevent the construction of bridges that the growing commerce of the country may require. If such legislation can be considered and passed, short-form bridge bills can then be used which will not require so much of the time of the committee or of the House for their consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to by Mr. DENISON is as follows:

THE JURISDICTION OF THE STATE AND FEDERAL GOVERNMENTS OVER THE NAVIGABLE WATERS OF THE UNITED STATES

Under the common law of England, title to the land under all navigable waters was in the sovereign in trust for the public and this title gave to the sovereign exclusive right to regulate all commerce on the navigable waters of the realm.

That doctrine applied in the British colonies in this country, and the exclusive right to regulate commerce on the navigable waters of the colonies was in the British Government. At first the navigable waters were held to be confined to the tidewaters, but later by analogy, the principle was extended by the courts to include all of the navigable rivers of the interior, as well as those affected by the tidewaters.

When the American Colonies declared and won their independence the different States became themselves sovereign governments and succeeded to all of the sovereign rights that had theretofore belonged to the Crown, including the rights over the navigable waterways within their respective boundaries. When, therefore, the representatives of the different States met in the Constitutional Convention in 1787, the States possessed and exercised the sovereign right of controlling and regulating commerce on all their navigable waterways.

By section 8 of Article I of the Constitution the States surrendered to the Federal Government the right to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States. This is the source and the only source of all the power that the Federal Government now has over the navigable waterways of the United States. The source and the extent of this power of the Federal Government have been given judicial interpretation and declaration in innumerable cases that are found in the reported decisions. And the law is well settled that by the commerce clause of the Constitution the States surrendered and the Federal Government received plenary power to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and that power includes the right to improve all the navigable waterways of the United States and regulate the commerce thereon.

It is also well settled that where Congress has assumed and exercises its jurisdiction over a navigable waterway within a State the State can not enact any law which would conflict with the Federal jurisdiction so exercised. But it is also well settled that Congress and the State legislatures have concurrent jurisdiction over the improvement of navigable waterways within the States. While the States surrendered to the Federal Government this power to regulate the navigable waterways and the commerce thereon, yet until Congress acts in the exercise of that power the States themselves have the right to improve and otherwise regulate the navigable waters and the commerce thereon within their respective borders, and after Congress has acted in the exercise of its power the States may still act so long as the exercise of their powers does not conflict with the action of the Federal Government.

Some of the courts state the jurisdictional question in substantially the following form:

"All rights over the navigable waterways within a particular State not surrendered to the Federal Government by the commerce clause of the Constitution are retained by the State government; but it is the exercise and not the mere possession of the powers conferred upon the Federal Government that limits the freedom of action by the State. Jurisdiction over the navigable waterways within the State is concurrent in the State and Federal Government, but that of the Federal Government, when exercised, is supreme. No action can be taken by the State which conflicts with any action taken by the Federal Government, and any action taken by the State is subject to change or nullification by any subsequent action that may be taken by the Federal Government in the exercise of its supreme jurisdiction."

The cases of Cooley v. Board of Wardens (13 Howard, 299) and Covington Bridge Co. v. Kentucky (154 U. S. 204) clearly state these principles. The Minnesota Rate cases (230 U. S. 352) assert the same doctrine with reference to the regulation of commerce on railroads.

In Gould on Waters, third edition, page 80, the author says:

"Under the Constitution of the United States a State has the right, if its legislation does not conflict with the action of Congress upon the same subject, to authorize bridges and dams across the navigable waters within its limits; to license wharves, piers, and docks intruding upon such waters; to establish harbor lines to which wharves may be extended; to prescribe the places and manner in which vessels may lie in a harbor, what lights they are to carry at night, or what course they shall pursue in navigating a river; to pass reasonable quarantine and inspection laws, and pilotage, or port regulations; to regulate harbor beacons, buoys, salvage, and similar matters of a local and limited nature; to improve the navigability of its waters, and to authorize the collection of tolls in consideration of such improvements."

In Cummings v. Chicago (188 U. S. 410) the Supreme Court, through Mr. Justice Harlan, said, speaking of the Calumet River, which is also in the city of Chicago:

"Calumet River, it must be remembered, is entirely within the limits of Illinois, and the authority of the State over it is plenary, subject only to such action as Congress may take in execution of its power under the Constitution to regulate commerce among the several States. That authority has been exercised by the State ever since it was admitted into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States."

In the case of Willson v. The Blackbird Creek Marsh Co. (2 Peters, 245), a case involving the authority of a State legislature to authorize a dam to be built across a navigable creek, the Supreme Court, through Mr. Justice Marshall, said:

"The act of assembly by which the plaintiffs were authorized to construct their dam shows plainly that this is one of those many creeks passing through a deep, level marsh adjoining the Delaware, up which the tide flows for some distance. The value of the property on its banks must be enhanced by excluding the water from the marsh and the health of the inhabitants probably improved.

"Measures calculated to produce these objects, provided they do not come into collision with the powers of the General Government, are undoubtedly within those which are reserved to the States. But the measure authorized by this act stops a navigable creek and must be supposed to abridge the rights of those who have been accustomed to use it. But this abridgment, unless it comes to conflict with the Constitution or a law of the United States, is an affair between the government of Delaware and its citizens, of which this court can take no cognizance.

"The counsel for the plaintiffs in error insist that it comes in conflict with the power of the United States to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States.

"If Congress has passed any act which bore upon the case, any act in execution of the power to regulate commerce, the object of which was to control State legislation over those small navigable creeks into which the tide flows, and which abound throughout the lower country of the Middle and Southern States, we should feel not much difficulty in saying that a State law coming in conflict with such act would be void. But Congress has passed no such act. The repugnancy of the law of Delaware to the Constitution is placed entirely on its repugnancy to the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, a power which has not been so exercised as to affect the question.

"We do not think that the act empowering the Blackbird Creek Marsh Co. to place a dam across the creek can, under all the circumstances of the case, be considered as repugnant to the power to regulate commerce in its dormant state or as being in conflict with any law passed on the subject."

Many more cases might be cited which affirm the power of the State to regulate, improve, or even destroy the navigable character of a waterway within its borders unless Congress has exercised jurisdiction over the particular waterway in question. In the case of Huse v. Glover (15 Fed. Rep. 292) the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Harlan, said:

"The doctrines of the adjudged cases sustain the authority of this State—there being no act of Congress forbidding it—to construct locks and dams upon the Illinois River. Her avowed object in so doing was to improve the navigation of that river and effect a reduction of freights to the headwaters of Lake Michigan and to the Mississippi River. The mode and extent of such improvement, in the absence of national legislation, based upon the power of Congress to regulate commerce, was for her determination. Her discretion in such matters is not to be controlled by the courts so long as Congress does not interfere.

And when that case went to the Supreme Court that court, speaking through Mr. Justice Field (119 U. S, 543), said:

"The State is interested in the domestic as well as in the interstate and foreign commerce conducted on the Illinois River, and to increase its facilities and thus augment its growth it has full power. It is only when in the judgment of Congress its action is deemed to encroach upon the navigation of the river as a means of interstate and foreign commerce that that body may interfere and control or supersede it. If in the opinion of the State greater benefit would result to her commerce by the improvements made than by leaving the river in its natural state—and on that point the State must necessarily determine for itself—it may authorize them, although increased inconvenience and expense may thereby result to the business of individuals. The private inconvenience must yield to the public good. The opening of a new highway or the improvement of an old one, the building of a railroad, and many other works in which the public is interested may materially diminish business in certain quarters and increase it in others, yet for the loss resulting the sufferers have no legal ground of complaint. How the highways of a State, whether on land or by water, shall be best improved for the public good is a matter for State determination, subject always to the right of Congress to interpose in the cases mentioned." (Spooner v. McConnell, 1 McLean, 337; Kellogg v. Union Co., 12 Conn. 7; Thames Bank v. Lovell, 18 Conn. 500; S. C. 46 Am. Dec. 332; McReynolds v. Smallhouse, 8 Bush. 447.)

It is clear from these cases, and others that might be cited, that so long as the right of the Federal Government to regulate navigable waterways within a State, conferred by the commerce clause of the Constitution, lies dormant the States may act for that purpose and to such extent as they choose, and after the Federal Government acts in the exercise of the power conferred upon it the States may still act in the exercise of their concurrent jurisdiction, but their action must not conflict with the action of the Federal Government.

Now, in the act of September 19, 1890, Twenty-sixth Statutes, chapter 907, section 7, page 454, Congress assumed jurisdiction over all navigable waterways in the following language:

"SEC. 7. That it shall not be lawful to build any wharf, pier, dolphin, boom, dam, weir, breakwater, bulkhead, jetty, or structure of any kind outside established harbor lines, or in any navigable waters of the United States where no harbor lines are or may be established, without the permission of the Secretary of War, in any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, navigable river, or other waters of the United States, in such manner as shall obstruct or impair navigation, commerce, or anchorage of said waters, and it shall not be lawful hereafter to commence the construction of any bridge, bridge draw, bridge piers and abutments, causeway, or other works over or in any port, road, roadstead, haven, harbor, navigable river, or navigable waters of the United States under any act of the legislative assembly of any State until the location and plan of such bridge or other works have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War, or to excavate or fill, or in any manner to alter or modify the course, location, condition, or capacity of the channel of said navigable water of the United States unless approved and authorized by the Secretary of War: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any bridge, bridge draw, bridge piers and abutments the construction of which has been heretofore duly authorized by law, or be so construed as to authorize the construction of any bridge, drawbridge, bridge piers, and abutments, or other works under an act of the legislature of any State over or in any stream port, roadstead, haven, or harbor, or other navigable water not wholly within the limit of such State."

And by the subsequent act of March 3, 1899, Thirtieth Statutes, chapter 425, section 9, page 1151, Congress further exercised its jurisdiction over navigable waterways by the following language:

"SEC. 9. That it shall not be lawful to construct or commence the construction of any bridge, dam, dike, or causeway over or in any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, navigable river, or other navigable water of the United States until the consent of Congress to the building of such structures shall have been obtained and until the plans for the same shall have been submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and by the Secretary of War: Provided, That such structures may be built under authority of the legislature of a State across rivers and other waterways the navigable portions of which lie wholly within the limits of a single State, provided the location and plans thereof are submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and by the Secretary of War before construction is commenced: And provided further, That when plans for any bridge or other structure have been approved by the Chief of Engineers and by the Secretary of War, it shall not be lawful to deviate from such plans either before or after completion of the structure unless the modification of said plans has previously been submitted to and received the approval of the Chief of Engineers and of the Secretary of War."

In the case of Economy Light & Power Co. v. United States of America (256 U. S. 113), the Government sought to enjoin the power company from constructing a dam in the Des Plaines River, Ill., and the question involved was whether or not the Des Plaines River was a navigable waterway of the United States, and if so, what was the effect of the provisions of these acts of Congress just quoted. In the opinion the court said:

"Since it (the Des Plaines River) is a natural interstate waterway, it is within the power of Congress to improve it at the public expense; and it is not difficult to believe that many other streams are in like condition and require only the exertion of Federal control to make them again important avenues of commerce among the States. If they are to be abandoned, it is for Congress, not the courts, so to declare. The policy of Congress is clearly evidence in the act of 1899, and, in the present case at least, nothing remains but to give effect to it."

This case, which is one of the latest and leading cases, makes it clear, first, that it is within the power of Congress to abandon a navigable waterway if it does not think it wise to expend public funds to improve it; and, second, that by the acts of September 19, 1890, and March 3, 1899, just quoted, Congress has declared its policy and exercised its jurisdiction over navigable waterways conferred by the commerce clause of the Constitution.

In People v. Metropolitan Railway Co. (285 Ill. 246) the quession arose as to whether or not, by the acts of September 19, 1890, and of March 3, 1899, Congress assumed exclusive jurisdiction over all the navigable waterways of the country and thereby deprived the States of any further right of control over them. In that case the people of the State of Illinois sought to compel the railway company to remove a certain bridge across the South Branch of the Chicago River on the ground that it had become an obstruction to commerce. After citing the case of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Co. v. Ohio (165 U. S. 365), where the Supreme Court held that the State of Ohio still had the right to compel the removal of a bridge unlawfully constructed across a navigable stream, the court said:

"If the act of 1890 did not affect the power of the State to require the removal of an obstruction placed in the stream unlawfully, we do not see how it could affect the authority of the State to require the removal of a structure lawfully placed in a navigable stream, but which has since, because of changed condition, become an unreasonable obstruction. The subsequent amendatory acts of Congress, including section 18 of the act of March 3, 1899, do not restrict or encroach upon the power the State had, previous to those enactments, been authorized to exercise. Conceding Congress has the power to take sole and exclusive jurisdiction over navigable waters wholly within a State, it has not done so."

In the case of Gillman v. Philadelphia (70 U. S. 729), the court said:

"It must not be forgotten that bridges which are connecting parts of turnpikes, streets, and railroads, are means of commercial transportation, as well as navigable waters, and that the commerce which passes over a bridge may be much greater than would ever be transported on the water it obstructs.

"It is for the municipal power to weigh the considerations which belong to the subject and to decide which shall be preferred and how far either shall be made subservient to the other."

HON. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, LL. D.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an unusual request. It is not often that a Speaker of this House will have the honor of having the degree of doctor of laws conferred upon him. Sometime to-day, possibly about this hour, in the city of Philadelphia, the University of Pennsylvania is conferring upon the distinguished Speaker of this House the degree of doctor of laws. In recognition of this honor, I ask for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ACKERMAN). The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 337

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is authorized and directed to transmit to the Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, Speaker of the House of Representatives, the congratulations of the House upon receiving the honorary degree of doctor of laws, to-day conferred upon him by the University of Pennsylvania.

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

BRIDGES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the day the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, it may be somewhat difficult to answer in five minutes the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] in 55 minutes.

Mr. DOWELL. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from New York may have five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I believe that the merits on my side of the case so overweigh the opposition that 10 minutes will be sufficient in which to answer the gentleman's argument of 55 minutes. The question is not the procedure of the committee. It is not an analysis of the legislation on bridges. The question is, as stated by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION], whether or not it is to the best interests of the community if the State or any agency of the State can not of itself finance the bridge of construction, to permit the bridge to be financed by revenue-bearing bonds, those bonds having only the revenue of the bridge behind them as a guaranty for the bridge to be operated and controlled by a State or municipal agency instead of giving a franchise and monopoly to a private corporation.

Now, when the gentleman from Illinois talks about the franchise value, and the going value, and the earning value, all being specifically excluded in the committee form of bridge bill, it must be pointed out and made clear that such exclusions of values are applicable only at the time of recapture. All these items are included in fixing of the toll rates. That is exactly the cause for objection to privately owned bridges. These charges, of course, make for unreasonable and excessive tolls on bridges connecting to public highways.

I need not indulge in generalities. I will give you a typical case now pending before the Secretary of War under the procedure described by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON]. Take the case of the De Valles Bluff Bridge over the White River operated by the White River Bridge Co. According to actual figures the cost of constructing that bridge was $163,358. It is assessed by the State of Arkansas at $160,000. In 1925 it earned $61,938; in 1926, $96,000; in 1929, $67,000; and in 1928, $120,000.

Mr. MAPES. Is that net?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Before deducting interest, depreciation, and Federal income tax.

The case is before the Secretary of War on application by the State for a decrease in tolls, and here are the figures submitted. I invite the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to them. This is an actual case and typical. This is not theory or hypothesis. The value of the bridge is not based on the actual cost, the actual value of the physical property; but again we meet our old friend "reproduction value," and the reproduction value of this particular bridge costing $163,000 in the application now pending before the Secretary of War is $361,816. The total reproduction cost as against the actual cost—which it is said is so well protected in the bills we pass under unanimous consent—jumps from $160,000 to $361,816; the cost of the franchise, $36,681; the sound going concern, $75,000—that is, fixed on the profits based on the income received from excessive tolls—and the franchise value, $375,000, bringing it up to $853,897.

Now, how was this capitalized? We go back to the capitalization and we find there is $500,000 worth of outstanding bonds at 6 per cent, sold at 90. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars of 10-year debentures at 7 per cent, and 20,000 shares of common stock, no par value.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. PARKER. When was that permit granted? What was the date of the granting of the permit to build that bridge?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The bridge was authorized by congressional act approved November 23, 1921.

Mr. PARKER. Before any of the provisions which the gentleman from Illinois has just cited were put in the bridge bills?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Subsequent to the act of 1906, nevertheless.

Mr. DOWELL. That increased value has been brought about because of the money that was invested by the Government and the State in building roads leading to that bridge?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Exactly. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] speaks of monopoly, and he says we are not giving any monopoly, because the committee may give somebody else the right to build a bridge alongside of it, but they never do. Where you have two Federal highways disconnected by a river and you there grant a franchise to construct a bridge, you create there a monopoly to charge tolls, not only for the use of that bridge but for the use of the very roads built by public funds, and you can not get away from it. It seems to me that away back in the Victorian age when some one coined the phrase or term "highway robbery" they must have had a private toll bridge in mind. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. How does the gentleman expect the people who travel these roads to get across a river?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. By bridges, of course.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. The municipal authorities and the State authorities are not in a position to build bridges. We are not building any in Illinois, although we have built 8,000 miles of roads, and the ferry companies now have a monopoly, and people are paying more for crossing the rivers by ferries than they would if they had to pay tolls over bridges.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is the gentleman on the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. No; but I have a little common sense about these matters.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I want to say that the States of Alabama, Louisiana, Kentucky, and Arkansas have already adopted the policy of either building the bridges themselves or financing these public bridges operated and controlled by the State or one of its agencies by private funds out of revenue-bearing bonds. Now, the State of California, which owns 95 per cent of its bridges, has just completed a survey, which I commend to the distinguished chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee and his colleagues, in which they point out that privately owned toll bridges cost more than publicly owned bridges. This is from the Investigation and Report of the Toll Bridges in the State of California by the Highway Commission.

Privately owned toll bridges cost more than publicly owned bridges for the following principal reasons:

The cost of organization and promotion is more for the privately owned bridge than for the publicly owned one.

The cost of financing a privately owned toll bridge is higher than the financing of a publicly owned bridge.

The cost of construction of a privately owned toll bridge is somewhat higher (from 10 to 25 per cent) than a publicly owned bridge, due in most cases to lack of competition in bidding on the contract.

The cost of operation is higher on a privately owned bridge than on a publicly owned bridge, primarily because amortization and interest charges are more.

The cost of public service over a privately owned toll bridge is higher than over a publicly owned one, because the capital investment is more and the interest rate higher. A profit is expected on a privately owned bridge and not on a publicly owned one.

The fixing of equitable values of privately owned bridges is so intricate and involved that it would seem almost impossible for the public to acquire them without either paying from 20 to as much as 250 per cent more than it would have cost the public to build them, or, on the other hand, causing a heavy loss to the investors in toll-bridge stock.

The State or counties or cities own and operate more than 95 per cent of the highway and bridges in the State. If public ownership is proper for 95 per cent, it would seem proper on 100 per cent of the State system.

Added investment by the public in improving roads enhances the value of privately owned toll bridges located on or contiguous to these roads.

I want to take this opportunity to state that the Public Roads Bureau of the Department of Agriculture is not only alive to the situation, but is doing everything that it possibly can to prevent the Federal aid highways to our country being exploited and monopolized by private bridge companies. Mr. Thomas H. MacDonald, chief of the bureau, has a remarkable grasp of the situation and is doing everything that he possibly can to warn Congress against the continuance and a perpetuation of the vicious practice of privately owned toll bridges along Federal highways. I will here read a brief extract from the most interesting article entitled "The Freedom of the Road," written by Mr. MacDonald:

TOLL BRIDGE FRANCHISES GRANTED TO PRIVATE INTERESTS

There is much confusion in the public mind on this question. In all sincerity many have indorsed the private toll-bridge franchise on the theory that it is desirable to have bridges, and if the public funds are not sufficient or available, rather than do without it is better to grant a toll franchise to private interests. This is not the issue. The real issue is much simpler—too simple, apparently—and, of course, there is widespread propaganda directed toward keeping the wrong idea in the public mind. The real question is the very simple one of whether it is sound public policy to grant the right to collect a private profit from the user of the highway. The answer ought to be a vigorous and authoritative "No." There is no place on the public highway to-day for the privately owned toll bridge.

The need for capital for highway improvement is so large that it is not only necessary but, in many States, desirable to provide large bridges through toll collections. Where this situation exists, however, it can and should be met by the public in its own interests.

The public can finance and build at lower costs, and the largest bridge undertakings in the country to-day are being financed on the basis of their earnings. Two methods are being used: First, municipal bond issues, to be retired from earnings, and, second, revenue bonds issued against the earnings, but not a municipal obligation in the sense of adding to the constitutional indebtedness.

The Port of New York Authority is engaged in building bridges of unusual size and cost. Four bridges will cost, it is estimated, $100,000,000, and the cost will be met with the income. In this area a number of the most remarkable and most costly public works in the world are being provided without adding to the taxes on the property owner and with the profits devoted to freeing the projects from debt.

One of the projects financed on most favorable terms recently is the new Ohio River bridge at Louisville, Ky. Here is a splendid example of public financing by direct dealing with a strong financial house on the basis of a banking and not a stock-promotion project. The terms are eminently fair to the public. The city will build the bridge and completely control the whole project. Revenue bonds are issued against the earnings of the bridge and they are not a debt liability against the property of the city. The constitutionality of the contract has been passed upon favorably by the supreme court of the State, and within a reasonable time the city will own a magnificent bridge costing upward of $6,000,000 without cost to the taxpayers.

The States of Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, Louisiana, Arkansas, and, perhaps, others have within recent months provided for the building of bridges, the costs of which are to be paid from tolls and then made free.

Private toll-bridge interests are becoming bolder and obstructing the public's business. They are attempting to defeat legislation unfavorable to themselves and are obstructing the efforts of highway departments to carry on State projects. Seventy-five Federal authorizations to build toll bridges have been granted to private interests by the present Congress. The terms of these authorizations are wholly inadequate to protect the public's interest, and bills now pending on this subject are even more favorable to the private toll-bridge promoter than existing legislation. Incidentally, the proposal is carried to turn over the fixing of values and regulation of tolls to the Interstate Commerce Commission for bridges over navigable waters and over which interstate commerce is carried.

Basically, all bridges on the main highways have become valuable property because of the construction of highways. The bridges are only a part of such highways and should be legally treated as such. The Bureau of Public Roads made a survey of the situation, but was without legal authority, and consequently could not obtain the records of costs, earnings, investments, and other essential facts from private interests. A full investigation of the toll-bridge situation is needed as a basis for remedial legislation to safeguard the public in their use of the roads and to protect the public which invests in securities. It is a field from which the shoestring promoter should be excluded, and he will be if a thorough investigation is made.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I am very much interested in the gentleman's statement, and I think it is a matter that deserves the thoughtful attention of Congress. Speaking of the State of Alabama, they concluded, after a study of the evils flowing from the building of private toll bridges, to build them for the State, and they are now constructing 15 large toll bridges over rivers. The State found that the 15 bridges can be constructed for not exceeding $5,000,000, and that they will amortize themselves probably in 10 years. They went before the committee and said:

We will not ask for 20 or 25 years, which you sometimes grant, but we will ask you to fix a limit of 15 years and, further, we will not ask to be allowed to charge tolls for approaches to bridges but will ask only for the right to charge for the construction of the bridges themselves.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri, Mr. BOYLAN, and Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois rose.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended three minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The charging of tolls for approaches to bridges is another evil that ought to be corrected, and I want to say, in justice to the committee, when we presented this matter to them the committee unanimously voted to give the State this right.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The State?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is no argument against it.

Gentlemen, just bear in mind when the first act was passed by the Congress the automobile had not yet come into its own.

Not even in the year 1906, the year of the statute upon which you rely, did we have the conditions that we have to-day. To-day we are appropriating $75,000,000 for Federal aid to highways.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Let me finish the sentence. And the States appropriate about $725,000,000. We are spending——

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucy. A billion dollars.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I thank the gentleman. A billion dollars on public roads. Your system, your procedure—I do not doubt the good faith of the committee—is antiquated, it is obsolete. The financing is unfair to the public. The time has arrived now when you can finance bridges operated by the State from private funds through revenue-bearing bonds if the State, county, or municipality can not afford to do it direct.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman please point out how a community can build a bridge where the State and the municipality refuse to do it?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER. I would like to know and the committee would like to know.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. As is being done in the gentleman's own State.

Mr. PARKER. I grant you——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. By the port authority, by selling bonds by the municipality or by the county or by the State on the revenue of the bridge itself, and operating the bridge on a self-supporting basis for service and not for profit.

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman is not answering my question. I say where the State refuses and the municipality refuses, how are you going to do it?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then I will say to the gentleman that where the State refuses and the municipality refuses to adopt the system of private financing through revenue-bearing bonds that community is not entitled to the consideration of the Congress.

Mr. PARKER. Then they should be compelled to cross on a ferry?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the committee assumes the policy——

Mr. PARKER. Answer the question, please. That is a fair question.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The question is this: If you have public highways, Federal-aid highways, by all means we should see to it that either the State or a State agency builds and operates the bridge, or else that the bridge is financed out of private funds through revenue-bearing municipal, State, or bridge bonds.

Mr. PARKER. I will say to the gentleman the committee would be very pleased if the States and the various municipalities would finance the bridges; but if they do not, the gentleman has not convinced me how it is possible for the community to get the bridge.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the committee will just hold back some of these bills, the gentleman will soon find that the States will attend to the bridges. [Applause.]

It seems to me that Congress should uphold a public official like Mr. McDonald and adopt the policy of carefully scrutinizing every application for a bridge franchise made by promoters, private bridge companies, or private individuals. The very number of bills for extending the time to commence building the bridge indicates the speculative undertaking of these private companies who obtain a franchise from Congress only to go out and peddle the same or else promote it and mulct the enterprise by excessive tolls based on inflated valuation and watered stock.

Gentlemen, all that I am seeking to do is to protect the highways built by Federal and State money, so that they may be enjoyed by all of the people without paying a tribute to professional promotors and financial manipulators. I do not want to be a chronic objector to all these bills. I do want to do my part in stopping what I consider a vicious practice. I hope the time is not distant when there will come an end to these private bridge bills. Public highways and Federal-aid roads are simply inconsistent with privately owned toll bridges.

CONDEMNATION OF LAND IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). For what purpose does the gentleman from Maryland rise?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is it a matter that will require any length of time to consider?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I do not think so, Mr. Speaker. I think it will take just a moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman may submit his request.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 13461) to provide for the acquisition of land in the District of Columbia for the use of the United States, and I shall move to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, briefly, what do the Senate amendments provide?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The Senate amendments simply change the method of giving notice to the property owners, and provide that the estimated value of the property must be paid in when the Government files the proceedings, because title immediately passes to the United States.

Mr. SCHAFER. Are the Senate amendments for the benefit of the property owners or for the benefit of the Government?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I think they further protect the property owners, and were so intended.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may we have the amendments read before consent is given?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

DEGREE-CONFERRING INSTITUTIONS

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report, for printing under the rules, on the bill (S. 2366) to amend subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia relating to degree-conferring institutions.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2366) to amend subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia relating to degree-conferring institutions having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language inserted by the House insert the following:

"2. That any such degree shall be awarded only after such quantity and quality of work shall have been completed as are usually required by reputable institutions awarding the same degree: Provided, That if more than one-half the requirements for any degree are earned by correspondence, or extramural study, such fact shall be conspicuously noted upon the diploma conferred: Provided further, That no diploma shall be issued conferring a degree in medicine or any healing art, or in dentistry, for study pursued or work done by correspondence."

And the House agree to the same.

FREDERICK N. ZIHLMAN,
CHARLES L. UNDERHILL,
THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN J. BLAINE,
D. O. HASTINGS,
ROYAL S. COPELAND,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2366) entitled "An act to amend subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia relating to degree-conferring institutions" submit the following detailed statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the conference report, namely:

On amendment No. 1: By this amendment the House added to the requirement of the Senate bill that any institution seeking a license to grant degrees must satisfy the Board of Education that degrees were awarded only after completion of such quantity and character of work as usually required by reputable institutions awarding such degrees, the further requirements (1) that if more than half the requirements for a degree are earned by correspondence or nonresidence study, that fact should be conspicuously noted on the diploma; (2) that no diplomas conferring degreees in medicine or any healing art, or in law, shall be issued for correspondence study; and (3), in effect, that the course of study should be as approved by the Board of Education of the District of Columbia.

The position maintained by the Senate conferees was one of approval of the additional requirements with respect to notation on the diploma of correspondence study and interdiction of correspondence-school degrees in medicine or the healing arts. The Senate conferees were firmly of the opinion, however, (1) that ample safeguards were thrown about the licensing of degree-conferring institutions by the other provisions of the bill without requiring courses and methods of study to conform absolutely in all respects with a judgment or decree of the Board of Education of the District; and (2) that it was wholly unnecessary and inadvisable to prohibit granting of degrees for correspondence-course study of law.

The Senate conferees maintained that inasmuch as the bill requires the quantity and quality of work of institutions to conform to that usually required by reputable institutions, it would be unjust and unwise to in effect force reputable institutions conducting correspondence courses (including many great universities) to secure specific approval by the Board of Education of their entire courses and methods of study.

The Senate conferees were equally firm in their opinion that public interest did not require residence-school study of law. They did feel, however, that no degrees in dentistry should be awarded for correspondence-school study.

Because of the other safeguards of public interests contained in the bill and House amendments, the House conferees yielded as to specific approval of courses by the Board of Education and as to correspondence degrees in law, and agreed to the prohibition with respect to dental degrees. Other features of House amendment No. 1 were retained, as agreed to by the Senate conferees.

On amendment No. 2: The bill, as passed by the Senate and approved by the House District Committee, provided for revocation of licenses granted to degree-conferring institutions by the Board of Education, through proceedings instituted by the board, after public hearing on 30-days' notice, commitment of the evidence to writing, and with the right granted the school to have the case reviewed by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

By its amendment No. 2, the House further provided that after notice is given by the board of its intention to revoke a license, and during the 30-day period of such notice, or during the time the board's decision is under review by the court, no diploma shall be awarded or degree conferred by the holder of the school license.

The position of the Senate conferees was that this amendment might result in serious damage to the school and injustice to its students, particularly those about to graduate after long study at the time of serving of the notice of intended revocation of license. The decision of the court might not be made for many months, or even several years, and meanwhile the school, which had complied with the law and been granted a license, would suffer serious injury without means of redress, and some of its students, who had pursued their courses of study in good faith, would be equally injured by reason of inability to obtain earned degrees.

In consideration of this position on the part of the Senate conferees, and the other undisturbed provisions of the bill requiring institutions now in existence and those hereafter organized to be examined and licensed before undertaking to confer any degrees, the conferees on the part of the House agreed to recede from amendment No. 2.

The net result of the action of the conferees is to leave the bill as it was favorably reported by the House District Committee, after extended hearings and full discussion and consideration, except that dental degrees are added to those that can not be awarded for correspondence study.

FREDK. N. ZIHLMAN,
CHARLES L. UNDERHILL,
THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

POSTAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file minority views on the bill (S. 3281) to provide a shorter workday on Saturday for postal employees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to file minority views on a bill reported by his committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SAN LUIS VALLEY

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to publish in the RECORD a memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Colorado.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by publishing a memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Colorado. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Colorado:

Senate Joint Memorial No. 1

[By Senators Headlee and Shawcroft, Messrs. Sylvester, Mathias, Johnson (Conejos), and Jones]

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialist, the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, again respectfully represents to your honorable body that what is known as the San Luis Valley on the Rio Grande, in which is located some 2,000,000 acres of irrigable, productive, agricultural land in the State of Colorado, has been greatly damaged and retarded in its growth and development to the detriment of the peoples of the San Luis Valley and the commonwealth of the State of Colorado, in this, to wit:

That for and on account of the action taken by the Congress of the United States and different departments of the Government of the United States, and particularly on request of the honorable Secretary of State, contrary to the advice of the Attorney General of the United States, in the year 1896 an embargo was placed upon the construction of reservoirs on the upper Rio Grande in the State of Colorado.

That by reason and on account of such embargo, the peoples of the San Luis Valley were prevented from constructing reservoirs whereby they could scientifically and economically administer the distribution of irrigation waters from the Rio Grande River in that territory.

That as a direct result of the prohibition, illegally and unjustly placed upon the people of the San Luis Valley as aforesaid, a large amount of irrigation water was applied to lands in the springtime when the river was in flood, during which period these people were prohibited from the construction of reservoirs to properly regulate their supply of water, in an attempt to secure a sufficient amount of ground storage to supply their crops during periods of drought. This excessive use of water in the springtime resulted in the seeping of a large area of land aggregating several hundreds of thousands of acres theretofore very productive; a total loss of its productivity resulting, and a direct loss to the landowners and entrymen on the public domain in that locality variously estimated at from $187,000,000 to $200,000,000, in addition to the loss of homes and improvements erected at the cost of a lifetime of toil by the owners of such lands, and the desolation of a thriving and productive community, occupied by several thousands of happy, industrious, satisfied, and contented people, all citizens of the United States of America.

That in the year 1925, the embargo against the construction of reservoirs on the upper Rio Grande in Colorado was removed and was then found by the then Secretary of the Interior to have been illegally initiated and imposed.

That by the drainage of said lands and the construction of reservoirs now permitted, whereby the application of water in the future may be properly and scientifically regulated, said lands, now desolate and unproductive, may be reclaimed and again made productive; but before such reclamation can be provided for it is necessary that an outlet for the excess waters so applied to such lands which caused the seepage thereof be provided for from what is known as the San Luis Lakes to the Rio Grande, a distance of about 22 miles.

That the action of the governmental agencies of the United States in imposing such an embargo whereby the peoples of the San Luis Valley were prohibited from exercising rights unquestionably exercised and enjoyed by all other citizens was unjust and discriminatory.

That the people of the San Luis Valley have never been recompensed in any particular for the great loss occasioned to them by these unwarranted and unjust acts of the United States Government, notwithstanding the fact that the peoples of southern New Mexico and western Texas on the Rio Grande River, under what is known as the Elephant Butte Dam, have been heretofore compensated by a direct appropriation of Congress in the amount of $1,000,000 to compensate them for 60,000 acre-feet of water ceded to the Republic of Mexico which, as a matter of fact, on account of the embargo heretofore mentioned, in practical operation was charged directly to the San Luis Valley in Colorado.

That the 60,000 acre-feet of water, heretofore ceded to Mexico by the United States, can be replaced in the Rio Grande by the construction of the outlet contemplated; 2,000 square miles can be added to the drainage area of the Rio Grande and the flow of the river be materially augmented, thereby furnishing an additional supply of water for the use of the people in New Mexico and Texas.

Your attention is respectfully directed to a similar memorial to the Congress of the United States adopted by the Twenty-sixth General Assembly of the State of Colorado, since the adoption of which at the suggestion of the Department of the Interior the Reclamation Service and the State engineer of Colorado have made a joint study of this important matter.

We therefore again urge the Congress of the United States of America to take appropriate action to relieve as far as possible the territory devastated as a direct result of the embargo so imposed by providing an outlet from the San Luis Lakes to the Rio Grande in order that these unfortunate people, sacrificed upon the altar of what was in 1896 no doubt considered to be for the good of the Nation, be permitted to drain these lands and relieve the condition brought about by the imposition and maintenance for 30 years of an embargo illegally initiated and imposed.

DAVID ELLIOT,
President of the Senate.
ROYAL W. CALKINS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SECOND DEFICIENCY BILL

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H. R. 17223; and pending that, I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if we can agree upon the time for general debate.

Mr. BYRNS. I trust that the gentleman will simply make the request for the division of time and let the debate run for a while.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, pending that I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be equally divided, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] to control one half and I to control the other half.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 17223; and pending that, he asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be equally divided, he to control one half and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] the other half. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. WOOD was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LEHLBACH in the chair.

The Clerk read the title to the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17223) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, and June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM].

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, a resolution was introduced in the House on January 3 providing for the appointment of a select committee of five to investigate the expenditure of international bankers, United States international business organizations, and their legal representatives, and foreign interests to influence the foreign policy of the United States. As is well known, immense sums of money have been expended for this purpose during the last eight years.

This resolution has not been pressed at this session because the time was too short for the investigation.

This order of investigation will be reintroduced in the next Congress and vigorously pressed for action in order that there may be exposed to the American people the sinister financial interests and purposes of those who for financial gain would involve the United States in foreign entanglements and destroy her independence. The highest public interest demands that this investigation should be made.

For nearly a century European international bankers have directed and controlled the foreign policies of their respective countries. It has not been uncommon for foreign interests to spend large sums of money to effect their purposes in alien States. These international interests, together with United States international bankers and business organizations, have created a network of expensive propaganda and intrigue to have the United States abandon its wise traditional policy of no foreign entanglements, and they will succeed in their purpose unless public opinion, aroused by the exposure that would result from this investigation, stop them in their course.

These interests assisted by American internationalists attempted, first, to have the United States join the League of Nations, and upon their defeat to have the United States adhere to the protocol of the Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations, the servant and political agent of the league, as a preliminary step toward entry into the league itself, and upon their defeat in this direction, to have the United States approve the multilateral treaty.

The approval of the multilateral treaty was the first commitment of the United States to internationalism, and the first success of these interests assisted by American internationalists. The League of Nations now asserts that the multilateral treaty commits the United States to the conclusions of the league and that the United States can not oppose hereafter anything it does to enforce peace. It insists that we have lost our rights as a neutral Nation, and there is much force in this assertion. Thus, for the first time the United States is entangled with the league. This is what these interests and American internationalists desired for the accomplishment of their purpose. Their purpose, let it be repeated, is our ultimate entry into the League of Nations, the next step toward which is our adherence to the protocol of the Permanent Court of International Justice of the league. This court is a political court for the enforcement of the Versailles treaty and, incidentally, for the settlement of international disputes. As nations need not be members of the court to have recourse to it for the settlement of disputes, the only reason for United States adherence is as an approach toward entry into the league itself, which the internationalists are now again vigorously pressing.

The first witness who should be called before the committee is Ivy Lee of New York, who recently sent to Members of Congress an elaborately printed publication containing two speeches of a foreign premier the evident purpose of which was to influence the passage of the multilateral treaty and to prevent the expansion of our Navy.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINKHAM. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. Is Mr. Lee an American citizen?

Mr. TINKHAM. I understand that he is.

Mr. Lee, according to Who's Who in America, 1928–1929, was a member of the personal advisory staff of John D. Rockefeller in 1915–16 and now is adviser in public relations to John D. Rockefeller and other large interests; was a lecturer in the London School of Economics, 1911–12; is chairman of the English-Speaking Union, a fellow of the Royal Economic Society and of the Royal Geographic Society, and a member of the Royal Automobile and Author's Clubs of London.

On the 10th of January, in an interview in New York when denying charges that he had received money from the Soviet Government, Mr. Lee stated:

In view of all the activities with which I am associated, in behalf of large business interests, every principle of whose operations is opposed to some of the fundamental tenets of the Russian Government, it would be absolutely impossible for me to engage in any activity which might in the remotest manner, accept financial support from the Soviet Government.

International bankers, it is said, have repeatedly made as one of their conditions to floating in this country the loans of some foreign governments the retention of Mr. Lee by those governments at a high salary. This is the character of the work in which is engaged a man who used his influence for the approval of the multilateral treaty and the defeat of the cruiser bill. He is the personal representative of John D. Rockefeller and the international oil interests and international finance. If this man is summoned before the investigating committee, the ground will be laid for the exposure of one of the grossest scandals which have ever defaced political affairs in this country. Under oath Mr. Lee would be compelled to state in whose interest he is acting, from whom his money is received, and what are his activities, direct and indirect, in relation to the foreign policy of the United States. No facile and plausible statement not made under oath by Mr. Lee should satisfy the American people. He is a past master of affable indirection and evasion.

The international Standard Oil interests, John D. Rockefeller, and their agent, Ivy Lee, now open propagandists against the interests of the United States, have no country, no flag, and no allegiance except to the power of money and what money can compel or buy.

Are the American people to accept without protest foreign policies and international commitments dictated from these sources? Is the sovereignty of the United States to be sacrificed and the traditional independence of the United States destroyed by the money and for the profit of such men?

These interests and these men assume the attractive habiliments of lofty sentiments and high-sounding phrases, but underneath there is no love for national independence, no love of country, but a desire for personal power and their own selfish aims. What John D. Rockefeller thinks is right never conflicts with his financial interests.

Men of this character have lately become so bold and open in their activities in public affairs and at present in our international affairs because of a false doctrine which is being constantly disseminated by public authorities—the doctrine that the end of government and of the policies of government is the acquisition of wealth and the achievement of well-being, and the subordination of all national policies to this end. This pernicious doctrine all history shows has destroyed liberty, independence, character, and conscience, and finally the very virility of a race. Such a doctrine abolishes all concepts of independence of country, liberty of person, and individuality, and is opposed to their very existence. Such a doctrine is the deification of the brutality of organized wealth.

Since the introduction on January 3 of the order of investigation the following startling and convincing events have occurred:

First. The appointment of J. Pierpont Morgan, the leading international banker of the United States, and of Owen D. Young, the president of one of the largest United States international business organizations, as semiofficial representatives approved by the Government to the conference to be held in Europe in relation to German reparations, and the election of the latter, with the consent of the United States Government, as chairman of this commission.

Second. The mission of Elihu Root, an ex-Secretary of State, formerly known as the leading adviser of international bankers and international business organizations, to a conference of jurists appointed by the Council of the League of Nations to make any necessary changes or amendments in the procedure of the Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations, with the evident purpose of consummating United States adherence to this court and obviating the reservations made by the United States several years ago to control its political activities. This mission was not undertaken until after a visit to the President and the President elect of the United States and the Secretary of State; and Elihu Root is a publicly declared exponent of United States entry into the League of Nations.

Third. The recent employment of Charles Evans Hughes, another ex-Secretary of State, by John D. Rockefeller, jr., to represent a committee formed by the latter to obtain control of a great international oil company which recently acquired, together with British interests represented by Lord Inverforth, another large international oil company. Not only is Mr. Hughes one of the best-known advisers of international bankers and international business organizations, but he has recently been elected to membership on the Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations, which court he wishes the United States to join. Yet, before this very court of which he is a member come questions which in various ways vitally affect the stability of American international loans and American international business interests, and, further, in a recent case of an advisory opinion rendered in relation to Mosul in the Near East vitally affected international oil interests.

Unless the character of the American people has been entirely wrecked by the grossest materialism and their patriotism and love of liberty changed to insatiable greed, they will not long tolerate that all public policies, foreign and domestic, shall be determined solely by financial gain and at the cost of the independence of the country and the liberty of the individual. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS. I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEAL].

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Chairman, after listening to the splendid oration by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] to-day, one of the ablest lawyers and brightest minds in all the United States, I hesitate to approach the subject which he so ably discussed. Indeed, some of the press in my State have criticized me rather severely for presuming to discuss constitutional questions, State and National.

Passing this over, I will say that during the 12 years I have represented my city and district in the State and National Legislatures, I have devoted the greater portion of my available time to the consideration of constitutional questions, for the reason that I desired to determine for myself how I should vote on such questions in this body. It is unfortunate that this body too often allows itself to "sink great fundamental questions for temporary advantage" as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

My remarks will be addressed to the passage by this body of Senate Joint Resolution 182. I believe this resolution has passed both bodies, but has not yet been signed by the President, and we do not know whether it will become a law or not.

This resolution authorizes the loan to certain South Atlantic States of $6,000,000 to be allocated for the purchase of seeds and fertilizers for certain people who are supposed to have suffered from national disaster. I presume that those who voted for this resolution did so with the idea that it would come within the general welfare clause of the Constitution, although it applies only to certain individual States, to a certain class within those States, and to certain individuals within a certain class in those States.

Speaking for myself and those people of Virginia who may agree with me—and my belief is that a great majority of them will agree with me upon this question—I desire to take advantage of this opportunity to again voice my protest against incorporating Virginia in the proposed legislation for lending money to the South Atlantic States because of supposed disasters from storms and floods. So far as I am aware there have been no unusual disasters in Virginia. Of course, we have a few creeks that overflow their banks annually, and sometimes a crop may be damaged or destroyed as a result of seasonal rains, but I can see no justification for placing Virginia in the column of supplicant States when our press is almost daily expressing to the public the great progress and development and prosperity existing within the past few years. During the recent past I had occasion to investigate the material development of our State in the decades from 1900 to 1920, in which I had recourse to the United States census reports and financial statistics of the States, published by the Departments of Commerce and Treasury. Considering natural resources the basis of all wealth, we included the percentage of increase in wealth from agriculture, mineral production, sea-food production, and forestry. We also included the percentage of increase in bank capital, surplus, and deposits, and reducing the whole to a common average we found by comparison that of all the States of the Union Virginia stood thirteenth in the percentage of wealth accumulated. She stands tenth among the States in the volume of money contributed toward the support of the National Government. From the standpoint of efficiency and economy she stood twenty-eighth among the States of the Union in the per capita of revenue levied for the support of the State government, including highway construction. In the matter of educational facilities afforded to our children in the year 1926, she stood sixteenth among the States in the volume of money invested in school plants; that is to say, in land, buildings, and equipment, irrespective of size or wealth, and in the volume of money appropriated for maintenance she stood fourteenth.

It is true that agriculture in Virginia, in common with other States in the Union, has suffered during the past few years, incident to the fact that farm products have not advanced in market prices proportional to other production, while the labor cost, supplies, and transportation have increased nearly or quite 100 per cent. Nevertheless, intelligent and consistent land improvements have led to a higher per cent of yield, which has in a large measure offset the increased cost, and I have not observed that agriculture in Virginia has suffered so much as has been claimed from some other sections of the country. Virginia, therefore, can not and has not made any claim as a pauper State. My colleagues from Virginia have not expressed themselves upon the floor of the House as to this matter other than by an aye-and-nay vote. They, of course, are to the same extent with me responsible for legislation affecting Virginia's welfare. But Virginia is able from her own treasury to take care of her people, and we ought to know that we can not get something for nothing. The Federal Government has no money save that taken from the pockets of the people, and it is far more expensive to dispense through the Federal than State Governments.

In view of the consistent attitude of Virginia's representation since the foundation of our Government, that we adhere to a strict interpretation of the Constitution with respect to the delegated powers, and the claim that the general-welfare clause is limited by the specific explanations as to the meaning of "to pay the debts and for the common defense and general welfare of the United States," set forth in section 8, Article I, of the Constitution, it is inconceivable to me that we should at this late day, without cause or reason, recede from our time-honored position and ask to be participants in looting the Treasury of the United States. In 1887 Grover Cleveland, a Democratic President, whose memory we revere, vetoed a similar bill providing Federal aid for the purchase of seed for the relief of certain drought-stricken areas in Texas. Among other reasons which prompted the veto he said:

I can find no warrant for such an appropriation in the Constitution. I do not believe that the power and duty of the General Government ought to be extended to the relief of individual suffering which is in no manner properly related to the public service or benefit.

Such is my conception of the effects of Senate Joint Resolution 182.

Every Representative upon assuming his duties of office takes a solemn oath to support and uphold the Constitution, which he should respect if he has any desire to preserve the integrity of our system of government. I have always voted against this kind of legislation, and I spurn the support of such measures simply because it proposes to incorporate my State as a party to a measure which I consider unwarranted. This sop, voluntarily thrown to our State, is too marked an appearance of an effort to purchase our consent and acquiescence in any kind of raid that may be proposed upon the Treasury of the United States. We have inveighed against the leasing of our oil fields to private interests as a gross scandal and robbery. If we voluntarily accept this sop we should ever hereafter hold our peace and indorse any scandal or corruptions that may develop in the conduct of our Government. Like Banquo's ghost, it will continually arise to plague us in the future. I have had, gentlemen, Members of this House say to me that my position is entirely right, but while the "swag" is being doled out we should get our part. I resent and spurn the thought of asking or taking from the Federal Treasury anything to which we are not justly entitled, even though every other State in the Union were taking a part of the "swag." Let me repeat that two wrongs do not make a right, and after all this is a mere gesture, a pretense of doing something for the farmer which in reality means nothing. We have already established farm-loan banks, intermediate credit banks, tariff legislation, revolving funds, and the Agricultural Department. The latter is spending $154,000,000 annually, supposedly to aid the farmer. But when the farmer undertakes to borrow from the Government he will be required to give some kind of security.

Those farmers who have security do not need this aid. If they have land, they can borrow from the farm-loan bank; if they have crops, they can borrow on warehouse receipts; if they have none of these, they can not borrow, and, indeed, if he has these securities he can more conveniently borrow elsewhere. Those who have no security, farmers who lease land and obtain credit from supply houses with which to purchase their team and implements and even supplies of food to carry them through the year, have no securities to offer and, in reality, but little to lose even should there be a disaster of a nature which has not yet been shown. This class of farmers, therefore, will not be able to borrow of this proposed fund. All that the average American citizen has a right to ask or does ask of his Government is that it hold open for him the door of opportunity. He does not ask alms, but demands that to which he has a right, and that these opportunities shall not be taken from him by monopolies and concessions granted to monopolies by the Government. This is the great evil, in my opinion, from which agriculture and all other kinds of small business are to-day suffering, and if Congress really wants to do something for the small business man we should rehabilitate and strengthen the Sherman antitrust law.

As stated recently on this floor, the paramount argument used by the Republican Party as a reason why the southern people should support their ticket was that in so doing we could "get something" out of the Government, presumably something to which we are not entitled. So far as my observation goes, our people have placed principle above filthy lucre. We do not want that to which we are not entitled. During my eight years of experience in this body I have found no great difficulty in getting that to which we are entitled. The preservation of the integrity of our Government as created by our ancestors is the greatest boon that can be given to the American citizen. When the delegated powers are exceeded and the reserved rights of our sovereign States are destroyed or absorbed by the Federal Government it must inevitably lead to an autocracy, oppression, and tyranny, and the stifling of opportunity which will eventually reduce the average citizen to a condition of servitude. The greatest service, therefore, that a Representative can render to his people is, in my opinion, to preserve, so far as it may be in his power, the fundamental principles upon which our Government was founded. The preservation of the rights, privileges, and liberty of the individual has stimulated the American people to an ingenuity unsurpassed in the history of the world. We have advanced in the arts, sciences, transportation, education, and material prosperity under our system as no other nation in the history of the world has done in so short a period of time. Why should we desire to break down this system and encourage the American citizen to loot the Federal Treasury to supply his every want rather than depend upon his own ingenuity and effort?

The Democratic Party may be ridiculed as being "always on the unpopular side in order that it may be right," but it has been a stabilizing influence upon society. It has contributed no little to the revelations of fraud, graft, and wrongdoing by men in public life. Its record when in power is one of which we have no cause to be ashamed. It is true that during and after the Great War our party was accused of extravagance and wastefulness, but I recall that after appropriations of more than $700,000 by the Congress to investigate its acts during that period of time no instance of wrongdoing was discovered of sufficient moment to warrant prosecution in the courts.

Let us not, therefore, accept in silence a voluntary offering in questionable raids upon the Treasury which can be offered as an example of our own mendacity in the future should there be a return of the oil scandals or parallel graft. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, we have heard and read much concerning the accomplishments of the United States Bureau of Reclamation during the past few years. Investigating commissions have deliberated and reported. Magazine writers have filled pages with prejudiced views, and some Members of Congress have criticized without stating all the facts.

If what we have heard and read from these sources were the only information available pertaining to the work of the United States Bureau of Reclamation, the conclusion might be reached that its accomplishments for the past 26 years had cost too much.

Fortunately for the home builders on the arid lands, there are two sides to the story. The wisdom and vision which gave President Roosevelt the inspiration and courage to recommend that a bureau of the United States Government be given authority, through special act of Congress to use money, accruing from the use and sale of western public lands, for creating western homes, and opportunities for those who might choose to cast in their lot with the West, have never been impugned or successfully challenged.

Out of the 26 years' effort and experience has come much that is of national advantage and cause for large appreciation.

Sometimes during that period the engineering and physical factors have overshadowed the human part of the enterprise, and mistakes have been the result. Sometimes local enthusiasm backed by able political advocates have had a part in allocating some of the reclamation funds in the wrong places. However, our vision and perception of the actual facts and accomplishments should not be clouded or distorted by the smoke screen and clouds raised by those who may be passively indifferent or are out of sympathy with the work of the Reclamation Bureau.

It has been a source of satisfaction to note that real progress has been made in the face of many unforeseen obstacles in this effort to establish western agriculture and industry.

Massive dams have been constructed; great artificial rivers have been diverted over the deserts; cities, churches, schools, colleges, and farm homes have been built in what a generation ago was largely desert. These are accomplishments and monuments well worthy of the highest respect and appreciation of an intelligent people for the vision and courage, in the face of many unforeseen obstacles, which inspired and caused to go forward those reclamation pioneers who in a single generation have written a new chapter into the history of the Nation and the West.

President Roosevelt, in his first message to Congress in 1901, proved himself a great prophet and statesman for his country and was fully conscious of those factors most influencing our national welfare and ideals, when he referred to our greatest natural resources, land and water, in these words:

It is as right for the National Government to make the streams and rivers of the arid region useful by irrigation works for water storage as to make useful the rivers and harbors of the humid region by engineering works of another kind.

The reclamation and settlement of the arid lands will enrich every portion of our country. Just as the settlement of the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys brought prosperity to the Atlantic States, the increased demand for manufactured articles will stimulate industrial production, while wider home markets and the trade of Asia will consume the larger food supplies and effectually prevent western competition with eastern agriculture.

Indeed, the products of irrigation will be consumed chiefly in upbuilding the local centers of mining and other industries, which would otherwise not come into existence at all. Our people as a whole will profit, for successful home making is but another name for the upbuilding of a nation.

On June 17, 1902, President Roosevelt approved the United States reclamation law, which set aside the receipts from the sale of public lands in Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming for construction of irrigation works under direction of the Secretary of the Interior. Later the benefits of the law were extended to Texas.

ENCOURAGING FARM-HOME LIFE

For 26 years the United States Bureau of Reclamation has been assisting in conserving and developing our national resources of land and water.

It has built up a farm-home life, not only as a business but as a mode of living.

Judging from some superficial discussions initiated by those who really have but little true knowledge of what constructive development of large desert areas into peopled, prosperous, and productive communities means or requires, the uninitiated public mind largely appraises the works of the United States Bureau of Reclamation as failures or very limited successes.

As a westerner, and one who, for over 40 years, has watched with sympathetic interest the gradual driving back and overcoming of the desert and flood liabilities, obtaining throughout the old West of 50 years ago, I am amazed at the great achievements and the seeming facility with which the obstacles, by many considered insurmountable, have been overcome—all within a relatively short period of time, and practically without expenditure by the National Treasury.

THE ENTIRE NATION HAS PROFITED, BOTH EAST AND WEST

Two outstanding facts should be nationally emphasized:

First. The East has lost nothing from any appropriation craved by it, on account of the work of the United States Bureau of Reclamation, as practically all of the new money invested in this enterprise came from the West through the sale and leasing of western public lands.

Second. The investment of western money in the West should not be a source of dissatisfaction, especially when such investment has so materially assisted in peopling the desert and adding to the wealth, population, and prestige of the West.

Criticism by easterners of the work accomplished by the United States Bureau of Reclamation, therefore, can only be defined as uninformed provincialism, and when westerners criticize this great work, they are either echoing propaganda set on foot by interests inimical to the West, or of that emanating from those who lack real knowledge of the true sources from which the money thus invested has come, and of the transformation within many western communities brought about through its investment.

THE WORK OF THE UNITED STATES BUREAU OF RECLAMATION COMPARED WITH MILLIONS SPENT IN THE EAST AND SOUTH ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

It would be of much interest here to compare the results obtained by the United States Bureau of Reclamation in building up the West and actually creating new national wealth through irrigation, power development, and flood control, with those obtained from the expenditure of the many millions appropriated by Congress from the National Treasury, from time to time, for river and harbor improvements, in the South and East.

In May, 1896, Congress passed over President Cleveland's veto a single bill providing for the appropriation and expenditure of $80,000,000 for "river and harbor improvements," payable from the National Treasury.

It is of interest to us at this time to note what President Cleveland said when returning this bill to Congress without his approval, which Congress immediately passed over his veto. Here is his statement:

> Many of the objects for which it appropriates public money are not related to public welfare, and many of them are palpably for the benefit of limited localities or in aid of individual interests.

On June 23, 1923, in a public address, President Harding said, when referring to the enormous sums appropriated from the National Treasury, for river and harbor improvements:

> The Federal Government has expended approximately $1,130,610,000 on river and harbor improvements. Only last spring the Congress appropriated $56,589,910 in spite of a Budget recommendation of less than half that amount.
>
> For the sums spent on harbors we have most beneficial results. The millions expended on inland waterways, on rivers, and canals have brought small returns because we have put them to no practical use. Though we expected to cheapen carrying charges and facilitate transportation, we have failed in coordinating service and allowed the railroads to discourage every worth-while development.

Just what benefit to the Nation the expenditure of this $80,000,000 appropriation for "river and harbor improvements" and other scores of millions appropriated for like purposes has been, is not entirely apparent at this time; but assuming all was wisely spent, we feel confident no more worthy purpose existed for these expenditures and no greater accomplishments have been attained than from the use of $144,000,000 of western public land money in the West by the United States Bureau of Reclamation for water storage, irrigation, power development, and flood control.

FLOOD CONTROL STRUCTURES CONVERTED INTO NATIONAL ASSETS

Engineers now recognize that the most effective and economical flood-control structures are storage reservoirs in the Western States, where the streams leave the mountains. Thus, floods on the Mississippi-Missouri River have been and will be lessened by irrigation storage works on the Missouri's tributaries in the mountains far to the west of the areas flooded.

The former damage from the Rio Grande floods has been greatly lessened by construction of the Elephant Butte Dam.

Many eliminations of the flood hazard can be found in drainage basins, both south and west, where the waters so stored are converted into a national asset rather than a national liability.

Irrigated farms, great hydroelectric power development for domestic and industrial use, flood control and elimination of erosion and destruction of great western watersheds, are all achievements of the United States Bureau of Reclamation.

Able engineers and a bureau of our National Government, responsible for these great epoch-making accomplishments, should receive the Nation's thanks and commendation, rather than loose criticism from those who would draw an unfavorable picture of a great national achievement.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF RECLAMATION PIONEERS

Some physical accomplishments of the United States Bureau of Reclamation are:

Thirteen million acre-feet of water storage created where irrigation, hydroelectric energy, and flood control unite to make of tremendous economic value that which was formerly largely wasted and often a flood menace.

Sixteen thousand miles of canals, distributing laterals, and drains; 31 miles of tunnel; 11,332 bridges and thousands of smaller structures built for western improvement.

Great massive structures, such as the following-named dams, will remain as monuments to the courage and foresight of those responsible for their initiation and completion, and will remain sources of public wealth through the centuries to come, long after the generation which built them has passed into history.

AMERICANS SHOULD ACQUAINT THEMSELVES WITH THE ECONOMIC IMPORTANCE OF THESE NATIONAL ASSETS

Jackson Lake Dam, in Wyoming, for Idaho farms.
Roosevelt Dam, Ariz.
East Park and Stony Gorge Dams, Calif.
Arrowrock and American Falls Dams, Idaho.
Colorado River Roller Crest Dam, Colo.
St. Marys and Sherburne Lakes, Mont.
Pathfinder Dam, in Wyoming, for Wyoming and Nebraska.
Elephant Butte Dam, in New Mexico, for New Mexico and Texas.
Belle Fourche Dam, S. Dak.
Shoshone Dam, Wyo.
Strawberry Valley Dam, Utah.
Tieton Dam, Wash.
Conconully Dam, Wash.
Lahontan Dam, Nev.
And more than 100 smaller structures of like character.

These structures will stand out as among the important economic and physical contributions of large and permanent value which our day and age will bequeath to posterity.

They are the initial structures of like character which will continue to be built as demand for food and opportunity, which a farm home gives to a nation, increases. Eventually all winter precipitation on western mountains will be stored and used for the benefit of the Nation, rather than rush to the ocean in flood periods.

Two of these enterprises have offered occasion for amicable settlements of water questions of international character.

The water stored up by these dams for irrigating millions of hitherto unproductive arid acres, now converted into gardens and farm homes; the hydroelectric energy furnished to sections far removed from other large power and fuel supplies, and the flood control afforded, are not matters to be lightly criticized or passively overlooked.

Ere long, the vision and wisdom of the reclamation pioneers will be more fully appreciated and their work acknowledged as one of the leading economic contributions made to our Nation by the twentieth century.

FARMERS PAYING OVER $5,000,000 ANNUALLY TO RECLAMATION REVOLVING FUND

We have heard much about the noncollection of irrigation costs by the United States Bureau of Reclamation. What are the facts? During the past nine years, covering a period of great economic depression among the farming class, collections which have been received by the reclamation fund average well over $5,000,000 a year.

The present constructed works are capable of serving about 3,000,000 acres with irrigation water, of which an area of 1,956,910 acres is wholly dependent upon the United States Bureau of Reclamation for water, and was largely unproductive and without value or demand for goods and business before reclamation.

Over 1,431,500 acres are actually cropped and producing food and textile necessities of life.

275 PER CENT RETURN ON TOTAL INVESTMENT—$50 PER ACRE ANNUAL AVERAGE CROP VALUE

The increased value of lands and other properties on farms and in towns, within the enterprises watered by the United States Bureau of Reclamation, is authoritatively estimated at $550,000,000, a figure which compares well with the total expenditure of $229,000,000 for reclamation purposes.

The crops raised within United States Bureau of Reclamation enterprises, in 1927, in a period of relatively low prices, and on lands dependent on reclamation works for their irrigation supply, had an average value of $50.33 for each cropped acre, or a grand total of over $133,000,000 for a single year.

From the twenty-seventh annual report of the Bureau of Reclamation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, we select these figures:

One hundred and forty-three million dollars of the total invested by the Reclamation Service since 1902 accrued to this fund through the sale of public lands, sale of reclamation town sites, and proceeds from the public-land oil leasing act.

Over $77,000,000 has already been repaid by the farmers and returned to the Government for further use in the reclamation revolving fund.

OVER $1,000,000 REALIZED ANNUALLY FROM SALE OF HYDROELECTRIC POWER

Fifty power units have been built and are operated by the various enterprises; 396,577,911 kilowatt-hours of electrical energy were produced by these plants in the season of 1927–28, of which 251,768,744 kilowatt-hours were sold to cities, power companies, sugar companies, and farmers, at wholesale, for the sum of $2,674,658.25, and the remainder of such electrical energy was used where produced, in irrigation or for other purposes.

Other figures, denoting social as well as economic progress, also show what has taken place during the past 26 years on these enterprises.

One hundred and forty-three thousand two hundred and twenty-seven people living on 38,428 farms and 429,683 people residing in 207 towns on these projects is one accomplishment of the United States Bureau of Reclamation.

Six hundred and eighty-five schools, 683 churches, 135 banks, with about $10,500,000 in capital and $137,487,000 in deposits, by 237,612 depositors, are other national assets in which the United States Bureau of Reclamation has had a definite part in creating.

How many public or private enterprises requiring large capital investment, initiated over a period of 26 changeful years, can now show an annual return of 31 per cent on the investment in dollar products alone, with increased property values of $550,000,000, or 275 per cent on the total capital employed for the period, to say nothing of the advantages to industry and commerce and in political prestige which these new settlements and values give to western America?

One million nine hundred and fifty-seven thousand acres of desert made into farms is no mean achievement for a public, private, or corporate agency. Some mistakes were initially made, due to a pioneer field of endeavor by our Government, but to those who know the details of this undertaking, it seems a marvel that there were so few.

Farmers and their families, many of them from the humid sections of our country, have learned much by experience and are now applying that knowledge in avoiding mistakes of the past and in building up for themselves a competence in these irrigated communities of the great West, where life is abundant and where industry and individual initiative are yet rewarded generously.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Do the $550,000,000 of increased values, due to reclamation, represent something that is for the farmer or against the farmer, generally?

Mr. SMITH. It is for the farmer, as it means the creation of national wealth and enables thousands of people who otherwise would not have a home on the land an opportunity to get one on the land.

Mr. BLANTON. But it creates a surplus.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, no.

Mr. BLANTON. Which is to the detriment of the farmer.

Mr. SMITH. Not at all.

Mr. BLANTON. It brings prices down by reason of overproduction.

Mr. SMITH. No; because less than 1 per cent of farm commodities raised in this country are raised on Government reclamation projects.

Mr. BLANTON. Yet it does reduce prices to that extent.

Mr. SMITH. Not at all, because 90 per cent of the products produced on reclamation projects are used in the locality in the cities, towns, and communities developed because of the construction of these projects.

Mr. BLANTON. But it is an increase in the surplus, which is to the detriment of the farmers generally?

Mr. SMITH. Not at all, for, as I have stated, 90 per cent of the products raised on these projects are consumed in the immediate locality.

Mr. BLANTON. It is overproduction that is ruining the farmers of the United States.

Mr. SMITH. Only the wheat and corn growers.

Mr. LEAVITT. Is it not also true that what is raised on the reclamation projects is very largely not the kind of crop of which there is a surplus?

Mr. SMITH. That is true.

Mr. LEAVITT. It consists of crops in which there is a shortage, such as sugar and things of that kind.

Mr. SMITH. Yes. Wheat is the crop generally regarded as producing a surplus. We produce a comparatively small quantity of wheat on the reclamation projects.

NATIONAL SYMMETRY RESULTS FROM DEVELOPMENT OF RECLAMATION RESOURCES

National symmetry, politically and physically, have resulted from these accomplishments wrought by the United States Bureau of Reclamation and other agencies which have contributed to the irrigation of western farms and development of power. Good county, State, and national highway systems; grade and high schools; towns and cities have been built up while industry has followed in the wake of all of this development and now also contributes its part in wealth and service to our Nation.

The United States Bureau of Reclamation has contributed in no small way to our national wealth and greatness, to the happiness and wealth of many families, and to a better home life in western America.

Its further efforts in conserving our natural resources and creating new wealth and opportunity should have the loyal support of the American people regardless of section.

To demonstrate that reclamation concerns the East as well as the West I call your attention to the following data:

Report on incoming eastern shipments received in Yakima Valley during 1927

(Estimated by the Yakima Chamber of Commerce and checked and revised by business men and railroads)

Automobiles, 1,929 new cars purchased during 1927		$2,500,000
Tires and auto accessories		2,000,000
Farm machinery, farm tractors, plows, etc		1,000,000
Hardware and building and plumbing supplies:
(a) 250 cars hardware (Pittsburgh and far East)	$1,500,000
(b) 10 cars hardwood (Arkansas and Michigan)	25,000
(c) 4 cars Celotex	10,000
(d) Metal lath, Pittsburgh	15,000
(e) Other building materials, plumbing, miscellaneous	500,000
		2,050,000
Canned goods, mixed groceries, breakfast foods, etc		4,000,000
Ready-to-wear clothing, shoes, etc		4,500,000
Furniture and household supplies		1,700,000
Cotton and woolen goods (mattresses, etc.)		2,200,000
Drugs and sundries		750,000
Electrical apparatus, etc		750,000
Musical instruments:
(a) 1,000 radio sets (from Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and New York)	$100,000
(b) 5 cars pianos, (c) 4 cars phonographs, and (d) other musical instruments	100,000
		200,000
Insurance premiums (paid to eastern companies)		5,000,000
Packing-house and orchard supplies (spray materials, orchard heaters, paper, shook, etc.; estimate, 825 carloads)		825,000
Eastern lubricating oils (15 cars)		25,000

Corn (100 carloads of corn from Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, and Illinois)	$120,000
Millinery, notions, crockery, etc	500,000
All other items not listed	2,000,000
Total	30,120,000

In 1923 there were shipped into the Salt River Valley project in Arizona 7,935 cars of manufactured artices from 42 States, as follows:

Michigan	337
Wisconsin	213
Illinois	457
Indiana	104
Ohio	225
Iowa	36
Missouri	218
Kansas	195
Nebraska	33
Oklahoma	193
Mississippi, Florida, Virginia, New Hampshire	1
Wyoming	43
Tennessee	18
Alabama	22
Colorado	142
Texas	981
Kentucky	32
West Virginia	18
Pennsylvania	39
New York	67
Massachusetts	12
Connecticut	7
Maine	3
New Jersey	18
Maryland	4
Minnesota	40
North Dakota	1
Arkansas	26
Georgia	3
Louisiana	12
Washington	114
New Mexico	564
Utah	46
Idaho	48
Montana	6
Oregon	502
Nevada	9
California	2,897
Arizona	206

A report from Phoenix, Ariz., states that the official figures of all incoming cars for 1927 amount to 19,084 cars, an increase of more than 11,000 cars of incoming produce since 1923 in that one project.

RECAPITULATION

(As of June 30, 1928)

Total funds available for investment in the 26-year period, by United States Bureau of Reclamation		$238,732,793.74
Total invested since 1902		229,424,520.70
Cash on hand		9,308,273.04

Sources of reclamation fund, as above indicated

Sale and use of western public lands		$143,741,593.71
Advance from United States General Treasury	$20,000,000
Repaid	8,000,000
Balance not yet due		12,000,000.00
Other sources (judgments, increase of compensation, Rio Grande Dam, Wind River Indian funds, etc.)		5,286,602.69
Collections by United States Bureau of Reclamation from settlers, which have been returned to reclamation revolving fund and used in further development		77,704,597.34
Amounts due from settlers and water users on construction, maintenance, operation, water and land rentals and yet unpaid to the reclamation fund		3,979,499.50

[NOTE.—The figures on this page, taken from the Twenty-seventh Annual Report of the Bureau of Reclamation, should be of interest to citizens of our Nation, both East and West. They give an entirely different picture from that many times reflected by those who should know the facts.]

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF RECLAMATION,
Washington, February 13, 1929.

Hon. ADDISON T. SMITH,
House of Representatives, United States, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SMITH: Referring to your recent request for some information showing the amount of goods manufactured elsewhere shipped into our reclamation projects and paid for by them, I have had tabulated the data thus far received, in answer to your inquiry about this matter. The showing is so surprisingly good that I hope you may have an opportunity of presenting it to Congress or of giving it to the press.

Sincerely yours,

ELWOOD MEAD, Commissioner.

The attached sheets give the data furnished by the projects and a summary for all the projects from which reports have been received. This summary shows that on nine projects shipments into the projects amounted to over $22,000,000 and that on two additional projects, which gave the number of carloads shipped in without reporting their value, a larger number of carloads were received than on the nine projects for which values were reported. It therefore appears that on one-half of the projects the value of goods shipped in amounts to at least $50,000,000, and it is reasonable to assume that total shipments into all our projects amount to between $75,000,000 and $100,000,000.

Shipments to the Yuma, Orland, Uncompahgre, Sun River, North Platte, Carlsbad, Vale, Belle Fourche, and Shoshone projects, 1928

Commodity	Carloads	Value
Automobiles	927	$3,341,800
Bags, baskets, and shooks	224	918,800
Cement and building materials	1,204	486,350
Coal	6,459	1,275,725
Culverts	23	35,000
Fencing	6	7,500
Fertilizer	9	10,000
Foodstuffs	967	1,712,470
Furniture	96	95,500
Grain and feed	1,323	988,775
Lime rock	1,562	105,250
Livestock	2,991	5,942,800
Lumber	1,376	1,315,200
Machinery	418	1,166,550
Merchandise	138	261,720
Oil and gas	2,408	2,642,900
Salt	105	69,750
Seed	67	426,000
Sugar and sirup	87	254,900
Miscellaneous	1,151	1,130,500
Total (9 projects)	21,541	22,187,490

Carload shipments to Boise and Rio Grande[1] for which no value is given

Commodity:	Carloads
Automobiles	509
Cement and building materials	2,720
Coal	3,300
Foodstuffs	610
Grain and hay	2,357
Livestock	1,945
Merchandise	5,760
Oil and gas	1,180
Paving material	1,320
Miscellaneous	3,380
Total (2 projects)	23,081
Grand total (11 projects)	44,622

YUMA PROJECT, ARIZONA-CALIFORNIA

Carload shipments to project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Lumber	165	$214,500
Gas and oil	288	504,000
Livestock[1]	202	500,000
Cement	62	68,200
Sugar	11	42,900
Flour	78	187,200
Autos	124	695,000
Farm machinery	28	110,000
Shook (lettuce and cantaloupes)	67	80,400
Miscellaneous[2]	303	454,500
Total	1,328	2,856,700

[1] Livestock shipped in for winter feeding and fattening for coast market.
[2] Includes meats, all groceries and building materials not listed above, millwork, vegetables, coal, milk, etc., averaged at $1,500 per car.

ORLAND PROJECT, CALIFORNIA

Carload shipments to project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Oil	125	$100,000
Lumber	55	38,500
Flour and mill stuff	45	45,000
Cement	22	16,500
Coal	20	9,000
Wood (fuel)	8	800
Fertilizer	5	6,000
Farm machinery	3	2,250
Tractors	3	10,500
Fencing and posts	3	1,500
Brick	2	300
Automobiles	2	9,000
Miscellaneous	9	4,500
Total	302	243,850

[1] Rio Grande shipments for year 1927.

UNCOMPAHGRE PROJECT, COLORADO

Carload shipments to project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Automobiles and tractors	176	$704,000
Bags, baskets, and shooks	76	304,000
Canned goods	6	8,600
Cattle	25	10,000
Cement, plaster, and lime	33	33,000
Coal and coke	656	164,000
Corn	7	4,200
Cottonseed cake	13	13,000
Feed	26	15,600
Flour	49	49,000
Fruit and melons	5	2,500
Furniture	15	15,000
Gas and oil	299	600,000
Grain	44	44,000
Groceries, meats, etc	60	240,000
Hardware, implements, etc	40	200,000
Hay	7	1,400
Horses	1	2,000
Household goods	5	2,000
Ice	55	27,500
Lime rock	137	34,000
Lumber, shingles, etc	112	200,000
Salt	30	15,000
Seed	10	60,000
Sheep	142	284,000
Soap	8	32,000
Sugar	21	84,000
Sirup	39	43,000
Wheat	25	18,700
Miscellaneous	30	15,000
Total	2,152	3,225,500

Boise project, Idaho, carload shipments to project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value[1]
Building material	2,720
Paving material	1,320
Fuel	3,300
Oil and gasoline	1,180
Foodstuffs	610
Grain and hay	630
Livestock	950
Merchandise	5,760
Miscellaneous	3,380
Total	19,850

[1] No value shown.

SUN RIVER PROJECT, MONTANA

Carload shipments to project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Lumber	12	$9,000
Coal	37	10,000
Rye	1	1,000
Gasoline	28	35,000
Machinery	4	16,000
Feed	1	400
Automobiles	5	15,000
Culverts	2	3,000
Cement	2	1,800
Flour	2	4,500
Cattle	1	2,000
Total	95	97,700

NORTH PLATTE PROJECT, NEBRASKA-WYOMING

Carload shipments to project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Acid	9	$2,700
Automobiles [1]	495	1,485,000
Bags (sugar)	54	486,000
Bran and stock food	156	93,600
Brick and tile	139	31,275
Canned goods	56	179,200
Cement	278	111,200
Cereal, beverages	19	24,700
Coke	235	52,875
Cooperage	14	8,400
Cottonseed cake	54	81,000
Culverts	2	4,000
Dragline	2	10,000
Drill, well	1	600
Electrical equipment	1	900
Flour	198	336,600
Furniture	2	2,000
Gas	960	576,000
Ice	31	9,300
Implements, agricultural	162	324,000
Iron and steel	16	25,600
Lime	37	14,800

[1] Does not include cars driven.

NORTH PLATTE PROJECT, NEBRASKA-WYOMING—continued

Carload shipments to project, 1928—Continued

Kind	Cars	Value
Machinery	80	$160,000
Milk cans	1	2,200
Miscellaneous	534	534,000
Molasses	181	135,750
Oil	255	153,000
Paper	1	2,000
Pipe, cast iron	5	12,500
Plaster	53	9,275
Pulp, beet	87	34,800
Soda ash	2	1,800
Stoneware	1	500
Sugar	16	56,000
Sulphur	3	1,800
Sirup	25	20,000
Targets, clay	1	800
Threshing machines	3	4,200
Tractors	6	19,500
Tubing, copper	1	12,000
Wire	12	18,000
	4,188	5,037,875
Coal	5,196	909,300
Emigrant outfits	71	71,000
Grain:
Barley	13	13,000
Corn	442	486,200
Oats	3	2,250
Wheat	2	2,400
Hay	149	22,350
Iron:
Scrap	3	720
Rock	1,425	71,250
Livestock:
Cattle	1,428	2,856,000
Horses	23	46,000
Sheep	1,050	2,100,000
Lumber	747	522,900
Posts	17	6,800
Potatoes (seed)	1	720
Salt	60	48,000
Sand and gravel	15	450
Seed:
Alfalfa	7	84,000
Beet	60	342,000
Shingles	8	5,600
Stone	19	950
Total	10,739	7,591,890

CARLSBAD PROJECT, NEW MEXICO

Carload shipments to project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Autos	93	$334,800
Cattle	119	142,800
Cement, brick, and tile	215	107,500
Pipe and casing	53	132,500
Coal	120	48,000
Furniture	1	2,500
Flour and feed	98	196,000
Grain	61	21,350
Hay	57	14,250
Lumber	128	128,000
Machinery	33	165,000
Oil and gasoline	224	302,400
Salt	15	6,750
Sand	226	22,600
Sugar and sirup	14	52,000
Vegetables and fruits	50	30,000
Household goods	2	3,000
Cottonseed	136	81,600
Fertilizer	4	4,000
Ties and bagging	10	10,000
Miscellaneous	157	23,550
Total	1,816	1,828,600

RIO GRANDE PROJECT, NEW MEXICO-TEXAS

Carload shipments to project, 1927

Kind:	Cars
Hay	679
Grain, flour, feed	1,048
Livestock	995
Agricultural implements	(1)
Automobiles	509
Lumber	(1)
Coal	(1)
Petroleum products	(1)
Fertilizer	(1)
Foodstuffs	(1)
Dry goods	(1)
Fruit and vegetables	(1)
Dairy products	(1)
Packing-house products	(1)
Bags and bagging	(1)
Furniture	(1)
Miscellaneous	(1)
Total	3,231

Value not shown.

[1] Incomplete.

VALE PROJECT, OREGON

Carload shipments to project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Lumber	23	$35,000
Cement	3	3,000
Gasoline	38	76,000
Oil	2	10,000
Automobiles	1	6,000
Flour	3	3,000
Miscellaneous, including machinery, hardware, furniture, canned goods, dry goods, groceries, etc.	20	45,000
Total	90	178,000

BELLE FOURCHE PROJECT, SOUTH DAKOTA

Carload shipments to project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Oils and gasoline	103	$150,000
Lumber and posts	70	70,000
Coal	140	70,000
Farm machinery	22	55,000
Road culverts	19	28,000
Cement and lime	27	13,000
Brick	14	6,000
Fence wire	3	6,000
Total	398	398,000

SHOSHONE PROJECT, WYOMING

Carload shipments to project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Automobiles	31	$93,000
Bags	3	30,000
Beet pulp	65	4,875
Cement	13	10,400
Coal	47	11,750
Flour	12	36,000
Feed	15	21,000
Gasoline and lubricating oils	86	136,500
Implements	14	63,000
Groceries	53	185,500
Lumber	47	90,500
Tile	24	18,000
Steel, brick, and roofing material	12	12,500
Miscellaneous	11	16,350
Total	433	729,375

Shipments from Yuma, Orland, Uncompahgre, Boise, North Platte, Sun River, Carlsbad, Vale, Belle Fourche, Strawberry Valley, Okanogan, and Shoshone projects, 1928

Commodity	Carloads	Value
Alfalfa	1,734	$621,080
Apples and other fruit	4,712	3,162,420
Barley	62	78,000
Cantaloupes	510	197,600
Cattle	4,740	9,856,200
Cotton	1,323	3,657,675
Dairy products	838	4,221,000
Flax	8	17,800
Hogs	848	1,133,900
Horses	116	156,600
Honey	33	129,200
Lettuce	918	499,300
Oats	18	12,700
Onions	1,380	1,382,000
Pickles	25	37,000
Potatoes and other vegetables	6,512	1,696,050
Seed	148	665,000
Sheep	1,812	4,335,000
Sugar and beets	8,124	20,363,800
Wheat	2,609	2,687,100
Wool	75	725,000
Miscellaneous	557	326,150
Total, 12 projects	37,102	55,960,575

Carload shipments from Rio Grande[1] and Yakima projects for which no value given (two projects)

Alfalfa	927
Apples	18,601
Cattle	376
Cotton	5,084
Potatoes	4,002
Onions	439
Wheat	95
Miscellaneous	424
	29,948

Grand total (14 projects), 67,050 carloads.

[1] Rio Grande shipments are for year 1927.

UNCOMPAHGRE PROJECT, COLORADO

Carload shipments from project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Apples	142	$44,000
Brick and tile	19	14,200
Building material (other)	15	30,000
Canned goods	63	100,000
Cattle	518	1,036,000
Cheese	23	138,000
Eggs	11	33,000
Flour	88	88,000
Fruit (other)	3	3,000
Grain	218	225,000
Hay	6	1,500
Hogs	129	250,000
Honey	16	80,000
Horses	5	5,000
Household goods	3	3,000
Machinery and hardware	15	30,000
Molasses	8	32,000
Onions	1,366	1,366,000
Potatoes	914	255,000
Poultry	41	84,000
Sheep	448	896,000
Sugar	239	478,000
Vegetables	63	18,900
Wool	30	300,000
Miscellaneous	30	15,000
Total	4,413	5,525,600

YUMA PROJECT—ARIZONA-CALIFORNIA

Carload shipments from project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Alfalfa hay	733	$147,800
Alfalfa seed	48	226,200
Alfalfa straw	151	16,600
Manure	222	22,200
Cotton	316	1,513,400
Cottonseed	305	268,200
Cottonseed oil	2	9,600
Grapefruit	29	86,100
Lettuce	918	499,300
Cantaloupes	510	197,600
Watermelons	65	42,000
Livestock[1]	239	640,000
Higera	1
Date palms	4	10,000
Honey	3	3,000
Grapes	3	6,000
Citrus trees (nursery stock)	10	10,000
Total	3,559	3,698,000

[1] Livestock not raised on project but is shipped in for winter feeding and fattening for coast market.

ORLAND PROJECT, CALIFORNIA

Carload shipments from project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Oranges	80	$128,000
Alfalfa (baled)	35	5,250
Almonds	23	207,000
Prunes (dried)	21	75,600
Barley	16	24,000
Olives	13	16,900
Apricots (dried)	8	52,000
Walnut logs	8	4,000
Figs (canned)	7	35,000
Apricots (green)	4	3,300
Milo	2	3,000
Peaches (fresh)	2	1,000
Wheat	1	1,700
English walnuts	1	4,000
Grapes	1	600
Raisins	1	500
Lemons	1	1,500
Apricots (pits)	1	1,000
Mixed fruits	1	1,000
Butter[1]	133	500,000
Sheep	100	125,000
Cattle	65	143,000
Hogs	62	105,400
Turkeys	60	135,000
Wool	7	42,000
Horses	3	3,700
Mules	1	1,500
Total	657	1,620,950

[1] Production of 1,000,000 pounds equated on basis of 75,000 pounds per car. Butter is shipped via motor trucks.

BOISE PROJECT, IDAHO

Carload shipments from project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Grain	698	$630,000
Seed	148	665,000
Flour and mill products	556	445,000
Hay	199	80,000
Fruit	1,892	760,000
Vegetables	1,998	800,000
Livestock	1,563	1,560,000
Butter	175	2,200,000
Eggs and poultry	297	600,000
Total	7,526	7,740,000

SUN RIVER PROJECT, MONTANA

Carload shipments from project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Cattle	27	$55,000
Horses	1	1,200
Sheep	4	11,000
Hogs	3	3,500
Wool	1	13,000
Sweet-clover seed	2	4,000
Sugar beets	18	7,600
Potatoes	20	9,000
Barley	1	1,000
Wheat	228	291,000
Flax	2	5,000
Alfalfa	80	17,000
Oats	1	1,300
Honey	3	5,200
Total	391	424,800

NORTH PLATTE PROJECT, NEBRASKA-WYOMING

Carload shipments from project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Beans	3	$15,000
Cheese	41	205,000
Eggs	5	15,000
Flax	2	4,800
Flour	2	3,400
Food, stock	148	70,400
Grain:
Barley	40	40,000
Oats	8	6,000
Wheat	635	762,000
Hay	143	21,450
Livestock:
Cattle	1,857	5,571,000
Hogs	568	681,600
Horses	83	124,500
Sheep	953	2,668,400
Molasses	266	199,500
Pickles	10	25,000
Potatoes	2,895	347,400
Poultry:
Live	5	15,000
Dressed	26	130,000
Pulp, beet	1,051	420,400
Sugar	5,326	18,641,000
Sirup	216	172,800
Total	14,283	30,139,650

CARLSBAD PROJECT, NEW MEXICO

Carload shipments from project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Alfalfa hay	118	$23,600
Alfalfa seed	4	4,000
Cattle	188	225,600
Cotton	560	1,619,300
Cotton linters	10	24,975
Cottonseed	1	600
Cottonseed oil	41	164,000
Cottonseed cake	80	56,000
Cottonseed hulls	8	1,600
Junk	2	3,000
Sheep	27	43,200
Wool	3	24,000
Corn	2	600
Horses and mules	1	700
Miscellaneous	18	27,000
Total	1,063	2,218,175

RIO GRANDE PROJECT, NEW MEXICO-TEXAS

Carload shipments from project, 1927

Kind:	Cars
Cotton	4,800
Cottonseed products	284
Grain, flour, feed	95
Hay	927
Fruit and vegetables	910
Miscellaneous	424
Livestock	376
Total	7,816

VALE PROJECT, OREGON

Carload shipments from project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Wheat	38	$60,000
Barley	4	7,000
Potatoes	8	5,000
Clover seed	⅔	5,000
Alfalfa seed	⅓	2,000
Mill feed	1	6,000
Onions	4	6,000
Honey	3	15,000
Cattle	23	60,000
Hogs	11	18,000
Sheep	3	9,000
Dressed poultry	1	6,000
Turkeys	3	24,000
Wool	1	16,000
Total	101	239,000

STRAWBERRY VALLEY PROJECT, UTAH

Carload shipments from project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Fruit	100	$50,000
Onions	10	10,000
Total	110	60,000

BELLE FOURCHE PROJECT, SOUTH DAKOTA

Carload shipments from project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Cattle	243	$535,000
Sheep	209	460,000
Wool	31	310,000
Wheat	120	156,000
Hogs	73	73,000
Horses	22	20,000
Honey	4	16,000
Pickles	15	12,000
Hay	80	10,400
Flax	4	8,000
Poultry	2	6,000
Oats	9	5,400
Potatoes	3	3,000
Total	815	1,614,800

OKANOGAN PROJECT, WASHINGTON

Carload shipments from project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Apples	2,245	$1,600,000
Cherries	23	16,560
Peaches	1	360
Pears	30	7,000
Total	2,299	1,623,920

YAKIMA PROJECT, WASHINGTON

Carload shipments from project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value [1]
Apples	9,097
Mixed fruit	1,945
Pears	3,848
Apricots	144
Cherries	436
Grapes	237
Peaches	1,637
Prunes	331
Strawberries	16
Asparagus	76
Melons	420
Onions	439
Vegetables	434
Potatoes	3,072
Total	22,132

[1] No value shown.

SHOSHONE PROJECT, WYOMING

Carload shipments from project, 1928

Kind	Cars	Value
Alfalfa meal	134	$56,280
Beans	54	162,000
Beets	1,000	412,500
Honey	4	10,000
Peas	4	12,000
Potatoes	550	68,750
Wheat	25	25,000
Cattle	17	30,600
Hogs	2	2,400
Poultry, dressed	5	50,000
Sheep	68	122,400
Wool	2	20,000
Butterfat, 176,616 pounds	10	80,000
Miscellaneous	10	3,750
Total	1,885	1,055,680

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, it is my purpose this afternoon to discuss for a little while a recent episode in our parliamentary procedure, which, in my opinion, is worthy of the earnest consideration of this membership. To some it may appear as a trivial incident, but to my mind it involves very deeply the essence and spirit of the privileges of the House. I refer to the action of the majority representatives on the committee of conference appointed by the House with reference to the disposition of the first deficiency appropriation bill. I think that I may be justified for a moment in recalling the history of that situation so that the remarks that I will make subsequently may appear to be at least pertinent to the proposition.

It will be recalled that in the orderly procedure of the House the Committee on Appropriations brought in this deficiency appropriation bill. It passed through the ordinary routine consideration here on the floor of the House, and with certain amendments was sent to the Senate. The Senate of the United States as a coordinate branch of our representative government, in its wisdom, and I will say incidentally not by a partisan but by a bipartisan vote, and by a very large majority vote, saw fit to incorporate in that bill three amendments; and I shall ask permission to insert those amendments in the RECORD without now reading them. They are as follows:

Amendment No. 1

Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated for tax refunds where the claim is in excess of $10,000 shall be paid out except upon hearings before any committee or officer in the department conducting same, which hearings shall be open to the public, and the decision shall be a public document.

Amendment No. 2

For the purposes of a thorough inquiry into the problem of prohibition under the provisions of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution, and laws enacted in pursuance thereof, $250,000, or as much thereof as may be required, to be expended under authority and by direction of the President of the United States, who shall make prompt report of the result of such investigation to the Congress together with his recommendations with respect thereto, said sum to be available until June 30, 1930.

Amendment No. 3

BUREAU OF PROHIBITION

For increasing the enforcement force, $24,000,000, or such part thereof as the President may deem useful, to be allocated by the President, as he may see fit, to the departments or bureaus charged with the enforcement of the national prohibition act, and to remain available until June 30, 1930.

One was a proposition advanced upon the floor of the Senate by a Senator from Tennessee involving the problem of a real consideration of the enormous amounts of money paid out of the Treasury of the United States by way of rebates and returns to the income-tax payers, a matter of major importance to the fiscal policies of our Government, a matter of great importance to us, the representatives of the people, in our effort to have an economical and a just administration of the fiscal affairs of the Government as administered through the Treasury Department.

In recent debates on the floor of this House it has been developed that very probably grave abuses have existed in that regard, and just criticism lodged in respect to certain features of the administration of that law.

And not only have some gentlemen on the floor of this House, particularly upon the Democratic side, sought some relief from that situation, but, evidencing the sense of importance that the other branch puts upon it, the amendment authorizing a searching investigation and an auditing of these amounts before these tremendous sums are paid out of the Treasury of the United States was adopted by the Senate. Another amendment was offered by a distinguished Senator from the State of Virginia, formerly Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, a man of long and distinguished public career in the service of his people and of the Federal Government, and recognized not as a publicity seeker or a prohibition propagandist, but as a real statesman seeking to remedy what all men recognize as an almost intolerable situation with reference to the enforcement of our Constitution and certain laws passed in conformity with the Constitution. By the terms of that amendment we are attempting to carry out the recommendations of the President elect of the United States, so far as his anticipated policy upon that question is concerned, because Mr. Hoover in his preelection speeches stated that it was his purpose after his inauguration to appoint a commission to investigate the abuses in the administration of our prohibition laws. Following the spirit, at least, of the suggestion of the next President of the United States, who will have the responsibility of undertaking some character of leadership in the solution of this perplexing problem, that Senator from Virginia offered an amendment on the floor of the Senate appropriating $250,000 for the particular purpose that Mr. Hoover had declared as, in his opinion, of grave concern to the peace and security of the people of the United States. The amendment merely gives to Mr. Hoover the necessary money to carry out his own policy.

The other amendment, and the one which is responsible for this almost revolutionary conduct on the part of the conferees, was the one offered by the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], making an appropriation of $24,000,000 for the more adequate enforcement of the prohibition laws of this country. I am not going into an argument here as to the necessity of that appropriation, because my limited time will not permit me. But evidently, gentlemen, not only the author of that amendment, not only his Democratic associates on the floor of the Senate, thought it a wise and provident provision, but a large number of men of the opposing political faith in the Senate of the United States registered their affirmation of the correctness of that policy, and it will be so shown if you will look at the record vote on this question. That amendment was incorporated in this bill, and all three of them came to the House of Representatives in the due and orderly form for consideration by this body.

Then what happened? The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], when the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] asked unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table and disagree to the Senate amendments, asked the conferees on the part of the House a direct interrogatory, which was propounded to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] as to whether or not he would assure this House that before refusing to accept the Senate amendments he would bring the proposition back to the House and give the Representatives of the people here an opportunity to say whether or not they thought the Senate amendments ought to be incorporated in the law.

And what assurance did the gentleman from Indiana give to the gentleman from Texas and the membership of this House on that occasion with reference to that promise? It was a matter of such importance, apparently, to the gentleman from Texas, as I know it was to other Members of this House, that he was justified in having some definite assurance from the gentleman from Indiana. Not being willing to trust my memory to quote the reply of the gentleman from Indiana, I will read from the RECORD, found on page 2427, of January 29, 1929, where the gentleman from Indiana made this statement in reply to a statement from Mr. BYRNS:

> Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, let me ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. I hope gentlemen on that side have not lost all their confidence in the gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol; and, having that confidence, they can depend upon it that there will be no agreement on these amendments. I know two of the conferees who will be upon the Senate side. One of them will never recede with reference to the tax amendment. Another, the author of this other amendment, will be one of the conferees. Does the gentleman think that he is going to consent to recede and thus despoil all of his purpose in introducing it, in rehabilitating himself with his constituency?

The gentleman from Indiana, thinking perhaps that his statement might seem rather indefinite, made this further statement, which you will find on page 2425 of the RECORD of January 29:

> Mr. WOOD. I will say to the gentleman from New York that if this bill goes to conference under the rule we will have to bring these two amendments back, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], and after that any amendment may be proposed.

And to make the gentleman's promise a little more definite and specific I will quote a further statement from him from this same page of the RECORD, in which he said, replying to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON]:

Mr. WOOD. I will say to the gentleman that he has anticipated what can not possibly happen. Knowing the attitude of the gentlemen on the other side and the temper they have already manifested in reference to the amendment, and considering the information that comes to me, I understand that under no circumstances will they recede. So I am free to say this: It would put the House conferees in a very embarrassing position if the thing should occur that the gentleman from Texas is anticipating, which never will occur; that is, that the Senate will recede as to these two amendments; and if the Senate does not recede, then we would have to come back to the House.

There is the record. That deliberate assurance was given to his colleagues here on the floor of the House by the gentleman from Indiana. I will ask you how it eventuated?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I have not come to the gentleman from Michigan yet.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman has referred to some other matters.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman can have time a little later on to say what he desires to say.

Mr. CRAMTON. It would improve the discussion.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am sure whatever the gentleman would say would adorn and illumine even the speech made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] this morning on the floor of the House.

When this matter was up here before I expressed some surprise at the attitude of the gentleman from Michigan upon this question. It seemed to me he manifested some considerable irritation that there should even be a proposal for the appropriation of a sufficient sum for a real effort to try to enforce the prohibition laws of the country, and I was particularly surprised at these vehement protests upon the part of the gentleman from Michigan, because I had known he had been recognized here for a long time as a man who was supposed to be in favor of prohibition and its enforcement. In his zeal to manifest his impatience the gentleman used this language, quoting from page 2553 of the RECORD:

It could well have been termed a bill to eradicate the recent wet splash on the political records of dry Domocrats; or, secondly, to restore Bishop Cannon to the good graces of the southern Democracy; or, third, to condemn Secretary Mellon; or, fourth, to repudiate the administration of President Coolidge and embarrass the administration of President-elect Hoover.

Then on the same page of the RECORD he says:

Oh, if Bishop Cannon wants to single out his particular Democratic leaders, he is welcome; if Scott McBride wants to do so, he can do so.

A little further on he says:

Our Democratic friends would have you think that all the dry leadership of the country is clamoring for this amendment. It is only those excitable bishops of Virginia and these excitable Democrats who are insisting on it.

I am not surprised that the attention of that great bishop of Virginia was attracted to that criticism upon the part of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], and displaying his usual courage—although I do not always agree with him in his political positions—he made this statement in an address delivered a short time after this incident occurred:

In order to meet every possible contingency and to eliminate all possibility of lack of adequate enforcement because of needed funds, the appropriation is proposed to be made subject absolutely to the discretion of the President of the United States, thus placing in his hands whatever funds he may find necessary to carry on the present enforcement program until the proposed survey has been made, and also to give him funds with which to put into effect any additional program which he may develop.

I want you to listen to this, because the old bishop evidently got a little bit heated in this part of his reply to the charges of the gentleman from Michigan here upon the floor:

I shall not presume to sit in judgment upon any man who declares that he does not believe that the proposed appropriation can be used to secure more efficient law enforcement, but I flatly repudiate any suggestion or intimation that in advocating the proposed appropriation I am animated by any purpose except the better enforcement of the prohibition law, and I denounce as unworthy and slanderous any statement that I have been animated by any hostility to Secretary Mellon or by any desire to force the hand of President-elect Hoover.

I think Bishop Cannon was entirely justified and within his rights when he made that dignified retort to the remarks made by his quondam friend here upon the floor of this House in the debate upon this question.

Now, what has happened, gentlemen? And here is the main thing involved in this question, and the main purpose for which I rose: What has happened with reference to the assurances given to us that this House would have an opportunity to pass upon these very important questions of governmental policy? Have those assurances been carried out in good faith, or have they been absolutely and totally evaded? I assert that in our dealings with our colleagues upon the floor of this House we ought to have the right to rely upon the solemn assurances given to us by gentlemen in positions of responsibility as servants of this House. [Applause.]

Those assurances have not been carried into effect. Now, what is the explanation of it? I know that when these gentlemen come to reply to these remarks they will undertake to extenuate the situation by some sort of specious explanation, but they can not do it to the extent of evading their responsibility. The real reason why you have not brought that bill back here upon the floor of this House, and the real reason why you are in practical contempt of this House and its right to exercise its judgment upon that question, is that you are afraid to submit it to the solemn judgment of the Representatives on both sides of the floor. [Applause.] You want to evade any possible embarrassment to which you might probably subject some Members on the Republican side. Otherwise I see no reason why it should not have been brought back. If you were in a position logically to oppose it, if you had facts and arguments by which you could really convince the majority of this House that the appropriation was excessive or that it had not been prudently considered by the Budget and a recommendation made as to its allocation, and if you had been fortified with that character of opposition you undoubtedly would have brought it back, as you do upon other controverted questions in difference between the two Houses, but you have deliberately avoided doing so.

What sort of subterfuge have you resorted to? I asked the gentleman from Michigan here upon the floor of the House the other day if he did not know that it had been agreed upon the part of the majority conferees that they would abandon this bill entirely before they would bring it back and submit these questions to the House and that in that abandonment they would carry the items in the then pending bill in the last bill which is now reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, I got no satisfactory answer out of the gentleman, but I had rather definite assurances at that time from what I regarded as reliable authority that that was exactly what was going to be done, and that is exactly what has been done. Now, what is the effect of it, gentlemen? It seems to me that you two gentlemen and those who are confederating with you in this enterprise have very little confidence in either the character or integrity of the Senate of the United States. Are you so simple as to believe that when you carry this highly controversial question back to the Senate of the United States that those 57 Senators who supported those amendments are going to lie down and make no further effort to insist upon their views?

Do you think they are so invertebrate that they will surrender their convictions upon this question; or have you made some sort of private arrangement by which you may be assured that the question will not again be in a position where it will have to be brought back to the House? Such rumors are afloat. But the practical effect of the action of these conferees has been to deny to the membership of this House a substantive parliamentary right which this House had a reasonable right to expect would be given them to express themselves upon this matter.

My friend the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], I am sure, will have some remarks to make with reference to the monkey business that went on in the committee with reference to this question. [Laughter.] He will explain to you why the minority members of the committee have never had an opportunity to examine Mr. Mellon or any of his subordinates, including Mr. Billard, after these new estimates were sent up, or to examine the director of any of these agencies. There was no opportunity, as is ordinarily the case, to have hearings upon this question. But what do they do, these canny gentlemen who know so well how to maneuver and manipulate the machinery of their activities as to carry out their will alone and not give the rest of us an opportunity to do what ordinarily we would have the right to do? They have waited and sent the bill to the Printing Office and had it printed; and then, this morning, I believe it was, was it not, Mr. WOOD, that you got these new estimates? The gentleman can answer in his own time. This morning, I believe it was, they sent up these summarized estimates as to the amount they can actually use advantageously in the enforcement of our prohibition laws. There is another short cut they are taking on us.

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to the gentleman that the bill went to the Printing Office on Monday night, and the estimates came up Tuesday.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, yes; but I think the gentleman will confirm what I said that after the estimates were arrived at by the Treasury, the gentleman from Tennessee and his associates upon the committee had absolutely no opportunity to cross-examine those making the estimates or to get any further information.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And we will be compelled to rely entirely upon their naked judgment as stated in figures and not in facts.

Mr. BYRNS. That is correct.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is the gentleman with me or against me? [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHAFER. I want to obtain some information. Did not the gentlemen of the minority have an opportunity to examine and cross-examine the various representatives of Mr. Mellon's department when considering the original proposition, prior to its being reported to the House in the first instance?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I can not answer that question definitely, but I think I am safe in saying that as far as the original hearing went it was orderly, not in conflict with the ordinary procedure in the committee, and I assume the members of the minority did have an opportunity upon that occasion to examine them; but my friend overlooks the fact that this real trouble for the Republican Party here in the House had not arisen at that time.

Mr. SCHAFER. My mind is open on the proposition which the gentleman is discussing.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope it is open and receptive.

Mr. SCHAFER. Why did not the minority gentlemen of the committee submit minority views when the original bill was reported out, if there was such an urgent necessity for this $24,000,000, and make a strong fight for it on the floor of the House under the rules?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is entirely beside the controversy I am discussing now.

Mr. BYRNS. I want to say this to the gentleman from Wisconsin, since he mentions the minority members of the committee. Never in my experience, and I have been on the Committee on Appropriations for a great many years, have I known of minority views being submitted from the Committee on Appropriations. The bill is always brought to the House. It is not like the legislative committees where minority views are submitted. In cases of differences over appropriations, the matters are brought to the floor of the House and fought out on amendments.

Mr. SCHAFER. If this question is as important as the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle thinks it is, would there not have been sufficient justification to have submitted minority views in behalf of the $24,000,000?

Mr. BYRNS. I just stated to the gentleman that in the case of the Committee on Appropriations I never knew in all my life of minority views being submitted.

Mr. SCHAFER. Was there anything to prevent that submission?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I was wondering on which side of the aisle is the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER]. He first sits on one side and then the other.

Mr. SCHAFER. I will say to the gentleman that, since the gentleman from Texas supported Gov. Al Smith in the last campaign, you do not see me sitting on his side of the aisle very often. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. And I am not surprised.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield further. Gentlemen, I have about concluded all that I have to say on the subject. It might not impress you as being of any importance, but here is the thing that strikes me as being a matter of considerable importance to this House.

What is the real philosophy lying behind the parliamentary theory of the appointment of conferees on the part of this body and the body at the other end of the Capitol? Is it for the purpose of creating breaches between the two Houses? Is it for the purpose of further accentuating differences of opinion that may exist between the two bodies, or is it, fundamentally, for the purpose of creating a joint instrumentality by which, if possible, the conflicting views of the two Houses may be accommodated, settled, and reconciled? What is the theory upon which the conferees are appointed? I assert that in the interest of orderly, parliamentary government that they should pursue that course under all circumstances, which would make for agreement and not arbitrarily to exert their temporary power to deprive the membership of this House of an opportunity to express itself on questions of public interest.

We had a most delightful and illuminating address delivered here this morning by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] upon the philosophy of the political views of George Washington, the father of our country. I think it will go down in the annals of this House as one of the classics, a thing to be read and cherished as the years go by. [Applause.]

The theme, as I understood it, of that magnificent address was ordered and orderly government—not government by special influences in government, not by small fragments of public opinion; not government by individualistic views representing some sectional position or some partisan position—but, as I understood it, running through the whole fabric of that splendid deliverance was the silver thread of an argument admonishing Members of Congress and the people of this country to remember the spirit and essence of the Constitution as framed and dictated by its founders. And if I may appropriate a small part of the sentiment of that address and apply it to the proceedings in the House of Representatives, I say, in a more circumscribed area it is just as important for us to preserve orderly parliamentary government and precedents as it is for the people of the country, the legislative and judicial bodies, to remember orderly government as demanded by the Constitution itself.

That is the protest I am making. I think I am within my rights in expressing my own individual views that these conferees have not been justified in that contumacious attitude they have assumed.

I see the gentleman [Mr. CRAMTON] smiling; I am sure that he will undertake to say that he has been guilty of no contumacy; I am sure he will say that this is not an unusual thing upon the part of conferees. I insist that it is an unusual thing. He can not gainsay it, and I think he will look serious when I say this: You will never be justified in breaking a solemn promise to your associates on the floor of the House. I remind the gentlemen that they are now and hereafter merely the servants and not the masters of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen and ladies of the committee, whatever else I do I am not going to borrow any unusual or hard words to pronounce from the Senate debates. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Alabama has built up his man of straw. He would not yield to me because he knew there was no substance in his man of straw.

It is remarkable what a change one election can make in the spirit and activity of many men, even so eloquent and so substantial as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

We have had the eighteenth amendment and the prohibition law for a number of years. The gentleman from Alabama in all that time has been a Member of the House, but until in the recent political campaign Bishop Cannon showed the South the way of political success and the way to be followed by Domocracy in this House if it wants to continue to rule in the South—until the election in November demonstrated these facts and until Bishop Cannon thereafter made the appeal for increased appropriations for enforcement, the gentleman from Alabama, who now prates about the appropriation of $24,000,000 unasked for, that has no program for its expenditure, never raised his voice in this House by amendment or speech for any amount greater than that asked for from year to year by the administration.

I am obliged to conclude—I may do the gentleman from Alabama an injustice—but I am obliged to conclude that the November election has had much to do with increasing the interest and zeal of the gentleman from Alabama. [Laughter and applause.]

Why, Bishop Cannon came into his own in that election. Whatever I may have said about Bishop Cannon the other day, I never called him a bigot or a hypocrite, and he was before the election called both of those names by Democrats of his own State and of the State of the gentleman from Alabama. And if I am to be criticized because of the very mild allusions to which the gentleman from Alabama referred, then what shall be said of a distinguished citizen of Virginia who occupies a position such that under the parliamentary rules of this body I am not permitted to refer to him directly, because of what he said about Bishop Cannon in the campaign of last fall?

Let us now look for a moment at the gentleman's man of straw. The gentleman from Alabama has the capacity to originate these ideas himself, without taking them from the debate from another body, but I read in the proceedings of another body the charge stated repeatedly that the House conferees were "unwilling to keep faith with their own House, and, in the face of a promise five times made, refuse to carry the bill back for a yea-and-nay vote," and so forth.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, I will say to the gentleman that I never read that. I disclaim being influenced by reading those things.

Mr. CRAMTON. I felt it was only just to the gentleman from Alabama that he be given opportunity to clear himself of any such accusations, so I yielded to him, although he declined that courtesy to me. Such is the charge, that a promise was made by the House conferees on the deficiency appropriation bill, and was not kept. How ridiculous! The gentleman from Alabama and every Member here knows that on the 29th of January the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] made a request for unanimous consent to send the first deficiency appropriation bill to conference, and when that unanimous-consent request was pending certain gentlemen asked him whether he would do this or that. Whatever he said, and I contend that there were no definite promises in what he said, and certainly no promises from me, though I afterward became one of the conferees, and the charge I have just quoted from the debate in another body included me as one of the conferees, the unanimous-consent request was objected to on the Democratic side of the aisle, and the bill did not go to conference. Even if a promise had been made in consideration of unanimous consent to send the bill to conference, the consent was denied and the promise was not availed of. Why, the ridiculousness of parading around here and hollering about a promise alleged to have been made in order to get unanimous consent which was refused! So, on the 31st of January, a rule was brought in, and under that rule the bill was sent to conference, and there was not then a word of any promise to bring the bill back for a vote on one special item.

What has happened? The conferees have been going along sawing wood. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] asked me the other day one of those categorical questions of his, he wanted to know "categorically" if I remember the word—and that is a larger word than I generally use—whether the conferees had made an agreement. At that time the conferees had not made an agreement as to what they would do with the deficiency appropriation bill. It was still under consideration; it was still under investigation. We understood that there was a possibility that estimates would come to the House, and estimates did come to the House, but at that time we did not know; and we did not know if they did come which was the better parliamentary way to handle the situation. I answered the gentleman truthfully and gave him the best information I could that there was no agreement at that time. We proceeded with our study of the situation, not always, perhaps, taking the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] into our confidence, as we would like to do; but trying each for himself to figure out what we ought to do, and so the thing has come along until now this bill is reported and we are about to give the House an opportunity to express itself as to these estimates for money submitted in a regular way.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], as I understand, is particularly wrathy that the House has never had a chance for a direct vote on the $24,000,000 proposition. As a matter of fact, that vote of 241 to 141 was a direct vote on the $24,000,000 amendment. The men who voted knew that they were voting, not on the previous question, but on the $24,000,000 amendment, and they rejected it; but the gentleman wants more opportunity to vote, claiming that was not a direct vote. The only trouble with the gentleman from Alabama is that he does not take me seriously enough.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is pretty difficult ever to take the gentleman seriously.

Mr. CRAMTON. And I hope that will be in the RECORD. I explained to the gentleman just how to do this if he wanted a direct vote. On pages 2427 and 2428 of the RECORD of January 29, 1929, when this matter was up the first time, I said:

> Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I think the RECORD ought to show distinctly that which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] know full well—

And I might well have said, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], for of course he would know it full well, that all they have to do to get an expression from the House is to permit this consent to be granted, let the bill be sent to conference, and then, before the conferees are appointed, make such motion as they desire to instruct the conferees, and upon that they can have a debate; and they can have a roll-call vote; and that is the way to instruct the conferees. It can easily be done, and the gentlemen can get the votes they want.

But the gentleman did not see fit to follow that good advice. He took his way, and he got a roll-call vote of 240 to 141 against him.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I want to present a copy of some resolutions passed by the directors of the Independent Oil & Gas Association of Oklahoma at a meeting held in Okmulgee, Okla., February 14, 1929. The directors of this association are familiar with every detail of the oil industry. They have been engaged in the oil business for years and have made a success. They are men of high character and sound judgment, and their findings and recommendations merit and, I am sure, will receive the careful study of every member of the committee and of Congress. Oil is one of the leading industries of my State and of the Nation, and I am interested in giving my best thought and attention. The facts are fully set forth in the resolution. It is urged that a tariff of not less than $1 per barrel be imposed on crude oil imported into this country. I want to submit these resolutions for the RECORD and for the consideration of the committee.

I am also submitting a letter from the Department of Commerce inclosing:

(a) Figures showing exports of petroleum and products, giving the amount both as to quantity and value with reference to all countries without the United States for the calendar years 1927 and 1928.

(b) Petroleum and products, showing both quantity and value, imported into the United States for the calendar years 1927 and 1928.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Resolution passed by the board of directors of the Independent Oil Association of Oklahoma at a meeting held at Okmulgee, Okla., February 14, 1929

Whereas the American petroleum industry is the greatest industry, the labor and capital of which has been forced to compete with a raw product imported into this country without a protective tariff; and

Whereas the crude oil brought into the United States without a tariff is produced by means of cheap labor and with steel and other materials which can be secured in foreign countries at a lower price than in the United States because of the tariff provided for the protection of the steel industry and similar industries; and

Whereas the oil imported is produced in foreign countries close to water transportation and is moved into the United States at transportation rates much lower than the rates paid upon oil produced in the interior of the United States and transported to tidewater refining points by railroads and pipe lines; and

Whereas the great quantities of crude oil imported into the United States in past years has made it necessary to restrict production and retard development of natural resources, thus curtailing the employment of labor and resulting in much distress among the workers in petroleum districts and destroying home industry; and

Whereas the restriction and curtailment of oil production in the United States has also affected the commercial situation in many States in the Union, resulting in a restricted market for the produce of American farms in the principal centers of the various petroleum fields where thousands of oil workers are now idle; and

Whereas at the present time approximately a quarter of a million barrels of crude oil is being imported into this country each day and run through the stills of United States refineries, while a similar or larger amount of oil already developed in the United States is being run to storage or held in the fields under restriction and proration with direct loss to the producer, landowner, and oil worker in restricted and prorated areas; and

Whereas because of the small gasoline content of the crude oil imported into the United States it is necessary to mix the same with our American high-grade crude oil to obtain the best results, and for this reason there can be no fear of a tariff augmenting the building of refineries in South America and other oil-producing countries and exporting to Europe and other foreign countries in competition with American refineries, as the United States is the largest producer of high-grade crude oil and will always be the leading influence in gasoline and other high volatile oil product exports; and

Whereas the record for the past years indicate that the price of crude oil, whether it be cheap imported foreign crude or high-gravity oils produced in this country, has little effect on the price of retail gasoline and lubricating oils in the United States; because the price of gasoline is an artificial one, quoted either by agreement or manipulation on the part of the major producing and marketing concerns in the United States, while the retail price of high-grade lubricants remains approximately the same regardless of the crude oil market; and

Whereas the reports of the United States Bureau of Mines, Department of Commerce, indicate that under a full-time capacity operation of coal mines in the United States the gross output of coal would be approximately 1,000,000,000 tons per year, but the said reports further indicate, that because of a lax market condition and demand that the mine output for the year 1928 was approximately 570,000,000 tons; this reduction of coal output beginning apparently in the year 1918, the peak of domestic coal output and continuing to the present time, the decline in production being coincident to the increased imports of Mexican and South American fuel oils, resulting for the past year of 1928 alone, in the falling off of 20,000,000 tons of coal in comparison with the year 1927; and

Whereas the crude-oil production of the United States in the year 1928, according to the Department of Commerce, was 900,000,000 barrels of which 16,000,000 barrels only were run to storage, indicating that if 80,000,000 barrels of imported crude had been shut out by a tariff the United States would have had to draw upon stocks for 64,000,000 barrels of crude in the year 1928 or else produce additional crude to meet the demand, thereby stabilizing the petroleum industry. Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Independent Oil Association of Oklahoma call upon the Congress of the United States to enact legislation imposing a protective tariff of not less than $1 per barrel on crude oil imported into this country to relieve a condition of demoralization, depression, and chaos in the petroleum industry caused by the importation of tariff-free crude oil into the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President and Vice President of the United States, the President elect and the Vice President elect, members of the Finance Committee of the Senate, members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and members of the congressional delegation of the State of Oklahoma.

J. G. LYONS,
J. J. CALLAHAN,
M. C. FRENCH,
R. D. PINE,
T. T. BLAKELY,
Committee.

INDEPENDENT OIL ASSOCIATION OF OKLAHOMA,
C. I. O'NEILL, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE,
Washington, February 8, 1929.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Please refer to our letter of January 17 on the subject of domestic imports and exports of petroleum products. At the time the above letter was written we had complete figures only for the first 11 months of the year 1928. It is thought, therefore, that you will perhaps be interested in the attached sheets from our Monthly Summary of Foreign Commerce which give complete figures for the past calendar year.

If we can be of further service to you, please do not hesitate to call upon us.

Sincerely yours, O. P. HOPKINS, Acting Director.

Exports of domestic merchandise, by articles and principal countries

Articles, and countries to which exported	Unit of quantity	December—				Twelve months ending December—
		1927		1928		1927		1928
		Quantity	Value	Quantity	Value	Quantity	Value	Quantity	Value
B. Petroleum and products			$35,409,494		$37,786,463		$485,903,129		$525,536,787
Petroleum, crude	Bbl [1]	1,717,307	2,956,798	1,528,968	2,105,437	15,843,405	25,944,489	18,961,362	26,786,248
Europe	Bbl	94,101	187,737	79,448	117,062	416,721	804,850	556,421	906,314
Canada	Bbl	1,412,316	2,457,891	1,335,474	1,858,548	13,036,216	21,579,333	15,431,230	22,235,296
Cuba	Bbl					526,819	1,303,291	527,956	989,715
Japan	Bbl	207,523	305,664	109,741	123,109	1,633,389	1,904,556	2,066,139	2,253,894
Other countries	Bbl	3,367	5,506	4,305	6,718	230,260	352,459	379,616	401,029
Refined oils	Bbl. [1]	8,450,761	29,927,008	8,952,352	33,303,649	115,398,860	429,663,342	126,186,841	464,899,317
Gasoline, naphtha, and other finished light products	Bbl. [1]	3,026,732	13,484,352	3,674,806	17,246,455	43,334,164	209,838,685	51,756,533	231,969,946
In bulk	Bbl. [1]	2,687,732	10,733,550	3,329,815	14,087,992	38,745,589	169,431,987	47,288,881	194,307,680
In containers	Bbl. [1]	339,000	2,750,802	344,991	3,158,463	4,588,575	40,406,698	4,467,652	37,662,266
Belgium	Bbl	60,255	209,799	112,025	534,722	1,126,085	5,130,882	1,273,745	5,272,062
Denmark	Bbl			73,338	308,023	1,099,945	4,948,112	970,271	3,976,809
France	Bbl	771,149	2,631,840	474,247	2,091,676	6,832,669	28,146,668	7,726,261	31,776,511
Germany	Bbl	79,509	392,204	170,294	793,862	1,230,997	5,657,594	1,318,250	5,404,721
Irish Free State	Bbl			6,357	29,369	172,674	960,320	170,753	618,014
Italy	Bbl	55,791	205,042	174,681	753,555	982,721	4,238,642	1,464,690	6,326,249
Netherlands	Bbl	92,229	333,639	140,485	672,471	1,674,054	7,335,574	1,884,855	8,177,818
Norway	Bbl			9,920	48,958	282,797	1,155,698	287,155	1,192,719
Portugal	Bbl	268	2,248	18,884	103,440	184,323	934,852	223,558	982,452
Spain	Bbl			48,462	221,810	984,202	3,850,754	967,001	4,186,141
Sweden	Bbl					1,232,641	5,588,749	1,561,523	6,539,448
United Kingdom	Bbl	1,003,191	4,338,404	1,139,513	4,468,418	13,690,870	63,088,679	15,640,770	60,813,838
Canada	Bbl	189,346	709,038	312,905	1,309,251	3,144,539	12,004,541	4,409,565	18,574,007
Panama	Bbl	135	867	29,283	119,851	96,548	346,286	180,143	761,434
Mexico	Bbl	24,611	114,661	18,205	59,926	364,465	1,968,598	300,430	1,536,874
Cuba	Bbl	280	1,615	59,749	239,656	488,867	1,744,592	809,224	3,009,593
Dominican Republic	Bbl	5,427	45,740	8,349	73,836	72,189	646,438	86,731	763,305
Argentina	Bbl	92,065	383,533	85,947	444,690	1,349,996	7,128,797	1,782,798	9,322,906
Brazil	Bbl	57,413	447,734	129,611	937,702	942,660	6,780,569	1,254,131	8,410,412
Uruguay	Bbl	24,524	185,271	14,225	240,236	353,355	2,817,930	405,875	3,136,142
Other South America	Bbl	2,105	21,340	3,595	31,938	153,059	970,319	264,537	1,308,735
China, Hong Kong, and Kwantung	Bbl	8,366	75,758	8,880	65,498	321,155	2,279,397	244,581	1,971,676
Japan	Bbl	34,165	243,941	3,893	20,106	356,044	2,788,653	737,723	4,780,204
Philippine Islands	Bbl	77,503	551,540	15,874	139,331	292,704	2,287,165	377,428	2,999,896
Australia	Bbl	192,165	986,943	229,097	1,415,640	2,470,403	14,624,964	2,751,815	14,202,853
New Zealand	Bbl	83,070	369,559	63,175	481,002	1,061,016	7,138,464	1,219,906	6,431,610
British South Africa	Bbl	73,539	397,976	96,443	497,147	657,976	3,686,861	931,603	4,803,829
British West Africa	Bbl	42,837	347,424	36,934	324,647	284,940	2,329,562	348,512	2,957,816
French Africa	Bbl	7,443	62,298	76,128	445,801	558,302	3,127,955	700,854	3,674,176
Morocco	Bbl	483	3,577	50,465	233,594	83,004	342,238	134,242	605,787
Portuguese Africa	Bbl	3,600	26,416	3,795	37,212	84,500	742,231	94,831	816,166
Spanish Africa	Bbl	3,876	28,340	3,001	21,770	54,991	453,525	77,283	656,930
Other countries	Bbl	41,387	369,605	57,046	81,317	649,473	4,593,076	1,155,489	5,978,813
Illuminating oil (kerosene)	Bbl. [1]	1,243,371	5,255,589	1,229,422	5,580,028	19,352,102	79,303,008	21,852,626	93,477,916
In bulk	Bbl. [1]	791,971	2,274,581	911,305	3,385,382	13,832,317	42,601,308	16,290,641	56,694,606
In containers	Bbl. [1]	451,400	2,981,008	318,117	2,194,646	5,519,785	36,701,700	5,561,985	36,783,310
Belgium	Bbl	34,810	89,483	16,272	49,415	538,588	1,391,908	296,373	867,188
Denmark	Bbl	121	1,050	1	4	517,990	1,478,831	526,492	1,545,019
France	Bbl	137,855	355,842	25,317	77,421	1,127,435	3,013,500	1,669,660	5,295,059
Germany	Bbl	17,523	46,910	357	2,100	832,922	2,221,452	838,610	2,198,944
Italy	Bbl	37,313	117,536	34	300	258,492	707,078	160,039	508,273
Netherlands	Bbl	184,244	461,308	153,100	417,963	1,757,326	4,672,015	1,599,226	4,303,208
Norway	Bbl	12	80	9,456	36,764	269,935	769,595	262,775	756,443

[1] Barrel of 42 gallons.

Exports of domestic merchandise, by articles and principal countries—Continued

Articles, and countries to which exported	Unit of quantity	December—				Twelve months ending December—
		1927		1928		1927		1928
		Quantity	Value	Quantity	Value	Quantity	Value	Quantity	Value
B. Petroleum and products—Continued.
Refined oils—Continued.
Illuminating oil (kerosene)—Continued.
Portugal	Bbl.	67,908	$144,241	16,456	$48,381	315,948	$822,415	356,192	$912,703
Spain	Bbl.	600	5,051	122	786	77,623	216,424	101,824	355,369
Sweden	Bbl.	78	455			284,978	800,262	460,700	1,371,171
United Kingdom	Bbl.	66,289	187,376	376,173	1,297,623	3,172,465	8,811,625	2,944,533	8,230,792
Other Europe	Bbl.	482	3,028	24,384	69,152	353,794	1,174,499	380,398	997,698
Canada	Bbl.	8,970	28,828	6,879	21,345	128,003	473,802	150,058	600,788
Central America	Bbl.	3,101	21,397	2,111	14,565	78,412	324,909	45,142	293,504
West Indies and Bermudas	Bbl.	12,357	92,605	12,673	94,200	159,191	1,167,537	178,769	1,319,259
Argentina	Bbl.	5,479	50,564	2,510	18,101	336,200	2,001,396	189,773	1,352,178
Brazil	Bbl.	60,409	386,316	65,818	464,142	696,843	4,521,214	649,969	4,225,763
Uruguay	Bbl.	6,968	46,668	7,973	66,006	225,410	1,618,718	180,732	1,313,730
British India	Bbl.	11,216	75,027	59,903	143,396	1,360,741	3,949,060	474,827	1,488,841
British Malaya	Bbl.	70,896	220,731			153,404	528,151	12,391	79,410
China, Hong Kong, and Kwantung	Bbl.	115,189	653,606	207,114	1,261,027	2,618,322	14,951,599	4,769,165	28,360,856
Netherland East Indies	Bbl.	14,094	88,494	7,412	49,108	186,763	1,175,163	174,162	1,107,272
French Indo-China	Bbl.			238	1,800	54,683	352,101	75,763	516,515
Japan	Bbl.	207,508	908,443	37,727	239,461	1,608,997	8,012,531	2,371,610	8,090,970
Philippine Islands	Bbl.	12,798	143,915	16,225	105,763	197,460	1,312,639	360,405	2,286,871
Australia	Bbl.	56,866	383,994	65,534	389,170	599,604	4,069,649	998,344	5,600,594
New Zealand	Bbl.	9,609	52,616	3,858	26,414	114,793	763,675	176,866	915,360
British Africa	Bbl.	66,138	462,781	56,295	402,353	608,364	4,206,906	669,191	4,641,955
French Africa	Bbl.	7,248	54,686	12,523	63,200	320,211	1,263,549	283,884	1,102,246
Portuguese Africa	Bbl.	7,305	50,201	6,894	48,805	70,923	515,650	101,284	724,726
Other countries	Bbl.	19,985	122,357	36,063	171,263	326,282	2,015,154	393,469	2,115,211
Gas and fuel oil	Bbl.[1]	3,402,632	3,798,897	3,171,040	3,475,537	42,963,180	49,801,802	41,558,367	45,797,151
Belgium	Bbl.	20,015	48,746	57,158	71,463	534,410	814,897	433,935	623,666
Denmark	Bbl.					717,649	1,280,183	597,528	959,756
France	Bbl.	6	136	41,298	29,007	92,553	159,056	578,477	1,193,642
Germany	Bbl.	33,772	153,208	161,906	240,483	1,257,971	2,153,360	1,793,140	2,793,092
Italy	Bbl.					182,308	337,491	402,800	635,430
Netherlands	Bbl.	22,793	39,143	122,464	368,613	769,653	1,351,038	884,301	1,632,020
Norway	Bbl.			17,882	29,059	106,004	183,140	106,747	169,521
Spain	Bbl.	19,776	35,462			68,511	125,968	153,242	195,760
Sweden	Bbl.	12,405	21,288			236,970	448,356	146,894	246,723
United Kingdom	Bbl.	659,469	1,038,721	413,151	555,722	5,507,283	8,283,212	4,402,741	5,813,416
Canada	Bbl.	172,217	229,007	136,462	154,712	2,377,177	2,864,131	2,371,833	2,785,745
Panama	Bbl.	329,756	314,343	418,364	384,640	7,360,016	7,481,379	5,188,569	4,850,703
Mexico	Bbl.	76,141	75,828	67,480	67,875	1,042,743	1,160,091	1,218,770	1,390,882
Cuba	Bbl.	52,054	58,927	75,791	63,511	1,942,493	2,331,101	2,025,707	2,715,162
Other West Indies and Bermudas	Bbl.	626	1,999	31	497	544,549	724,701	604,037	938,970
Argentina	Bbl.	392,913	331,166	56,251	47,101	4,307,750	3,882,934	2,113,870	1,942,300
Brazil	Bbl.	202,830	265,078	60,088	99,424	1,232,879	1,383,390	887,428	1,261,978
Chile	Bbl.	639,893	527,753	740,146	593,540	4,349,940	3,880,438	6,328,693	5,265,727
Other South America	Bbl.	162,607	126,325	23,686	19,649	1,597,642	1,449,656	980,583	838,456
China, Hong Kong, and Kwantung	Bbl.	13	289	96,333	116,496	1,159,120	1,490,271	1,131,086	1,187,567
Japan	Bbl.	432,802	368,759	257,757	213,146	4,419,106	4,032,073	5,114,192	4,256,077
Philippine Islands	Bbl.	6,435	5,470	59,117	59,117	685,995	743,243	592,431	589,773
New Zealand	Bbl.	64,383	55,610	81,105	73,002	918,587	962,077	948,285	892,003
French Africa	Bbl.	38	166	193	733	71,996	105,676	79,044	80,350
Other countries	Bbl.	92,688	101,473	284,467	287,737	1,479,875	2,173,940	2,474,034	2,568,432
Fuel or bunker oil for vessels in foreign trade (not included in Domestic Exports)	Bbl.[1]	4,263,618	5,516,633	4,234,695	4,459,354	50,050,574	72,967,245	51,124,820	59,299,940
On American vessels	Bbl.	1,909,817	2,499,386	2,255,941	2,291,293	22,205,735	31,747,310	23,268,915	26,181,998
On foreign vessels	Bbl.	2,353,801	3,017,247	1,978,754	2,168,061	27,844,839	41,219,935	27,860,905	33,117,942
Lubricating oil	Bbl.[1]	769,114	7,265,875	866,029	6,859,085	9,605,757	88,843,128	10,849,541	91,591,415
Red and pale	Bbl.[1]	513,492	4,203,032	538,527	4,175,599	5,984,138	49,367,575	6,939,071	54,444,960
Belgium	Bbl.	72,009	332,962	79,517	394,545	645,338	3,623,626	757,913	3,269,008
Denmark	Bbl.	4,656	69,631	759	12,050	112,715	850,728	107,281	772,752
France	Bbl.	44,168	285,851	115,986	587,565	792,593	4,920,799	1,008,851	6,264,239
Germany	Bbl.	68,408	400,703	73,043	355,994	777,802	3,860,413	859,190	4,595,183
Italy	Bbl.	12,818	108,021	14,342	197,504	155,777	1,500,633	263,414	2,533,511
Netherlands	Bbl.	4,324	67,289	11,346	95,082	96,266	814,768	208,474	1,246,532
Spain	Bbl.	13,624	111,492	9,726	150,866	143,738	1,486,277	54,483	834,604
Sweden	Bbl.	2,998	46,607	389	6,239	58,908	800,934	98,983	1,011,235
United Kingdom	Bbl.	140,456	812,411	77,389	438,541	1,199,515	7,039,855	1,320,965	8,228,888
Other Europe	Bbl.	9,507	140,405	6,775	107,030	107,279	1,244,194	87,589	1,332,196
Canada	Bbl.	18,779	102,742	19,122	199,796	250,945	2,384,917	303,436	2,843,791
Mexico	Bbl.	4,275	57,289	2,300	26,975	46,071	513,245	47,525	598,479
Cuba	Bbl.	6,395	66,576	4,058	68,766	59,264	694,635	47,110	593,790
Argentina	Bbl.	9,908	148,904	4,478	71,878	193,615	3,332,561	125,442	2,049,422
Brazil	Bbl.	9,408	131,593	15,626	203,956	141,938	1,752,479	149,441	1,807,542
Chile	Bbl.	3,537	56,570	2,650	41,424	36,198	556,353	37,741	555,344
Other South America	Bbl.	5,253	98,118	3,891	72,904	58,881	1,031,454	70,864	1,180,297
British India	Bbl.	12,342	175,212	16,388	164,325	300,061	2,733,796	388,632	2,874,687
China, Hong Kong, and Kwantung	Bbl.	6,485	85,897	10,607	105,962	145,230	1,416,031	254,485	2,391,118
Netherland East Indies	Bbl.	5,884	113,665	5,675	61,034	51,371	810,557	39,156	563,668
Japan	Bbl.	17,454	162,874	19,417	194,113	186,432	2,034,747	198,870	2,228,001
Philippine Islands	Bbl.	4,603	76,795	6,843	112,646	44,019	636,659	70,354	945,549
Australia	Bbl.	12,733	184,073	16,617	221,637	171,288	2,172,436	183,963	2,412,583
New Zealand	Bbl.	3,154	47,433	4,593	78,576	37,224	531,655	42,798	602,190
British Africa	Bbl.	5,492	110,650	2,360	26,642	29,426	519,330	33,116	521,387
Egypt	Bbl.	1,502	12,644	1,594	12,169	14,588	139,697	38,507	254,687
Portuguese Africa	Bbl.	733	6,011	787	5,880	10,674	101,107	14,266	153,374
Other countries	Bbl.	12,577	190,614	12,239	155,420	116,982	1,783,659	126,172	1,779,883
Black	Bbl.[1]	36,270	261,767	94,697	501,933	671,776	3,486,400	1,029,270	5,125,468
Cylinder	Bbl.[1]	219,352	2,801,076	232,805	2,181,553	2,949,843	35,989,153	2,881,200	32,020,987
Belgium	Bbl.	8,330	73,625	12,138	115,589	100,440	1,048,656	118,209	1,155,892
Denmark	Bbl.	3,229	39,163	472	6,118	21,890	302,071	12,120	146,716
France	Bbl.	13,548	170,889	41,258	338,625	335,936	3,793,905	391,272	3,808,101
Germany	Bbl.	8,671	130,905	6,724	89,184	331,720	3,824,918	438,402	4,245,278
Italy	Bbl.	15,868	192,169	15,600	125,724	196,454	2,516,008	213,086	2,455,855

[1] Barrel of 42 gallons.

Exports of domestic merchandise, by articles and principal countries—Continued

Articles, and countries to which exported	Unit of quantity	December— 1927 Quantity	December— 1927 Value	December— 1928 Quantity	December— 1928 Value	Twelve months ending December— 1927 Quantity	Twelve months ending December— 1927 Value	Twelve months ending December— 1928 Quantity	Twelve months ending December— 1928 Value
B. Petroleum and products—Continued.
Refined oils—Continued.
Cylinder—Continued.
Netherlands	Bbl.	3,255	$45,127	3,485	$39,743	76,011	$811,697	74,102	$580,208
Norway	Bbl.	1,516	24,728	105	1,249	9,918	153,662	6,367	86,270
Spain	Bbl.	4,781	50,471	1,985	25,238	51,662	592,282	31,506	330,400
Sweden	Bbl.	2,976	44,701	381	5,400	22,485	327,618	20,737	303,765
United Kingdom	Bbl.	66,042	789,147	56,031	535,593	753,754	8,162,308	551,931	6,149,119
Canada	Bbl.	3,530	36,935	33,797	66,587	107,271	1,119,907	153,706	1,360,266
Mexico	Bbl.	2,273	18,470	1,415	16,158	22,240	243,756	34,581	287,355
Cuba	Bbl.	2,432	27,030	3,520	45,799	30,388	387,210	29,899	377,261
Argentina	Bbl.	18,952	227,012	5,992	80,968	110,194	1,411,216	85,965	1,099,755
Brazil	Bbl.	2,634	32,388	6,245	102,145	55,794	653,472	92,828	919,977
Chile	Bbl.	4,682	69,357	1,001	15,314	17,679	271,428	19,506	277,526
Other South America	Bbl.	3,804	61,887	5,355	44,344	40,139	658,206	40,106	605,812
British India	Bbl.	9,408	142,850	3,784	45,303	67,429	876,086	43,379	529,457
China, Hong Kong, and Kwantung	Bbl.	3,872	45,233	954	10,058	23,077	249,185	17,953	163,874
Netherland East Indies	Bbl.	1,584	8,560	367	8,693	8,621	122,373	10,299	150,181
Japan	Bbl.	3,405	41,118	2,298	29,428	56,361	659,803	48,832	575,530
Philippine Islands	Bbl.	546	9,796	13	189	2,788	44,007	1,740	20,947
Australia	Bbl.	5,853	92,762	10,278	121,880	180,884	2,801,704	143,927	1,933,997
New Zealand	Bbl.	1,622	26,867	626	10,978	33,995	550,178	30,676	502,348
British Africa	Bbl.	6,973	121,290	6,833	118,986	85,215	1,379,177	74,850	1,289,568
Egypt	Bbl.	2,892	44,468	2,180	34,281	46,664	593,792	43,082	408,371
Portuguese Africa	Bbl.	4,438	51,456	2,234	37,540	29,258	431,133	29,349	473,623
Other countries	Bbl.	12,236	182,672	7,734	110,439	131,576	2,003,395	122,790	1,783,535
Mineral spirits (substitute for turpentine)	Gal.	183,004	43,667	188,731	45,254	2,648,274	550,246	2,352,727	508,729
Insulating or transformer oils	Gal.	162,250	46,500	243,203	53,348	2,844,976	836,467	4,232,854	1,040,246
Light lubricating oils in small packages	Gal.	29,069	32,128	32,366	43,942	540,360	490,006	544,925	513,914
Lubricating greases	Lb.	9,663,358	488,466	8,571,146	451,564	100,483,272	5,298,592	108,111,834	5,589,045
Paraffin wax	Lb.	30,668,757	1,228,506	26,600,116	1,390,179	340,422,834	15,034,424	392,648,443	16,863,258
Unrefined	Lb.	7,937,413	259,372	5,839,764	273,159	76,248,749	2,747,693	83,090,154	3,011,957
Refined	Lb.	22,731,344	969,134	20,760,352	1,117,020	264,174,085	12,286,731	309,558,289	13,851,301
Belgium	Lb.	1,514,024	64,438	1,632,599	80,963	10,695,036	516,678	13,003,970	585,276
Germany	Lb.	755,869	36,608	954,563	45,920	14,710,805	640,293	15,314,514	664,688
Irish Free State	Lb.	353,453	8,644	662,710	33,347	6,604,898	232,588	9,177,431	340,537
Italy	Lb.	4,241,342	191,937	3,302,593	163,169	41,424,161	2,072,697	52,225,625	2,139,784
Netherlands	Lb.	1,225,928	40,471	1,200,442	63,997	12,890,208	519,398	16,586,729	760,861
Spain	Lb.	1,936,840	76,927	882,510	49,200	17,891,463	886,065	13,760,097	583,932
Sweden	Lb.	1,389,330	46,379	222,083	15,624	7,644,501	299,144	7,039,515	231,905
United Kingdom	Lb.	8,463,516	271,176	6,139,058	260,494	107,330,081	4,061,783	101,380,469	3,723,689
Other Europe	Lb.	437,443	20,919	1,172,430	56,482	5,639,069	275,721	8,324,589	369,740
Central America	Lb.	494,735	22,723	322,158	18,664	7,140,007	366,812	7,294,538	368,589
Mexico	Lb.	1,264,661	51,260	710,467	43,283	18,439,412	793,078	17,232,456	781,006
Cuba	Lb.	181,736	9,133	481,270	33,011	3,274,841	181,997	3,202,984	176,865
Argentina	Lb.	1,151,411	47,403	463,153	24,714	14,273,764	641,502	13,097,345	550,059
Chile	Lb.	1,166,999	34,848	55,199	2,920	7,813,935	311,741	22,647,836	814,378
Colombia	Lb.	587,709	24,561	1,109,669	69,988	7,654,712	365,525	10,956,362	555,444
Peru	Lb.	493,312	20,275	393,364	22,243	4,808,501	206,370	3,674,483	163,749
Other South America	Lb.	598,425	26,731	948,885	57,069	10,553,275	514,373	10,108,670	521,319
China, Hong Kong, and Kwantung	Lb.	2,688,559	131,261	2,194,483	129,794	19,123,561	935,286	36,736,678	1,991,230
Japan	Lb.	1,013,392	56,524	1,971,409	123,251	6,701,550	390,785	14,154,047	768,368
Philippine Islands	Lb.	6,951	1,063	61,000	3,350	1,081,380	91,400	685,082	44,738
British South Africa	Lb.	118,615	6,235	869,190	46,337	3,168,756	174,104	3,903,343	190,982
Other countries	Lb.	584,507	38,990	850,881	46,359	10,958,918	557,084	12,141,680	536,119
Petroleum asphalt	Ton.	24,871	613,989	27,516	483,884	343,778	8,325,413	442,129	9,788,501
Petroleum coke	Ton.	9,615	128,445	5,587	48,305	93,253	1,052,772	128,688	1,384,139
Petroleum residuum	Bbl.[1]	23,144	66,282	903	3,445	217,239	584,097	62,506	226,279

General imports of merchandise, by articles and principal countries

Articles, and countries from which imported	Unit of quantity	December— 1927 Quantity	December— 1927 Value	December— 1928 Quantity	December— 1928 Value	Twelve months ending December— 1927 Quantity	Twelve months ending December— 1927 Value	Twelve months ending December— 1928 Quantity	Twelve months ending December— 1928 Value
B. Petroleum and products			$9,960,386		$10,784,152		$113,434,019		$132,782,203
Crude petroleum—free	Bbl.[1]	6,209,418	7,803,786	6,807,286	6,843,517	58,382,632	78,609,117	79,766,672	90,413,284
Mexico	Bbl.	1,327,000	1,502,419	1,293,500	1,356,326	26,019,058	30,442,475	17,584,211	19,400,030
Netherland West Indies	Bbl.	1,599,979	2,236,584	1,858,319	1,375,090	10,136,248	14,228,581	24,989,387	27,309,822
Colombia	Bbl.	1,075,000	1,711,040	1,227,000	1,754,610	7,962,001	13,559,123	11,838,025	17,210,451
Peru	Bbl.	100,000	225,000			1,886,474	4,156,674	1,224,125	2,706,507
Venezuela	Bbl.	1,910,664	1,895,514	2,232,624	2,116,135	11,423,575	14,945,832	21,987,319	21,274,535
Other countries	Bbl.	196,775	233,229	195,843	241,356	955,276	1,276,432	2,143,605	2,511,939
Refined oils	Bbl.[1]	748,712	2,054,147	1,088,965	3,792,487	13,281,188	33,637,919	11,800,208	40,942,631
Topped, including fuel oil—free	Bbl.[1]	451,072	641,220	646,319	747,034	8,124,192	10,176,290	7,268,147	8,484,740
Tops and other unfinished distillates—free	Bbl.[1]			177	560	91,303	337,814	19,962	33,588
Gasoline, naphtha, and other finished light products—free	Bbl.[1]	281,932	1,342,715	420,050	2,944,782	5,002,306	22,772,734	4,297,774	31,517,538
Illuminating oil (kerosene)—free	Bbl.[1]	15,253	60,385	19,882	51,197	55,435	248,017	201,747	716,213
Lubricating oils, including paraffin oil—free	Bbl.[1]	455	9,827	2,537	48,914	7,952	103,064	12,578	190,552
Paraffin and paraffin wax—free	Lb.	1,905,702	102,453	2,138,494	148,148	20,461,774	1,186,983	24,740,996	1,426,288

[1] Barrel of 42 gallons.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentlemen from Massachusetts [Mr. STOBBS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STOBBS. Mr. Chairman, unless some definite action repealing or postponing operation of the so-called national origins provision of our immigration law is adopted in the closing days of Congress this method of determining our immigration quotas will become operative by presidential proclamation during the present year.

An unusual situation is thus presented when a provision, condemned alike by both candidates for the Presidency in the last election, may be allowed to become a law by reason of the failure of Congress to act.

The present law may present certain inconsistencies, but it has served a purpose and will continue to do so until some more equitable method can be devised.

The substitution of the so-called national-origins method is indefensible by reason of the inaccuracy of its data. We have only to refer to the language used in the report or letter written by the members of the special commission—composed of Secretaries Kellogg, Hoover, and Davis—in submitting the tabulation of data upon which the national-origins quotas are to be based, to realize the truth of this statement. They reported as follows:

> The statistical and historical information available raises grave doubts as to the full value of this compilation as a basis for the purpose contended.

Surely a very strong statement as to the ureliability of the national-origins method of determining our immigration quotas.

The reason for this is that the data is compiled very largely as a result of guess work as to the origin of people residing in this country at the time of the census of 1790, the guess work being almost entirely predicated on the supposed origin of such people because of their names. When we propose to change an existing method, whereby we are to reduce materially the quotas of some of our most desirable immigrants, we want something more than guess work as a basis for any such action.

Take the case of the immigration from the Scandinavian countries as an illustration, which I think we will all agree has proven to be one of the most desirable. Under the present act, based on the percentage of foreign born in this country as of the date of the census of 1890, there is allowed to come into this country annually from the three countries of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden 18,803 immigrants. Under the so-called national-origins provision this would be cut down to only 7,036, much less than one-half.

There would also be considerable reduction in the number of immigrants coming from Germany, the Irish Free State, and several other countries.

But the argument is made that the national-origins method will give us more of the old Anglo-American stock, to which we owe so much in the original settlement of this country. I do not wish to decry the debt we owe to our forefathers of English descent, who constituted such a large part of the early immigration into this country. As a descendant myself of the stock which contributed so much to the early growth and development of what we call our American institutions, I am very proud of my ancestry.

But we must not overlook the fact that men and women of other stock and of other national heritage likewise played their part, and a glorious one, in the establishment of a form of government and the building of institutions which have commanded the admiration of the world.

This country was not settled by people from Great Britain alone. It was settled by people of various nationalities. Side by side in the War of Independence, as in fact in every other war in which we have ever been engaged, fought men from practically every nation in Europe, all imbued with the same love of liberty, irrespective of their national origin.

Any method of determining admission into this country of the nationals of other countries which operates to discriminate against a fellow countryman of any of those who participated in the most glorious events in our history, based entirely on guesswork data, as is admitted by the committee having the matter of investigation in charge, is certainly very much to be condemned.

I sincerely trust that this Congress will in the few days remaining again postpone the operation of this so-called national-origins provision of our present immigration law until such time as the whole matter of quota basis can be more carefully considered with a view to arriving at a method which will be more just and equitable to all parties concerned. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the present Bureau of Investigation in the Department of Justice, presided over at this time by Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, and commend also the Washington manager of that department, Mr. Thomas F. Cullen. I have been very much impressed with the high character of the splendid work that they are doing.

There was a poor, unfortunate woman, you remember, who was afraid to stay in Washington. Just as soon as she learned that she could find safety in the protection of the Department of Justice agents she voluntarily got on the train in Chicago and came to Washington. She has been protected here by these agents. They arranged for her to come in here through the depot last night and there was a bunch of reporters and photographers there waiting for her. They brought her in here and took her to a hotel without one of those people knowing anything about it.

I want to show you one of the reasons why that woman was afraid to stay in Washington, her birthplace, the Nation's Capital.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not yield.

I want to read to you, under the heading of "Burlingame's cruel third-degree persecution caused innocent young Chinese student to get death sentence. Supreme Court of the United States saved student's life," an excerpt from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, volume 266, page 8, the following quoted from the decision rendered by Mr. Justice Brandeis:

> On January 31, 1919, the police department learned that three Chinamen had been murdered. Li said he had seen Wan, of New York, enter the building on January 29. Detectives started immediately for New York. On February 1 they entered Wan's room, brought him to Washington, was tried and sentenced to be hanged, and court of appeals affirmed the judgment.
>
> Wan was a native of China. He had come to the United States in 1916 as a student. Since December, 1918, his health had been bad, having Spanish influenza. He suffered continuously from a chronic stomach trouble. When detectives entered his room unannounced they found him in bed. They had no search warrant, but they made a search of his room and effects, including his bed where he lay. They requested him to return with them to Washington. He told them he was too sick.
>
> On arrival in Washington, Wan was not put formally under arrest, but he was taken to a secluded room. In the presence of three detectives (one being Burlingame), the superintendent of police, and Li, he was subjected there to questioning for five or six hours. They then took him to Dewey Hotel, and without entering his name on the hotel registry, placed him in a bedroom on an upper floor. In that room he was detained continuously for one week. Throughout the period he was sick and, most of the time, in bed. In vain Wan asked to see his brother, whom detectives were detaining in another room and subjecting to like interrogation.
>
> Wan was held in the hotel room without formal arrest, incomunicado. But he was not left alone. Every moment of the day, and of the night, at least one member of the police force was on guard inside his room. Three ordinary policemen were assigned to this duty. Each served eight hours; the shifts beginning at midnight, at 8 in the morning, and at 4 in the afternoon. Morning, afternoon, and evening, and at least on one occasion after midnight, the prisoner was visited by the superintendent of police and/or one or more of the detectives. The sole purpose of these visits was to interrogate him. Regardless of Wan's wishes and protest, his condition of health, or the hour they engaged him in conversation. He was subjected to persistent, lengthy, and repeated cross-examination. Sometimes it was subtle, sometimes severe.

And the record shows that one of his tormentors was Capt. Guy E. Burlingame, then a detective. Let me quote from it some of what it says about Burlingame. The record shows that on the eighth day these officers took Wan to the house where the murder occurred, and concerning his harassment there, one officer testified:

> Well, he sat and rolled his eyes when I asked him questions. Burlingame (another detective) said: "Answer his question," and then Wan started in Chinese language, and Burlingame said, "Here, don't speak Chinese. Answer Kelly's question." Burlingame caught him on the shoulder and said, "We don't want anything like that here." This was about 1 o'clock in the morning, and we left about 4 o'clock. Burlingame set him down in a chair.
>
> Defendant was not permitted to sleep or go back to the hotel. On the ninth day, after an all-night interrogation, I told defendant, "If you are guilty, and your brother is innocent, I want to know, for I am holding your brother just the same as I am holding you." Wan had to talk. I left details to Burlingame and Kelly.

Let me quote further from what Mr. Justice Brandeis said about it in said Supreme Court decision:

> On the eighth day the accusatory questioning took a more excruciating form. Continuously for 10 hours this sick man was led from floor to floor minutely to examine and reexamine the scene of the triple murder and every object connected with it. The places where the dead men were discovered, the revolver with which presumably the murder was committed, the bloodstains and fingerprints thereon, the bullet holes in the walls, the discharged cartridges found upon the floor, the clothes of the murdered men, the bloodstains on the floor and the stairs, a bloody handkerchief, the coat and pillow which had been found covering the dead men's faces, photographs taken by the police of the men as they lay dead, the doors and windows through which the murderer might have entered or made his escape, photostat copies of writings, by means of which it was sought to prove that Wan was implicated in a forgery. Every supposed fact ascertained by the detectives in the course of their investigation was related to him. Concerning every object, every incident detailed, he was in the presence of a stenographer plied with questions by the superintendent of police and the detectives. By these he was engaged in argument; sometimes separately, sometimes in joint attack. The process of interrogation became ever more insistent. It passed at times from inquiry into command. From 7 o'clock in the evening until 5 o'clock in the morning the questioning continued. Li had left worn out. The superintendent returned home exhausted. One detective had fallen asleep. To Wan not a moment of sleep was allowed.

On the ninth day Wan was formally arrested; interrogation was promptly resumed. Detectives, day and evening, plied their questions, arguing, urging him to confess lest his brother be deemed guilty. On the tenth day Wan was "bundled up" and again questioned at the scene for hours. On the eleventh day detectives at the station questioned Wan in the presence of a stenographer. On the twelfth day Wan signed the stenographer's report in the jail. On the thirteenth day, for the first time, Wan was visited by the jail physician.

He found Wan lying in a bunk in the cell, very weak, very much exhausted, very much emaciated, complaining of intense pain, vomiting if he attempted to take food, and he was confined in his bed for a month thereafter. Being questioned by the court, "Would he be liable to sign a confession that would lead him to the gallows in that condition," the physician replied, "I think he would, if he wanted to be left alone; he would do anything to have the torture stopped."

That is from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, if you please, and the Supreme Court of the United States held that Burlingame and these other members of the police department in Washington violated the law in this mistreating of Wan; and by his timely decision Mr. Justice Brandeis saved the life of this poor Chinese student and reversed the case, and when it came up again Wan was acquitted by the verdict of a jury of his peers.

Most of the high police officials in Washington are antiquated, helpless fossils, with one-track minds. These three Chinamen had been murdered. These policemen realized that they must find a culprit. Li told them Wan, of New York, had once visited this Chinese mission. "Presto change," they just knew it could not have been anyone else but Wan, of New York. They captured poor Wan sick in bed in his home in New York. For 12 days and nights they tortured him. And they would have hanged him if the Supreme Court of the United States had not stopped them.

And it is just this local police situation here that has forced Mrs. Helen F. Blalock to be afraid to subject herself to their third-degree methods, their inquisition, their torture. I am glad that we have a Department of Justice as a part of the Government of the United States.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to tell you a joke on the gentleman from Wisconsin. Do you know why he interrupts me so much in this Burlingame matter? I will tell you. Burlingame used to have a man working in the Capitol, until recently, who reported to him daily the actions of certain Congressmen. Every turn I took he reported it to Burlingame and every turn that the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] took he reported it to Burlingame. He was Burlingame's information man and he found out that the gentleman from Wisconsin interrupted me frequently. He knew I was after him, Burlingame, and he thought it would be nice to cultivate the acquaintance of my friend from Wisconsin and he sent this information man to my friend from Wisconsin and got him to go down on a raid with Burlingame one night, had him go down and see him raid a "nigger joint" where there were a lot of poor "niggers." He showed him how he cuffed them around and showed him he was the big chief, and he had the big chief from Wisconsin there watching and looking on.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. I want to state that I have met Captain Burlingame twice in my whole life.

Mr. BLANTON. Did not the gentleman go on a raid with him?

Mr. SCHAFER. There was one time that I went down to make a personal investigation of the second precinct. The other time is when I met him while attending a hearing of the GIBSON committee in the House Office Building.

Mr. BLANTON. Did not the gentleman make a raid with him on a bunch of niggers?

Mr. SCHAFER. I saw Captain Burlingame that evening make a hundred or more arrests in about four hours. I did not see him punch any negroes, though.

Mr. BLANTON. And presto, change, he made a confederate and a companion of our friend from Wisconsin and uses him here in the House to try to hamstring me when I am here trying to bring about better conditions in your Nation's Capital.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. I will say to the gentleman, that Captain Burlingame has never asked me to say a word in the House and he has never contacted me directly or indirectly on any of the matters which the gentleman is bringing out.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; he does not have to do it. He takes the gentleman on a nigger raid and has him here to represent him when these questions come up.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I can not yield further.

Mr. SCHAFER. Just one more question.

Mr. BLANTON. No; and I want my own time. I am not falling out with the gentleman from Wisconsin. I think he is a very valuable man here. He started over here on this side of the aisle, and then he crossed over, and then he crossed back, and now he has crossed over again. If he would stay in one place——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. He starts out wet against the drys, and then, when the country offers him a wet candidate, than whom there is no wetter, he quits that wet candidate.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. SCHAFER. The candidate of your party, who the gentleman supported, was not a wet candidate; he was pussyfooting on the wet question.

Mr. BLANTON. And that is the reason I supported him against Hoover, who is just as wet.

Mr. SCHAFER. And that is one reason why I opposed Governor Smith, because he was pussyfooting on the wet and dry question.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman from Wisconsin supported Hoover, I guess, because he thought Hoover was wetter—is that the idea?

Mr. SCHAFER. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Answer me on that.

Mr. SCHAFER. I supported Mr. Hoover because of political and economic questions of vital interest to the people of Wisconsin and the Nation, and because of the exceptional ability and character of Mr. Hoover as compared to the other candidate. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. I can not yield further. I want to say this, that the beer-drinking people of Milwaukee wanted Smith; the drinking people of Wisconsin wanted Smith.

Mr. SCHAFER. Is that why the gentleman supported him?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman's idea was that they wanted Smith; but in the race that he expects to make in Wisconsin next year the gentleman from Wisconsin thought possibly it would be good politics to oppose the politics of the man against whom he is going to run, and, presto, change, we find him going back on the man who stood for Milwaukee beer with a content of 4 per cent of alcohol, something that the gentleman from Wisconsin had fought for here for days and weeks and months and years.

Mr. SCHAFER. If the gentleman will yield I will state that if I run for the Senate against the man in question, it will not be on the prohibition question, but on many political and economic questions.

Mr. BLANTON. I will say this to my friend from Wisconsin—and I do like him "with all his faults I love him still"—if he will come down to my district in Texas I will ask every bootlegger there to give him everything to drink there is in my district, and there is plenty of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman from Wisconsin does not drink intoxicating liquors, so he can not accept the gentleman's kind hospitality. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER. I have asked for two minutes because I want to propound a question to the gentleman who has just taken his seat. During the course of his debate the gentleman from Texas indicated that Mrs. Blalock, who we have read so much about in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and in the Washington newspapers, voluntarily got on the train and came to Washington to appear as a witness in the trial board proceedings. The Washington newspapers, everyone of them, contain information that the Department of Justice located Mrs. Blalock through tracing bank checks. Now, I rise to ask the gentleman which is correct. Did Mrs. Blalock voluntarily come to Washington, or did the Department of Justice locate her by tracing checks going through her bank?

Mr. BLANTON. I will say to the gentleman that his friend, Burlingame, and the 1,400 policemen of Washington did not locate her, but the Department of Justice did locate her, and they can locate anybody. But they did not bring her here. They let her alone. They located her and then let her alone and she came here voluntarily.

Mr. SCHAFER. And if it had not been for the activities of the Department of Justice, Mrs. Blalock would not be here, the insinuation of the gentleman from Texas in his debate to the contrary notwithstanding. I would now like to ask one further question.

Mr. BLANTON. The agents of the Department of Justice did not make themselves known to her until she had already bought her ticket and got on the train.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman spoke about the case of a Chinaman and mentioned Burlingame. Is this the same Burlingame who was a member of the trial board that tried Mr. Staples, a Metropolitan policeman. I recollect that the proceedings of the trial board indicate that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] represented this policeman, Mr. Staples, as counsel, and when the trial board asked whether the board as constituted met with the approval of the defense, the gentleman from Texas in regard to Mr. Burlingame, particularly, said "Captain Burlingame is absolutely satisfactory." Is this the same gentleman?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman's idea of the matter is entirely incorrect. He was hand-picked beforehand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the gentleman from Tennessee, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN].

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, to-day I introduced the following resolution:

> Whereas the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as now constituted does not present a fair, correct, or complete picture of the proceedings of the Congress: Therefore be it
>
> Resolved, That a commission of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives be appointed, to be chosen by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, respectively, to conduct an inquiry into the feasibility and advisability of permitting the inclusion in the RECORD of photographs, cartoons, halftones, rotogravures, portraits, comic strips, and similar material in so far as they contribute to a more accurate portrayal of the development of society and civilization in the United States, and to a more faithful recording of the activities of the Congress of the United States; and that the sum of $50,000 be appropriated for the employment of a committee of competent and experienced journalists and for the payment of other expenses incident to the aforesaid study, said commission to report its findings to Congress not later than January 1, 1930.

Now, gentlemen, I was induced to present this resolution owing to the fact that we are following a one-track custom in printing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I now show you a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. You are doubtless all familiar with it. [Laughter.] You have seen it many times. You notice its appearance is dull and dingy. It is just like a man who speaks to you in a monotone without any emphasis or without accenting any particular words or phrases. It grows exceedingly tiresome to you. So it is that the RECORD for 56 years has been printed in the same old way with the same old unreadable type, without a descriptive heading, without a picture or an illustration, although I will say that about eight years ago Congress, yielding slightly to modernism, did permit the printing of the picture of a cow in the RECORD, and I am informed that this particular RECORD with the picture of the cow in it has been requested thousands and thousands of times since its printing, causing an enormous increase in its circulation.

Now, I think, furthermore, that my resolution is designed to fill a long-felt need. I see no reason why it should not be adopted and I am informed there is a great deal of sentiment for it.

It is important for many reasons. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is the great diary of the elected Representatives of the American people, but it is more than that. It is our great national journal, and as now made up it does not discharge that responsibility in substance or in style.

I was in Philadelphia a few months ago at a convention, and I spoke at it; and after the convention had adjourned a gentleman came to me and said, "I am a great reader of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; in fact, I am going to confide in you that I read no paper other than the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I would not read a daily paper. I believe there is more information in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD than in any daily paper published in the United States."

Well, this being the fact, we ought to make the RECORD attractive. We ought to make it so good that we will have a larger circulation and more interested readers. The RECORD should reflect the manners, good or bad, the customs, the habits, the invention, the art, the thought, the opinions, and the ups-and-downs of American life and of our current civilization.

To the historians of the future years it should furnish material by which he can reconstruct the great American scene and all the figures who play their parts thereon—the Presidents, Members of Congress, philosophers, poets, artists, prize fighters, and athletes. There should be room for a Babe Ruth as well as Speaker LONGWORTH, for Lindbergh, as well as for President Coolidge. We do not know how history will judge us or where the hand of the historian will place us. Let us not have pride in ourselves and confine the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to a mere museum of our oratorical achievements; let us have pride in our country and its men of achievement.

It is obvious that speeches alone do not count for much. Yet that is all the RECORD contains now. It is my belief that the rules governing the inclusion of material in the RECORD should be revised to sanction insertion of anything that helps to give a picture of American life to-day. This may, conceivably, mean cartoons, pictures, rotogravures, comic strips, headlines, editorials, and even a sporting page—in fact, all the adornments of the modern, entertaining, and historical newspaper.

I admit the proposed change is revolutionary. But I also suggest that there is more wit and wisdom in many a cartoon without words, or even in a comic strip, than in some congressional orations I have read in the RECORD.

A cartoon or photograph has a more direct appeal than a written speech. Only a few weeks ago I was prevented by Majority Leader TILSON from inserting a cartoon by H. M. Talburt, Scripps-Howard cartoonist, in which he depicted the horror of the Michigan law under which a mother of 10 children may be sent to prison for life for a fourth minor offense against the dry laws.

No words by me or anybody else could convince our ardent drys from Michigan that this statute should be changed. But it is possible a vivid cartoon or picture would soften their hearts and enlighten their ideas on legislation. Such an achievement would be worth the effort, even if it requires a revolution in the printing of the RECORD.

Another cartoon that I would like to have had inserted in the RECORD appeared in the New York World about 10 days ago. It depicted the leader of the "immortals" in one of the Houses of Congress. This leader of the "immortals" was not sitting in his chair, but was standing on it. It depicted him so small that he was scarcely discernable by the Presiding Officer of the Senate. That would have been a wonderfully instructive cartoon for the readers of the RECORD, and, after all, these things would lead us to hark back to the words of the famous Scotch poet who said:

> Oh wad some power the giftie gie us
> To see oursel's as others see us!

Oh, that we did not take ourselves so seriously! If we permitted the introduction of these interesting cartoons, pictures, and cuts in the RECORD, I am sure that we would inculcate a greater desire upon the part of the American people to read and keep in touch with what we are doing here. I say this in all seriousness. This resolution should be passed. Not one of you men would think of reading a paper to-day that was published in exactly the same style it was published 56 years ago. It is said that if we do not make progress we will retrograde. We are certainly retrograding in publishing such a RECORD as we now publish. You can not even read it without the aid of a magnifying glass. Let us publish the RECORD as it should be published, as an up-to-date, alert, live paper in readable type giving a great cross-section of the American people as represented in the American Congress. If we decline to do this, then let us suspend entirely the publication of this obsolete sheet that is so antediluvian and prehistoric in its make-up as to make a printer's devil laugh. Let us get away from our staid and set conservatism and be alert, with our ear to the ground, alive to the progress of society and civilization. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM].

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, under the procedure by which we consider appropriation bills liberal time is always allotted for general debate. Sometimes there is a bit of difficulty in associating or contacting our remarks under general debate with the appropriation bill itself. The only way in which I am able to do that this afternoon is by the statement that appropriations mean taxation, and taxation of a local sort is the question that I desire to discuss. I venture to trespass upon the patience of the House for this limited time, even at this late hour, for the purpose of emphasizing again what we have already had emphasized many times on the floor of the House—and probably will again—that in all the programs we propose for farm relief, and in all the discussion of so-called farm problems, the problem of taxation is one of the very greatest. From a leading farm journal the other day I picked up this little sentence that caught my attention, and I thought it was about as brief and yet as comprehensive a statement of the situation as anything that I had recently come across, and I submit it for your consideration:

FARMERS' TAXES MOSTLY LOCAL

The story of the increase in taxation of farm properties has been told so often that it is a familiar story even to those who do not have to pay such taxes. Broadly speaking, farm taxes have increased about 160 per cent in the past 15 years, while land values now are some 20 per cent higher than in 1913.

A recent governmental survey of this question shows that very few farmers pay direct taxes to the Federal Government and are therefore little affected by changes in the income tax. Nearly all revenues derived from the taxation of farm properties is spent for local purposes. In the average community from one-third to one-half of all public money is expended for schools. Roads come next, accounting for about one-fourth of the total, on an average. Next, but in very much smaller amount, come the salaries and expenses of local and county officers; and, finally, the amount that goes to maintain the State government.

As showing how in one particular instance this burden of taxation has increased, I want to make reference to one piece of land of which I have knowledge. It is a 200-acre farm. Back in 1914 the State of Michigan passed a law requiring that all assessments of real estate should be upon the cash basis. That law was then put into effect, and this particular 200 acres of land was assessed at a figure which has remained constant from that time to this. To show the increase in taxes, may I give you the figures from the 1914 tax return on that piece of land? In 1914 the taxes paid were $108.96. In 1926 the taxes paid were $374.61, an increase of 244 per cent. Of course that is not an extraordinary illustration and I presume it might be duplicated by many others who might have similar information, but it all indicates forcibly the tremendous significance of the question of local taxation, and particularly taxation upon real estate. Back in our own State of Michigan I think we have been doing a splendid piece of work in trying to lift the burden of taxation from real estate, not only farms, but small homes. Naturally, all of us agree that that is a sound procedure. I shall make reference in my extension to what our own State has done in the way of lessening the burden of local taxation.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. The gentleman will concede, will he not, that there has been a share contributed by Federal legislation which has tended to increase those taxes. That is by passing legislation such as our Federal road legislation and the maternity legislation and other such legislation where the Federal Government appropriates so much provided the States equal the amount. That class of legislation has added an extra burden of taxation on the States.

Mr. KETCHAM. I would answer the gentleman by stating that in such a progressive State as the State of Michigan we would have undertaken those movements all by ourselves if they had not been undertaken by the Federal Government, but in view of the fact that the rest of the country is coming along we are glad to have the encouragement given by Federal aid.

Mr. HUDSON. That is a fine statement of the progress of our State, and I agree with the gentleman, but as a matter of fact all of those things have helped to increase taxation.

Mr. KETCHAM. Seriously, I would say that I think they have to a degree. I want to call attention now to this rather unusual situation in our State, and I commend it to those of you who are thinking of these problems with reference to your own localities. We have what we know in the State of Michigan as a primary-school interest fund. Originally that fund was created by setting aside the proceeds of the sale of land of the fifteenth section of each township. In the growth of the State that of course has become more or less a fiction, and now the principal source of support of the primary-school interest fund comes from the taxation of public utilities.

For the last year, you may be interested to know, in our State the total amount collected from these various public utilities amounted to $20,583,000, whereas the State taxes amounted to $20,500,000. That, of course, will immediately suggest to you that by reason of the differing valuations in the different counties of the State a large number of counties, in fact, a great majority of them, received from the State, through the medium of the so-called primary-school interest fund, large contributions that they made to the State in the way of taxation. In fact, so unusual has that situation become that out of 83 counties in the State of Michigan for the year 1928 there were but 9 counties where there was an excess of State tax over that returned to them from the primary-school interest fund, while in 74 counties of the State there were more moneys returned for the use of the school authorities and the maintenance of the public schools than was paid in State taxes. To indicate to you the extent to which that goes, I cite the case of one county where there was returned to the county $200,000 over that which was contributed to the State from the county.

It seems this is rather an inevitable tendency, in view of the fact that we are concentrating our wealth in the great centers of population, and having collected toll from the rest of the State, we must provide ways and means whereby the load of taxation from real estate and real property may be lightened in a corresponding degree. In that regard it seems to me our State has done a very fine piece of work in helping to lighten this burden which would otherwise be almost crushing.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes.

Mr. HARE. I am very much interested in the gentleman's statement. I understood that you have been able to reduce the taxes on real estate, but by the illustration you gave me I have a different idea. The taxes on a 200-acre farm have increased 240 per cent.

Mr. KETCHAM. That increase of the tax was in local taxes. Notwithstanding this vast contribution in the way of primary-school interest fund, the school and road taxes have become very heavy. In our State we have a law of general character called the Covert Act establishing road districts, much as drainage districts are usually established.

Mr. HARE. Then the pressure on real estate has not been relieved at all in the last analysis?

Mr. KETCHAM. It has been relieved to the extent of the $20,000,000 we have received from the public utilities to lessen our school taxes. Of course that has been a great contribution.

I append the following table for which I am indebted to The Detroiter:

[From The Detroiter, February 18, 1929]

The accompanying table shows the State tax of 1928 apportioned to the counties of Michigan for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and the primary-school fund distribution for the same period. In studying the table it should be noted that the sums falling under the head of State tax, involve only the property tax received by the State and do not contemplate the gasoline tax or any of the special and direct levies.

EXCESS OF SCHOOL FUND

It is interesting to note that except in the case of nine counties, there was an excess of primary-school fund distributed to the counties over the State tax. Those nine counties were: Calhoun, Genesee, Ingham, Jackson, Kalamazoo, Livingston, Oakland, Washtenaw, and Wayne.

A total of $20,500,000 in State tax and $20,583,851.68 in primary-school funds were distributed, according to the records of the auditor general's offiffice at Lansing, giving an excess of $83,851.98 of primary-school fund over the State tax.

State tax distribution

Counties	State tax of 1928	Primary-school fund	Excess
			Of primary-school fund	Of State tax
Alcona	$11,023.05	$30,403.49	$19,380.44
Alger	26,200.43	58,472.80	32,272.37
Allegan	126,888.03	196,351.91	69,463.88
Alpena	41,887.65	107,775.71	65,888.06
Antrim	17,636.97	54,581.65	36,944.68
Arenac	15,677.37	54,407.25	38,729.88
Baraga	23,026.01	62,748.99	39,722.98
Barry	73,487.17	95,088.28	21,601.11
Bay	190,332.04	372,574.33	182,242.29
Benzie	12,247.93	33,318.60	21,070.67
Berrien	264,554.14	358,238.86	93,684.72
Branch	93,083.94	100,387.74	7,303.80

State tax distribution—Continued

Counties	State tax of 1928	Primary-school fund	Excess
			Of primary-school fund	Of State tax
Calhoun	$345,390.15	$328,584.81		$16,805.34
Cass	75,936.92	96,604.77	$20,667.85
Charlevoix	28,145.06	73,666.67	45,521.61
Cheboygan	22,781.03	69,932.73	47,151.70
Chippewa	74,712.04	131,189.84	56,477.80
Clare	17,147.02	38,056.28	20,909.26
Clinton	91,859.07	115,491.32	23,632.25
Crawford	8,083.56	16,614.25	8,530.69
Delta	59,279.64	181,560.56	122,280.92
Dickinson	70,425.29	174,126.77	103,701.48
Eaton	120,029.14	137,658.89	17,629.75
Emmet	36,743.58	74,915.86	38,172.28
Genesee	771,778.06	699,868.79		71,909.27
Gladwin	17,147.02	46,698.46	29,551.44
Gogebic	167,551.01	196,038.41	28,487.40
Grand Traverse	40,418.00	82,812.42	42,394.42
Gratiot	123,928.45	166,895.48	42,967.03
Hillsdale	107,526.39	120,881.97	13,355.58
Houghton	124,978.25	331,597.34	206,619.09
Huron	110,210.87	188,778.70	78,567.83
Ingham	514,410.81	432,393.37		82,017.44
Ionia	110,230.96	153,349.67	43,118.71
Iosco	19,596.57	41,217.17	21,620.60
Iron	105,086.69	133,076.56	27,989.87
Isabella	68,588.08	114,554.49	45,966.41
Jackson	357,902.53	341,837.48		16,065.45
Kalamazoo	357,883.05	351,638.71		6,244.34
Kalkaska	8,068.60	25,061.63	16,993.03
Kent	945,536.26	1,023,501.92	77,965.66
Keweenaw	31,844.49	34,169.36	2,324.87
Lake	5,389.04	21,797.97	16,408.93
Lapeer	85,980.07	121,482.96	35,502.89
Leelanau	16,657.07	48,347.83	31,690.76
Lenawee	203,633.26	223,542.28	19,909.02
Livingston	85,735.10	83,352.77		2,382.33
Luce	20,331.49	24,359.15	4,027.66
Mackinac	20,331.49	47,426.18	27,094.69
Macomb	320,894.50	353,380.52	32,486.02
Manistee	41,642.88	92,657.91	51,015.03
Marquette	166,693.70	233,796.70	67,103.00
Mason	42,867.55	98,020.92	55,153.37
Mecosta	34,294.04	84,616.35	50,322.31
Menominee	58,789.90	139,376.98	80,587.08
Midland	46,786.95	93,351.64	46,564.69
Missaukee	10,533.11	41,260.16	30,727.05
Monroe	202,090.03	216,449.85	14,359.82
Montcalm	75,936.92	134,287.79	58,350.87
Montmorency	6,858.89	18,751.25	11,892.36
Muskegon	235,159.19	362,110.85	126,951.66
Newaygo	41,642.88	84,421.09	42,778.21
Oakland	943,086.51	761,468.14		181,618.37
Oceana	34,294.04	77,834.26	43,540.22
Ogemaw	13,717.58	39,070.71	25,353.13
Ontonagon	31,354.55	72,732.88	41,378.33
Osceola	26,797.81	70,574.06	43,776.25
Oscoda	4,899.09	10,190.71	5,291.62
Otsego	12,737.88	31,039.73	18,301.85
Ottawa	173,919.95	277,167.67	103,247.72
Presque Isle	20,576.47	66,877.33	46,300.86
Roscommon	4,899.09	11,094.34	6,195.25
Saginaw	384,583.28	551,698.88	167,115.60
Sanilac	110,210.87	163,999.08	53,788.21
Schoolcraft	23,755.81	44,550.78	20,794.97
Shiawassee	127,602.87	188,330.37	60,727.50
St. Clair	269,453.23	314,280.82	44,827.59
St. Joseph	106,556.54	129,569.71	23,013.17
Tuscola	100,412.69	186,613.70	86,201.01
Van Buren	97,983.03	157,366.71	59,383.68
Washtenaw	330,692.67	247,760.97		82,931.70
Wayne	10,092,251.27	7,124,529.51		2,967,721.76
Wexford	38,703.39	87,186.18	48,482.79
Total	20,500,000.00	20,583,851.68	3,511,547.58	3,427,695.60

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a resolution adopted by the Boston City Council in favor of repealing the so-called national-origins clause of the immigration act, and a communication from the commander of the American Legion, Department of Massachusetts, on the same subject. These documents relate to an address that I made a week ago last Thursday.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the memorials he has indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following are the papers referred to:

CITY OF BOSTON, IN CITY COUNCIL.

Whereas legislation of a very grave and far-reaching nature bearing on proposed changes in existing immigration laws is at present pending before the Seventieth Congress of the United States of America; and

Whereas definite action repealing the so-called national origins law must be had during the present session of Congress, otherwise this law becomes operative by presidential proclamation during the present year; and

Whereas under the existing methods of computing the annual quotas from the various European countries, which is considered equitable and fair to all the immigrants reaching our shores; and

Whereas the report of the special committee consisting of three members of President Coolidge's Cabinet, after having figures submitted to them by the special congressional committee, stated that "the statistical and historical information available raises grave doubts as to the whole value of these computations as a basis for the purpose intended, and therefore we can not assume responsibility for such conclusions under these circumstances." President-elect Hoover was a member of this Cabinet committee; and

Whereas Legislative Agent Taylor, by inference, places the American Legion on record for the national-origins clause by declaring that this was the only way in which those races who in the World War were classed as "slackers" could be kept out, the plain inference being that this stigma was placed on those born in France, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Germany, and the Irish Free State, and that nationals of these races were the chief "slackers" in America during the World War, and that these are the races who are to be punished by a large cut in their immigration quotas; and

Whereas complete refutation of the base charge that men of alien bloods were "slackers" in the World War is contained in the report of Provost Marshal Enoch H. Crowder, who was in charge of the draft, in which he devoted many pages to a eulogy of the high patriotism shown by men of alien blood in responding to the call of the colors. He termed it a great and inspiring revelation, and said that "the melting pot of the world and the cosmopolitan composition of our population was never more strikingly disclosed than by the events of the World War." He wrote, further, in this section of his report, that the "great inspiring revelation is that men of foreign and of native origin alike responded to the call of arms with a patriotic devotion that confounded the plans of our archenemy and surprised our highest expectations." Any man who can peruse the muster rolls of one of our camps, or the battle casualty lists in France, without realizing that America has fulfilled one of its highest missions in breeding a spirit of loyalty among all those who owe allegiance to its institutions, is not himself imbued with the high order of patriotism of those who answered the call of arms:

Resolved, That the Boston City Council goes on record as favoring the repeal of the so-called national-origins clause of the immigration act.

In city council, February 18, 1929. Adopted.

Attest:

W. J. DOYLE, City Clerk.

DEPARTMENT OF MASSACHUSETTS, THE AMERICAN LEGION,
159 Statehouse, Boston.

The recent widespread discussion of the national origins act brings home to the general public for the first time the extremely difficult and delicate nature of the subject. The Department of Massachusetts of the American Legion recognizes the authority of the American Legion through its national convention to determine the national policy of the American Legion, not merely for the Department of Massachusetts, but for the entire American Legion. We recognize that through its national convention the American Legion has gone on record as favoring the immediate application of the national origins act. Massachusetts is but 1 of over 50 departments of the American Legion; and, while we must recognize the existence of the principle of democracy as to majority control, still, the situation before us is that a tremendous objection to the legislation has developed, evidenced by speeches by our Representatives in the Congress of the United States and by other public officials and by expression of opinion by leading cities throughout the Commonwealth. Among legionnaires the opposition is equally intense, as indicated by resolutions of American Legion posts and statements by individual legionnaires.

The reason for the development of this opposition at this time is clear. Citizens generally were first made acquainted with the specific provisions of the act by newspaper reports of the recent discussions before Congress. Knowledge and consideration of the provisions of the national origins act have caused a new public opinion to form in Massachusetts.

The Department of Massachusetts of the American Legion, in view of this development of public opinion, earnestly urges that an immediate meeting of the national executive committee of the American Legion be called by National Commander Paul V. McNutt, or other appropriate action taken, in order that the American Legion may reconsider its action as taken by the national convention, to the end that the application of the national origins act may be postponed until there has been a more complete study of the effect of the national origins act.

WILLIAM H. GRIFFIN, Commander.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee if we can agree upon the time of general debate?

Mr. BYRNS. I think we can.

Mr. WOOD. I suggest one hour.

Mr. BYRNS. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. WOOD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the debate shall close in one hour, one-half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee and the other half by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The fixing of time for the closing of debate can only be had in the House after the committee rises. If there is no further general debate, the Clerk will read.

Mr. SNELL. They can not make a gentleman's agreement in the committee.

Mr. WOOD. We have agreed to close in an hour, the gentleman from Tennessee to control one-half the time, and I to control the other half.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen can agree that way all right.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, instead of this so-called gentleman's agreement in committee, to-morrow a man might arise and ask to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The time will be divided equally between the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I forgot about that.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. TILSON having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. LEHLBACH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 17223) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, and June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent, in view of the fact that the deficiency bill is quite a long one, and the fact that the gentleman from Tennessee desires some time in which to make some observations, and I, likewise, in reference to this bill, we may meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, why should we not meet at the usual time? Why does not the gentleman take the usual course of suggesting an hour's debate and meeting at the usual time?

Unless we could get a gentleman's agreement that a point of order of no quorum would be made, it would be within the power of any Member, of course, if we met at 11 o'clock, to make such a point of order and that would take up practically all the time that it is sought to gain by meeting at 11 o'clock.

Mr. WOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I was proceeding on the theory that one very good reason why a point of no quorum would not be made is because of the fact that there is nobody here listening to the general debate and there would not be to-morrow.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Probably when the gentleman from Indiana speaks there will be a quorum present.

Mr. WOOD. I am not counting on attracting anybody.

Mr. BYRNS. I will say this to the gentleman, that if you meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning, when the House is in the habit of meeting at 12 o'clock, there would not be anybody here at all. I would rather meet at 12 o'clock and, if necessary, sit until 10 or 11 o'clock at night, so far as I am concerned, and complete the bill, and I think that would be infinitely better.

Mr. WOOD. I want to complete this bill to-morrow.

Mr. BYRNS. I shall interpose no dilatory tactics so far as I am concerned.

Mr. WOOD. Then, with the understanding that we will continue the consideration of the bill to-morrow until it is finished, I will withdraw my request.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. At this stage of the session it is always necessary—and gentlemen of the House ought to understand it—to remain longer in the afternoon than is the usual custom, and important business sometimes necessitates remaining here at night. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee is a very good one and we will try to hold our people here.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to one hour, one half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and one half by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to one hour and that this hour be equally divided and controlled by himself and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President for his approval bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 418. House joint resolution to provide for the quartering in certain public buildings in the District of Columbia of troops participating in the inaugural ceremonies;

H. R. 13251. An act to provide for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled residents of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

H. R. 13582. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to convey title to Lucile Scarborough for section 29, township 26 south, range 37 east, New Mexico principal meridian, upon the payment to the Government of $1.25 per acre;

H. R. 13825. An act to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15849. An act authorizing Richard H. Klein, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Susquehanna River at or near the borough of Liverpool, Perry County, Pa.;

H. R. 15918. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize credit upon the construction charges of certain water-right applicants and purchasers on the Yuma and Yuma Mesa auxiliary projects, and for other purposes";

H. R. 16270. An act to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the St. John River between Fort Kent, Me., and Clairs, Province of New Brunswick, Canada," approved March 18, 1924;

H. R. 16306. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Allegheny River at Oil City, Venango County, Pa.;

H. R. 16524. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Dahlgren, Va.;

H. R. 16920. An act authorizing E. T. Franks, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River approximately midway between the cities of Owensboro, Ky., and Rockport, Ind.; and

H. R. 17024. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Carondelet, Mo.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 23, 1929, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. TILSON submitted the following tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Saturday, February 23, 1929, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE—SUBCOMMITTEE ON RAILROADS

(10 a. m.)

To amend section 15a of the interstate commerce act, as amended (S. 656 and H. R. 8549).

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON: Committee on the Judiciary. H. R. 11801. A bill to amend sections 726 and 727 of title 18, United States Code, with reference to Federal probation officers, and to add a new section thereto; with an amendment (Rept. No. 2666). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOFFMAN: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 15209. A bill to grant relief to those States which brought State-owned property into the Federal service in 1917; with an amendment (Rept. No. 2667). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOFFMAN: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 16028. A bill to regulate computation of percentage of active pay to be paid as retired pay to officers of the Army; with an amendment (Rept. No. 2668). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GRAHAM: Committee on the Judiciary. H. R. 16393. A bill to include henceforth, under the designation "storekeeper-gaugers," all positions which have heretofore been designated as those of storekeepers, gaugers, and storekeeper-gaugers; to make storekeeper-gaugers full-time employees, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 2669). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILLIAMSON: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 16985. A bill authorizing the Uintah, Uncompahgre, and the White River Bands of the Ute Indians in Utah and Colorado and the Southern Ute and the Ute Mountain Bands of Ute Indians in Utah, Colorado, and New Mexico to sue in the Court of Claims; with an amendment (Rept. No. 2670). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HOFFMAN: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 12463. A bill for the relief of Adam A. Schultz; without amendment (Rept. No. 2661). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. GLYNN: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 13872. A bill for the relief of James J. Gianaros; without amendment (Rept. No. 2662). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 15021. A bill for the relief of William S. McWilliams; without amendment (Rept. No. 2663). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. COCHRAN of Pennsylvania: Committee on Claims. H. R. 8691. A bill for the relief of Helen Gray; without amendment (Rept. No. 2664). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT: Committee on Military Affairs. H. J. Res. 339. A joint resolution conferring the rank, pay, and allowances of a major of Infantry, to date from March 24, 1928, upon Robert Graham Moss, late captain, Infantry, United States Army, deceased; without amendment (Rept. No. 2665). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. PEAVEY: Committee on War Claims. H. R. 15769. A bill to pay certain claims, heretofore reported to Congress by the Secretary of War, arising from the explosions and fire at the plant of the T. A. Gillespie Loading Co. at Morgan, N. J., October 4 and 5, 1918; without amendment (Rept. No. 2671). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MORTON D. HULL: A bill (H. R. 17237) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Calumet River at or near One hundred and thirtieth Street, Chicago, Cook County, Ill.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. PARKS: A bill (H. R. 17238) extending the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Arkansas City, Ark.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BOYLAN: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 427) to appoint a commission to make a study of proposed change in the printing of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. BLACK of New York: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 428) to provide a temporary shelter for newspaper correspondents in Washington, D. C.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. ROWBOTTOM: Joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, concerning a system of inland waterways, including the Wabash River, and urging Congress to enact appropriate legislation to secure the establishment of such system; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. SELVIG: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, urging that Congress oppose the placing of any duty upon Canadian lumber and shingles; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. VINCENT of Iowa: Concurrent resolution adopted by the Forty-third General Assembly of the State of Iowa, favoring investigation on the marketing of livestock; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Iowa: Memorial of the Iowa State Legislature, relating to direct marketing; to the Committee on Agriculture.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. AYRES: A bill (H. R. 17239) granting a pension to Abbie Osborn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BEERS: A bill (H. R. 17240) granting an increase of pension to Abby E. Taylor; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17241) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth A. Bitting; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17242) granting a pension to Emeline Beaston; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17243) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Conrad; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BLOOM: A bill (H. R. 17244) for the relief of Edward J. Devine; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GARBER: A bill (H. R. 17245) granting an increase of pension to Lou M. Hoover; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H. R. 17246) granting a pension to Edward W. Collins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TILSON: A bill (H. R. 17247) granting a pension to Sarah B. Johnson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOOD: A bill (H. R. 17248) granting an increase of pension to Sarah J. Mohlar; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

12368. By Mr. BACHMANN: Petition of John F. Larke and other citizens of New Martinsville, W. Va., protesting against any change in the present tariff on hides and leather used in the manufacture of shoes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

12369. By Mr. BLOOM: Petition of the Senate of the State of New York, requesting that the Hon. Harry S. New, Postmaster General of the United States, cause to be issued 100,000,000 postage stamps, of the denomination of 2 cents each, commemorative of the Sullivan campaign of 1779 in New York and Pennsylvania; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

12370. By Mr. BOYLAN: Petition of New York Conservation Association, favoring agricultural appropriation bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

12371. Also, resolution adopted by the United Irish American Societies of New York, requesting the repeal of the national-origin clause of the immigration act; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

12372. By Mr. CHASE: Petition of members of Bellefonte Union of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Bellefonte, Pa., urging support of the Jones-Stalker bill (H. R. 9588), to increase the maximum penalties for violation of the Federal prohibition law; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

12373. Also, petition of retail shoe dealers, with their customers, respectfully requesting against any change in the present tariff on hides and leather used in the manufacture of shoes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

12374. By Mr. CONNERY: Resolution of Shoe Workers' Protective Union, local No. 3, of Lynn, Mass., in regard to tariff on boots and shoes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

12375. Also, resolution of the Scandinavian American Civic League in Lynn, Mass., protesting the national-origin clause of the immigration act; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

12376. By Mr. CRAIL: Petition of Thomas H. Gardnier, of Los Angeles, Calif., suggesting ways and means of reducing taxes and making the Federal Government more efficient; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

12377. By Mr. GARBER: Petition of residents of Washington County, Okla., in support of House bill 14676; to the Committee on Pensions.

12378. Also, petition of residents of Payne County, Okla., in support of certain measures pertaining to the Post Office Department now pending before Congress; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

12379. Also, petition of William Green, president American Federation of Labor, in support of Senate bill 1462; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

12380. By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: Petition of National Wool Growers' Association, recommending 10-year program of predatory animal control, as recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture.

12381. Also, petition of R. H. Ames, president Amarillo Chapter Will H. Dilg League of America, of Amarillo, Tex., favoring a tariff on imported fishing tackle; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

12382. By Mr. LUCE: Petition of the City Council of the city of Boston, Mass., for the repeal of the so-called national origins clause of the immigration act; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

12383. By Mr. MAPES: Petition of Edward Raum and 41 other residents of Grand Rapids, Mich., against any change in the present tariff on hides and leather used in the manufacture of shoes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

12384. By Mr. MORROW: Petition of Samuel Kenoi, Sam Chino, Martin Blake, and Henry Treas, commending House bill 17057, a bill granting a per capita allowance of $100 to members of the Mescalero Apache Tribe, New Mexico; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

12385. Also, petition of Henry Meyer, L. C. Lynch, and other citizens of Chama, N. Mex., opposing House bill 78, compulsory Sunday observance for the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

12386. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of the American Live Stock Association, Denver, Colo., urging a duty on livestock and fresh and preserved meats; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

12387. By Mr. RANSLEY: Petition of P. L. Bjornsgaard and other citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., urging that the present quota distribution based on the census of 1890 be retained; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

12388. By Mr. SANDERS of Texas: Petition of Walter Tynes and 34 others, in favor of the passage of the Johnson bill (H. R. 16084), authorizing an appropriation of $30,000 for the construction of the bridges at Porters Bluff and Akers Ferry, which were destroyed and removed by the Federal Government; to the Committee on Claims.

12389. By Mr. SELVIG: Petition of 13 residents of Ottertail County, in the ninth district, Minnesota, urging the enactment of House bill 10958; to the Committee on Agriculture.

12390. By Mr. SWING: Petition of residents of San Diego, Calif., and vicinity, protesting against compulsory Sunday observance bill (H. R. 78); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE

SATURDAY, February 23, 1929

(Legislative day of Friday, February 22, 1929)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fess	McNary	Smith
Barkley	Frazier	Mayfield	Smoot
Bayard	Gerry	Metcalf	Steck
Bingham	Glass	Moses	Steiwer
Black	Glenn	Neely	Stephens
Blaine	Goff	Norbeck	Swanson
Blease	Gould	Norris	Thomas, Idaho
Borah	Greene	Nye	Thomas, Okla.
Bratton	Hale	Oddie	Trammell
Brookhart	Harris	Overman	Tydings
Broussard	Harrison	Phipps	Tyson
Bruce	Hastings	Pittman	Vandenberg
Burton	Hawes	Ransdell	Wagner
Capper	Hayden	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Heflin	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mont.
Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ind.	Warren
Curtis	Jones	Sackett	Waterman
Dale	Kendrick	Schall	Watson
Deneen	King	Sheppard	Wheeler
Dill	McKellar	Shortridge
Edge	McMaster	Simmons

Mr. MOSES. I wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. KEYES] because of illness. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. BRATTON. My colleague [Mr. LARRAZOLO] is detained from the Senate by illness. I will let this announcement stand throughout the day.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce the necessary absence from the city of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 5129. An act authorizing Thomas E. Brooks, of Camp Walton, Fla., and his associates and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the mouth of Garniers Bayou, at a point where State road No. 10, in the State of Florida, crosses the mouth of said Garniers Bayou, between Smack Point on the west and White Point on the east, in Okaloosa County, Fla.;

S. 5465. An act authorizing V. Calvin Trice, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Choptank River at a point at or near Cambridge, Md.; and

S. 5630. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Carrollton, Ky.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1648) for the relief of Oliver C. Macey and Marguerite Macey.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15712) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 16, 28, 29, and 54 to the bill and concurred therein; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 41, 52, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, and 60, and concurred therein severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11285) to establish Federal prison camps.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to each of the following bills:

H. R. 5769. An act to authorize the consolidation and coordination of Government purchases, to enlarge the functions of the General Supply Committee, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 13461. An act to provide for the acquisition of land in the District of Columbia for the use of the United States.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 3848. An act creating the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission and defining its purposes and powers;

S. 4861. An act authorizing the Brownville Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Brownville, Nebr.;

S. 5543. An act to establish the Grand Teton National Park in the State of Wyoming, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 16422. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF IDAHO, TWENTIETH SESSION, IN THE SENATE.

Senate Joint Memorial 3 (by forestry committee)

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represents that—

Whereas the lumber industry in Idaho is of importance secondary only to that of agriculture; and

Whereas by reason of large investments, carrying charges, and overhead expenses involved, the frequent suspension of operations is ruinous to the lumber industry, and such suspensions adversely affect directly and indirectly a large number of our citizens; and

Whereas large shipments of lumber and wood products, produced abroad at lower operating costs than prevail in the United States, are now admitted free of duty in ruinous competition with the output of our mills; and

Whereas existing conditions result in great loss of employment to many skilled woodsmen and millmen during considerable portions of the year: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Idaho (the House of Representatives concurring), That, with a view to encouragement, stabilization, and protection of the lumber industry in this and neighboring States, we urge upon Congress the advisability and necessity of imposing tariff duties upon all round and square timbers, rough and dressed lumber, match blocks, shingle bolts, shingles, lath, sash, doors, moldings, and mill work imported into the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Idaho is authorized and directed to forward this memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and that copies thereof be sent to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

This senate joint memorial passed the senate on the 16th day of February, 1929.

W. B. KINNE, President of the Senate.

This senate joint memorial passed the house of representatives on the 16th day of February, 1929.

D. S. WHITEHEAD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I hereby certify that the within Senate Joint Memorial No. 3 originated in the senate during the twentieth session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

CARL C. KITCHEN, Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, praying for the passage of legislation enacting a tariff schedule upon manganese ore or concentrates of all kinds according to the schedule herein set forth as a minimum and that paragraph 302 of the present law now in force and effect, known as the Fordney-McCumber Act, be amended to read:

Manganese ore or concentrates of all kinds, containing less than 10 per cent of metallic manganese, shall be admitted free of duty; containing 10 per cent or more of metallic manganese and less than 20 per cent, one-half of 1 cent per pound on the metallic manganese contained therein; containing 20 per cent or more of metallic manganese and less than 25 per cent, 1 cent per pound on the metallic manganese contained therein; containing 25 per cent of metallic manganese, or more, 1½ cents per pound on metallic manganese contained therein.

And that such schedule be and become immediately effective and operative upon enactment and approval, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

(See joint memorial printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 19th instant, page 3711 of the RECORD.)

Mr. NORRIS presented the following resolution agreed to by the Nebraska State House of Representatives, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolution

Whereas it is the general belief that any successful attempt to secure general improvement in the condition of agriculture in the United States must have as a basic principle the establishment of tariffs which will guarantee to agriculture and stock raising a fair and remunerative home market; and

Whereas the growing importance of livestock in connection with the production of crops and the conversion of crops into meat and its by-products is recognized as essential to successful farming; and

Whereas there is nothing of greater importance than saving our home markets for our own people: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Nebraska request the Senators and Congressmen from Nebraska to use all honorable means to secure prompt enactment by Congress of legislation which will increase tariff protection on meat and its by-products.

W. M. BARBOUR.

STATE OF NEBRASKA, FORTY-FIFTH SESSION,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Lincoln, Nebr., February 19, 1929.

I hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was adopted by unanimous vote of the house of representatives on this date.

FRANK P. CARRICK,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. STECK presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Iowa, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

House Concurrent Resolution 5 (by committee on agriculture)

Whereas the livestock producers of this country are from justice and necessity entitled to a market for the sale of their livestock which will insure most advantageous results to the governed either by the natural laws of competition and supply and demand or some other system equally effective; and

Whereas during the last few years there is in existence a system of direct or private buying that has so expanded as to endanger, in the opinion of many, the open competitive livestock markets which have been built up in this country over a period of 50 years; and

Whereas it is the opinion of the vast majority of the stock growers that if the open competitive markets do not prevail the direct or private system of buying is, as it operates to-day, dangerous to the livestock interests of the country; and

Whereas approximately 40 per cent of the hogs now being shipped to the big terminal markets are bought in the country by packing agents and shipped to private stockyards, and by this system are kept out of the competitive market: Therefore be it

Resolved, That our Representatives in Congress are hereby requested and strongly urged to conduct a thorough and fair investigation of the questions of marketing livestock in all of its phases, especially with respect to the setting up of some form which will be satisfactory to livestock producers if the competitive market is becoming obsolete; such investigation to be made on a basis which will inspire confidence in the conclusions and result among the producers, the consumers, and the packers, the stockyards, and all other marketing agencies; that will tend to settle adequately the questions which have perplexed the country and Congress so much in the past concerning marketing problems of the livestock industry; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each of our Representatives in Congress.

J. H. JOHNSON,
Speaker of the House.
ARCH. W. MCFARLANE,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the foregoing concurrent resolution was duly adopted by the Forty-third General Assembly of the State of Iowa.

A. C. GUSTAFSON,
Chief Clerk of the House.

RATES ON GRAVEL, SAND, AND STONE

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce a suspension petition addressed to the Interstate Commerce Commission from a great many public officials and organizations in Tennessee and Kentucky in reference to railroad rates on road materials in those two States.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 11, 1929.

To the Interstate Commerce Commission:

SUSPENSION PETITION

The undersigned, public officials, municipalities, and organizations, representing users and consumers of gravel, sand, crushed stone, and like commodities, respectfully request the commission to suspend increased rates for transportation of carload shipments of said commodities to destinations in western Tennessee, western Kentucky, and the State of Mississippi. The said increases are published to be effective March 1, 1929, in a schedule filed on behalf of the Mississippi Valley lines by their tariff-issuing agent, J. H. Glenn, known as Supplement No. 28 to I. C. C., No. A–655, superseding numerous tariffs now in effect, and which are to be canceled by supplements thereto.

And your petitioners request the commission to enter upon an investigation into the reasonableness and propriety of the said proposed increased interstate rates. Your petitioners respectfully urge the following grounds for suspension of the aforesaid schedule and investigation of the propriety and reasonableness of the proposed rates before they are allowed to become effective:

I. The proposed schedule involves very large advances in a level of interstate rates which has been maintained voluntarily by these carriers for many years and subjected to the various general rate increases.

Attached as Exhibit A hereto, we submit illustrations of some of the present interstate rates which were originally established voluntarily and which have borne the successive general increases, the proposed rates involved under the tariff sought to be suspended, and the amounts of the proposed advances.

It may be stated that the advances in going rates actually paid on movements of these commodities probably average about 30 cents per ton, or about 35 per cent.

II. These proposed increases in gravel, sand, and stone rates will lay a very heavy burden on the road-construction program of the States, counties, and municipalities of the Mississippi Valley at a time when there is urgent need and great public demand for road construction, and a like burden on the maintenance of hard roads and improved highways.

The commission may take judicial notice of the general demand throughout the country for improved highways and the large program of hard-road construction. Nowhere is the need for good roads greater than in the Mississippi Valley. There is a very large mileage of unimproved highways which is scheduled or under consideration for construction, and a large mileage of roads to be reconstructed, as well as the local roads connecting the farms and plantations with the cities and villages in the States of Mississippi, western Tennessee, western Kentucky, and eastern Louisiana. The road-building program of the Mississippi Valley is less than one-seventh completed.

A fairly close estimate is that the increased rates would add approximately $1,500 per mile to the construction cost of the average gravel road, or about $1,250 per mile to the construction of an 18-foot concrete road.

Further, the advance will add heavily to the cost of annual maintenance of the gravel highways, such as are commonly laid through the Mississippi Valley.

It is further estimated that the increased rates, if permitted to take effect on interstate traffic and followed thereafter by relative advances on State traffic, will add not less than the following amounts to the total cost of highway construction within the three Mississippi Valley States named, as projected for the ensuing year, assuming that the increased rates, with their resulting burden on construction cost, do not curtail the road-building program. These figures are based on the reports of the various State highway engineers:

Tennessee	$943,250
Mississippi	511,200
Kentucky	471,625
Total	1,926,075

We do not have the figures for eastern Louisiana, but are informed that the advances in rates to points in that State would amount to approximately 30 cents per ton and would aggregate a very large annual sum.

III. While the new rates proposed in said schedule are ostensibly in accordance with the maximum scale of rates on these materials prescribed for interstate application in Georgia territory, etc., in case No. 17517 (Rates on Chert, Clay, Sand, and Gravel Within the State of Georgia, 122 I. C. C. 133) said proceedings did not involve the level or relationship of rates in Mississippi Valley territory; and the record therein affords no basis for assuming that the rates in the Mississippi Valley on said materials should be on the same level as the rates within southeastern territory. On the contrary, the evidence of record therein indicates that a lower level should be maintained in the Mississippi Valley.

If the commission will examine the record in No. 17517 and related cases it will find that only to an extremely limited extent were there involved any rates whatever into or within the Mississippi Valley. The only case in that series which involved any rates in the valley was No. 17763, and that only covered a section 3, not a section 13, allegation, as between complainants at Montgomery and Chattanooga, on the one hand, and competitors in Mississippi, on the other hand. But even that complaint named as defendants hardly any of the important railroads in the State of Mississippi or in the Mississippi Valley. Among the carriers omitted were the Southern Railway, Alabama & Vicksburg, Columbus & Greenville, Gulf & Ship Island, and Yazoo & Mississippi Valley Railroad Companies. Nor were the cases served on the State authorities of Mississippi in the manner necessary to confer jurisdiction under section 13.

Nevertheless witnesses for the Tri-State Road Material Association participated in those cases and offered evidence which was not questioned or rebutted tending to show that a lower basis of rates should be applied in the Mississippi Valley on these materials than in Georgia, etc.

IV. The transportation conditions with respect to physical characteristics of the railroads, conditions affecting engine tonnages, average train loadings of these materials and other commodities, are substantially more favorable in the Mississippi Valley than in southeastern territory and justify and require a lower basis of rates than would be reasonable in southeastern territory as maximum.

The earnings of the carriers under their present level of rates on these commodities have been amply sufficient, and the new rates would produce excessive earnings for the transportation services involved, as measured by the car-mile revenues, and in comparison with other commodities.

Your petitioners are prepared to establish these statements by competent and extensive evidence, if necessary, in the investigation that may be had following the suspension of these schedules.

V. Corresponding increases in intrastate rates on these materials within the State of Tennessee were also published in said schedule, Supplement No. 28 to Agent J. H. Glenn's I. C. C. No. A-655, to take effect March 1, 1929. But these intrastate rates have been suspended by the Railroad and Public Utilities Commission of the State of Tennessee by order entered the 24th day of January, 1929, and a proceeding of inquiry has been instituted thereon, known as I. and S. No. 1436.

Under the laws of the State of Mississippi corresponding increases in intrastate rates on these materials, if and when put in tariff form by defendants, would not be permitted to take effect and apply on intrastate commerce in said State, unless and until the State commission, upon due hearing, finds the same to be reasonable, just, and lawful, and approves said increases.

Petitioners are informed that the railroad companies have made application to the Mississippi Railroad Commission for authority to revise their schedules within the State of Mississippi, and that action thereon has not been taken by said commission.

VI. The general plan of cooperation between the Interstate Commerce Commission and the various State regulatory bodies, contemplated by paragraph (3) of section 13 of the interstate commerce act, seems to require that in fixing the level of interstate rates on materials of this character, being comparatively short-haul movements and for municipal or public purposes, the Federal commission should properly seek and expect the cooperation and assistance of the State commissions in the affected territory in conducting an investigation and considering the reasonableness of proposed advances before the same are permitted to take effect.

Your petitioners believe that if the commission calls upon the commissioners of the States involved in this matter, it will receive the cooperation of and substantial assistance from said commissioners in the problem of determining the proper level of rates on these materials to be applied throughout the Mississippi Valley.

VII. While mileage scales may be desirable for application on some commodities and in certain sections, they are not suited for rigid application to the transportation of heavy moving low-grade commodities produced in particular sections, as was recognized in the Southern Class Rate Case (100 I. C. C. 513, at 611).

The commission in the course of a discussion of the function and use of mileage scales, particularly on class traffic, among other things, said:

"On the other hand, group rates, as we have repeatedly recognized, are often defensible. They are particularly appropriate in the case of commodities produced only at certain points or in restricted localities, where commercial conditions by common consent are improved by the equalization of the points or areas of production. Group or differential relationships may also be created, and lawfully within limits, by carriers so situated that they are able to bring traffic into competitive markets at relatively low rates without undue preference."

Appendix A hereto is a statement of typical increases in rates involved in Supplement No. 28 to J. H. Glenn's I. C. C. No. A-655, from important origin points to representative destinations. The distances, present and proposed rates, and amount of increases are shown. Most of the movements as shown are interstate.

Copies of this protest are being served on the tariff-issuing agent and on traffic officers of the principal Mississippi Valley railroads.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN S. BURCHMORE,
LUTHER M. WALTER,
NUEL D. BELNAP,
Attorneys for Undersigned Petitioners.

SIGNATURES ATTACHED TO INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION PETITION, DOCKET NO. 17517

Lauderdale County Hard Roads Commission, by William Tucker, jr., secretary.
City of Ripley, by T. H. Green, mayor.
J. K. White, chairman Pike Commission of Dyer County, Tenn.
City of Dyersburg, Tenn., by F. W. Latta, mayor.
City of Tiptonville, Tenn., by A. E. Markham, mayor.
Lake County Hard Roads Commission, by A. E. Markham, chairman.
Corporation of Union City, Tenn., by J. A. Priete, mayor-commissioner.
Corporation of Union City, Tenn., by C. G. Guill, finance commissioner.
Corporation of Union City, Tenn., by C. W. Meir, jr., treasurer.
Obion County Highway Commission, by A. L. Burrus, chairman.
Gibson County Highway Commission, by T. K. Happel, secretary.
City of Trenton, Tenn., by T. K. Happel, mayor.
City of Humboldt, Tenn., by A. H. Barnett, mayor.
Carroll County Department of Highways, by E. L. Pardue, engineer.
City of McKenzie, Tenn., by D. C. Gallimore, mayor.
Henry County, Tenn., by D. T. Spaulding, county judge.
City of Paris, Tenn., by W. Harry Dudley, treasurer.
E. M. Culley, mayor, City of Paris, Tenn.
City of Gleason, Tenn., by J. C. Ammons, mayor.
Weakley County Highway Commission, by J. R. Bowlin, chairman.
City of Dresden, Tenn., by J. W. Thomas, mayor.
City of Martin, Tenn., by George M. Brooks, mayor.
Fulton County, Ky., by W. L. Hampton, chairman fiscal court.
City of Hickman, Ky., by T. T. Swayne, mayor.
City of Fulton, Ky., by W. O. Shankule, mayor.
City of South Fulton, Tenn., by S. A. McDade.
Tipton County Board of Highway Commissioners, by E. F. Elam, secretary.
City of Covington, Tenn., by J. A. Sheeson, mayor.
County court judge of Tipton County, Tenn.; Charles B. McClelland, judge.
Fayette County Highway Committee, by A. M. Langdon, chairman.
Fayette County Highway Committee, by W. T. Loggins, secretary.

City of Memphis, Tenn., by Watkins Overton, mayor.
Shelby County (Tenn.) commissioners, by E. W. Hale, chairman.
Memphis Freight Bureau, by James S. Davant, commissioner.
County of Madison, Tenn.
City of Jackson, Tenn.
Southern Interior Traffic Association, by A. J. McGehee, attorney in fact.
City of Milan, Tenn., by J. M. Creswell, mayor.
Milan Chamber of Commerce, by Allen S. Eason, secretary.
Humboldt Chamber of Commerce, by A. D. Hassell, secretary.
State Highway Department of Tennessee, by H. S. Berry, commissioner; W. F. Barry, assistant attorney general.
State Highway Department of Mississippi, by J. C. Roberts, chairman.

EXECUTIVE REPORT

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent, out of order, to submit a report for the Executive Calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5264) for the relief of James P. Cornes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1865) thereon.

Mr. STECK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 4626) for the relief of Maj. Arthur A. Padmore (Rept. No. 1866); and

A bill (H. R. 7230) for the relief of Charles L. Dewey (Rept. No. 1867).

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12650) for the relief of John F. Fleming, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1868) thereon.

Mr. TYSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 12867) granting an honorable discharge to Pierce Dale Jackson (Rept. No. 1869); and

A bill (H. R. 13260) for the relief of Josiah Harden (Rept. No. 1870).

Mr. BLAINE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12359) for the relief of the widow of Edwin D. Morgan, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1871) thereon.

Mr. McMASTER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16169) to authorize the Secretary of War to accept title to a certain tract of land adjacent to the Indiana Harbor Ship Canal at East Chicago, Ind., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1872) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 4824) for the relief of Francis X. Callahan, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1873) thereon.

Mr. DALE, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 5677) to amend section 2 of the act, chapter 254, approved March 2, 1927, entitled "An act authorizing the county of Escambia, Fla., and/or the county of Baldwin, Ala., and/or the State of Florida, and/or the State of Alabama to acquire all the rights and privileges granted to the Perdido Bay Bridge & Ferry Co. by chapter 168, approved June 22, 1916, for the construction of a bridge across Perdido Bay from Lillian, Ala., to Cummings Point, Fla.," reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1874) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5336) authorizing Walter J. Mitchell, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Patuxent River between Charles County, Md., and Calvert County, Md. (Rept. No. 1880);

A bill (S. 5740) to legalize a bridge across St. Johns River, 2½ miles southeast of Green Cove Springs, Fla. (Rept. No. 1875); and

A bill (S. 5802) to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain at or near East Alburg, Vt. (Rept. No. 1876).

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14242) for the relief of Everett A. Dougherty, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1877) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4244) for the relief of Joseph Lee, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1878) thereon.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9014) for the relief of Anthony Mullen, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1879) thereon.

Mr. BROOKHART, from the Committee on Civil Service, to which was referred the bill (S. 5785) to establish a board of civil-service appeals and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field service," approved March 4, 1923 (ch. 265, 42 Stat. 1488), and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1881) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4796) for the relief of Jesse J. Britton (Rept. No. 1882); and

A bill (S. 5386) extending benefits of the World War adjusted compensation act, as amended, to John J. Helms (Rept. No. 1883).

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 11508) for the relief of Kirby Hoon (Rept. No. 1885);

A bill (H. R. 13521) for the relief of Minnie A. Travers (Rept. No. 1886);

A bill (H. R. 13573) for the relief of Pedro P. Alvarez (Rept. No. 1887); and

A bill (H. R. 14823) for the relief of the Meadow Brook Club (Rept. No. 1888).

Mr. McMASTER, also from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4681) for the relief of Gilbert Peterson, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1889) thereon.

Mr. BLACK, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 5341) for the relief of the Staunton Brick Co. (Rept. No. 1890); and

A bill (H. R. 13132) for the relief of J. D. Baldwin, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1891).

Mr. STEIWER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5017) for the relief of Cullen D. O'Bryan and Lettie A. O'Bryan (Rept. No. 1892); and

A bill (H. R. 7173) granting compensation to the daughters of James P. Gallivan (Rept. No. 1893).

Mr. NYE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11422) for the relief of Samuel J. D. Marshall, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1894) thereon.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4354) for the relief of Atlantic Refining Co., a corporation of the State of Pennsylvania, owner of the American steamship H. C. Folger, against U. S. S. Connecticut (Rept. No. 1895);

A bill (S. 4931) for the relief of D. B. Heiner (Rept. No. 1896);

A bill (S. 5056) for the relief of William B. Thompson (Rept. No. 1897);

A bill (H. R. 8886) for the relief of Luc Mathias (Rept. No. 1898);

A bill (H. R. 10417) for the relief of George Simpson and R. C. Dunbar (Rept. No. 1899); and

A bill (H. R. 11260) for the relief of Frans Jan Wouters, of Antwerp, Belgium (Rept. No. 1900).

Mr. VANDENBERG, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 5843) to provide for the relocation of Michigan Avenue adjacent to the southerly boundary of the United States Soldiers' Home grounds, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1901) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. GREENE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on this calendar day that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 3848. An act creating the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission and defining its purposes and powers;

S. 4861. An act authorizing the Brownville Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Brownville, Nebr.; and

S. 5543. An act to establish the Grand Teton National Park in the State of Wyoming, and for other purposes.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 5873) granting a pension to Mrs. Pliny A. Durant; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRATTON:

A bill (S. 5874) granting an increase of pension to Garfield Hughes; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 5875) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Niobrara, Nebr.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 5876) for the acquisition, establishment, and development of the George Washington Memorial Parkway along the Potomac from Mount Vernon and Fort Washington to the Great Falls, and to provide for the acquisition of lands in the District of Columbia and the States of Maryland and Virginia requisite to the comprehensive park, parkway, and playground system of the National Capital; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SACKETT:

A bill (S. 5877) to include henceforth, under the designation "storekeeper-gaugers," all positions which have heretofore been designated as those of storekepers, gaugers, and storekeeper-gaugers; to make storekeeper-gaugers full-time employees, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 5878) authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Maysville, Ky.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. DILL:

A bill (S. 5879) authorizing Llewellyn Evans, J. F. Hickey, and B. A. Lewis, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Puget Sound, within the county of Pierce, State of Washington, at or near a point commonly known as the Narrows; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 5880) to provide for the preservation and consolidation of certain timber stands along the western boundary of the Yosemite National Park, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. HAYDEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 17223, the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 41, after line 21, insert the following:

"Printing and binding: For an additional amount for printing and binding water-supply papers for the Geological Survey for the fiscal year 1930, $65,000.

"For an additional amount for the item for gaging streams and determining the water supply of the United States under the appropriation for the Geological Survey in the 1930 appropriation act for the Interior Department to be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, $5,000."

Mr. PHIPPS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 17223, the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

"Denver (Colo.) customhouse, etc.: For continuation under an estimated total cost of $1,210,000 in lieu of $1,060,000 fixed in the act of March 5, 1928."

SURVEY OF INDIAN CONDITIONS—COUNSEL FOR INDIAN OFFICE OFFICIALS AND CROSS-EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES

Mr. HAYDEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the resolution (S. Res. 308) continuing until the end of the first regular session of the Seventy-first Congress Senate Resolution No. 79, authorizing a general survey of Indian conditions, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

Mr. McNARY. I submit a resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. It involves the authority on the part of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to hold hearings during the next Congress, and I ask the early consideration by the Audit and Control Committee of the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 336) was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized during the Seventy-first Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

SUPPLY OF NEWSPRINT PAPER TO PUBLISHERS OF SMALL NEWSPAPERS

Mr. SCHALL submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 337), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission is requested (1) to make an investigation and hold open hearings upon the question of whether any of the practices of the manufacturers and distributors of newsprint paper tend to create a monopoly in the supplying of newsprint paper to publishers of small daily and weekly newspapers or constitute a violation of the antitrust laws, and (2) to report to the Senate by filing with the Secretary thereof preliminary reports at intervals of not more than 30 days during such investigation, and, as soon as practicable, a final report to the results of such investigation and the evidence taken at such hearings, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

CONCURRENT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

The following concurrent resolutions were referred to the Committee on Printing:

House Concurrent Resolution 56

Concurrent resolution to provide for the printing and binding of the proceedings in Congress and in Statuary Hall of the unveiling upon the acceptance of the statues of Henry Clay and Dr. Ephraim McDowell, presented by the State of Kentucky; and for the distribution of the 2,500 copies authorized to be printed;

And

House Concurrent Resolution 57

Concurrent resolution to provide for the printing of the first edition of the Congressional Directory of the first session of the Seventy-first Congress.

LOAD LINES FOR AMERICAN VESSELS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1781) to establish load lines for American vessels, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. I move that the Senate decline to agree to the amendments of the House, ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. JONES, Mr. McNARY, and Mr. RANSDELL conferees on the part of the Senate.

OREGON CAVES IN SISKIYOU NATIONAL FOREST, OREG.

Mr. McNARY submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3162) to authorize the improvement of the Oregon Caves in the Siskiyou National Forest, Oreg., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

CHAS. L. McNARY,
E. D. SMITH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

DON B. COLTON,
SAM B. HILL,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF HEALTH

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask unanimous consent to read a very brief letter from the great philanthropist, Nathan Straus, of New York, relative to the bill introduced by me to create a national institute of health.

The letter is dated New York, November 21, 1928, and reads as follows:

Hon. JOSEPH E. RANSDELL,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR RANSDELL: I herewith inclose a clipping of a letter which I addressed to the editor of the New York Times on February 21. I think this will interest you, and therefore call your attention to it.

I want to take this occasion to congratulate you on this splendid bill, which I hope will be successful in passing.

Very sincerely yours,

NATHAN STRAUS.

The clipping inclosed by Mr. Straus reads as follows:

WORK FOR HEALTH—REASONS FOR ACTION BY THE NATIONAL AUTHORITIES

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

I wish to congratulate you on your helpful editorial in this morning's Times entitled "The Nation's Health," advocating that the bill introduced by Senator RANSDELL to create a national institute of health shall not be halted by a dissenting vote in the Senate.

The indorsement of the leading scientific institutions and of the foremost educators and health experts, such as Doctor Mayo, Doctor Wilbur, Doctor Johnson, of Yale, and Doctor Hunt, of Harvard, is sufficient authority to convince anyone that the creation of a national institute of health is a most urgent and most beneficial measure to help prevention of disease and prolongation of life.

For many years, ever since I devoted my attention and my means to these problems, I have advocated just such a measure, and I am happy that the national health institute is about to come into being. I can hardly conceive that a single voice will be raised in the Senate to delay the creation of this institute. There is no valid reason that could be advanced by onyone that would justify the losses in human health and in human life through postponement and procrastination.

There is no way in which greater good can be done to humanity than by protecting health and saving lives by preventing disease and warding off death. I have believed this for many years, and now, at the age of 81, I am more convinced of it than ever before.

The bill before the Senate has the approval of Secretary Mellon, and doubtless also of President Coolidge. It is my fondest hope that this measure will be passed without further delay.

NATHAN STRAUS.

NEW YORK, February 20, 1929.

I simply wish to add that Mr. Straus is one of the greatest life-savers and public benefactors the world has ever produced. He was the founder, in 1892, of a pasteurized-milk laboratory in New York, under the beneficent effects of which it is estimated there was a saving of 437,947 lives of children under 5 years of age during the 35 years from 1892 to 1927, inclusive. He is a wise and good man, who has devoted his fine intellect and vast wealth to the prevention of sickness and relief of human suffering in America and other countries. I hope his advice will be followed and the health institute bill be speedily passed without a dissenting vote.

ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT COOLIDGE

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, last evening at the Washington Auditorium the President of the United States made an entertaining address in which he made references of interest to the life of George Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the address may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

My fellow countrymen, compared with some of the older nations, our holidays are few in number. Being less frequent, they are given a more formal observance. With the possible exception of the Fourth Day of July, none of them on the secular side arouses any more popular interest than the birthday of George Washington. Of course, he is honored for what he did. He was the leader in a successful struggle for independence, which gave him a justified military reputation. He was also the foremost influence in securing the adoption of our Federal Constitution, which gave us a free Republic. Naturally, he was chosen the first President. In this office he brought into practical operation the theories of our National Government, which demonstrated that he was not only a military leader but a sound and patriotic statesman. In addition to all his public service, he was a man of affairs. He ranks as the best business man of his day. Had there been no Revolutionary War he would undoubtedly have become the foremost colonial figure of his time.

It is because of his success in so many fields of action that his memory makes such a wide appeal. Wherever men love liberty we find a veneration for the name of George Washington. Wherever there are aspirations for a free government, whether already in being or in future expectation, there is admiration for the institutions he established. Wherever purity of character and self-sacrificing public service are admired, his name is honored and revered. Almost alone of the great figures of history, he can be accepted without any qualifications or reservations. Not only is his fame world-wide but his life is held in universal respect.

In a day when tilling the soil went mostly by the rule of thumb, we find him developing agriculture in a scientific way. While others were speculating, usually at a loss, he was investing in land and making a profit. When the political thought of his day was centered for the most part in each local colony, he had the vision to see and the understanding to comprehend the advantages of a Federal Union. Although his own State of Virginia had a college in his youth, and there were others in the North, with the possible exception of some short studies in surveying, he did not attend any of the higher institutions of learning. Yet he became a well-educated man himself, and in many of his public statements, and finally in his will, he was careful to disclose his views on the importance to republican institutions, of Government-supported free schools, and opportunities for higher education.

Here again he showed distinctly that he was nationally minded, because he coupled the personal benefits of a centralized university training with the cultivation of a national spirit in the students. Since his day so many local colleges and State universities have been established that the provisions of his will have never been put into execution. Yet it is a satisfaction to have this institution at least bearing his name in the National Capital. The views which he expressed on the all-important subject of education have that ring of truth and that soundness which makes them apply with the same force to-day as they had when they were uttered.

Although he, like Lincoln, did not have opportunity to take a college degree, yet, like the Great Emancipator, the Father of his Country had the advantage of working with a citizenship which was well permeated with college men, whom he constantly sought for his advisers in positions of responsibility. It should always be remembered that unless many of their associates had secured the liberal education which comes from college training, the career of both Washington and Lincoln would have been utterly impossible. Without well-educated leaders and general diffusion of learning among the people they would have had no success.

Outside of college walls, but usually under the guidance of competent instruction, Washington was a most painstaking and thorough student. He gained the position which he held through application to hard work. By that means his mind became well trained. He knew how to think.

Not only in what Washington said do we find much wise counsel relating to education, but we find even more in the man himself. His life justifies the existence and demonstrates the necessity of institutions for giving to our youth that broad culture which comes from application to a course in the liberal arts. We need men of technical training. They are much more necessary now than they were in the Revolutionary period. We could not maintain our modern life for any length of time without them. Washington himself would be entitled to considerable rank as an engineer in his day. It is necessary for our progress to have individuals who make a life study of one subject to the exclusion of everything else. The danger to them and from them lies in their becoming lost in particulars. While they are wonderfully skilled in their own subject, they often do not comprehend its relation to other subjects.

There would be a place in the world for the soldier and sailor who could see nothing but national defense, a place for the pacifist who would never engage in war and had no comprehension of international relations, for the physicist who had little interest in spiritual ideals, and a place in every large enterprise for the experts in accounting, in production, in transportation, and in merchandising, though they might understand nothing of the broad principles of political economy. But these talents will reach their greatest usefulness only when directed and coordinated by the wisdom of a comprehending executive who may not always know but who rarely fails to understand.

It was in this field that Washington appears to have excelled. He could not have written the Declaration of Independence. Yet, as a statesman he was easily the superior of Jefferson. He could not have prepared the intricate report on manufactures. Yet, he was a far better business man than Hamilton. His words and actions were such that he inspired confidence. The country followed him because it trusted him. They were willing to take his judgment concerning subjects which they did not themselves comprehend. In him was the essence of all great leadership, a power which gives men faith. The people looked on him and believed. They believed in themselves, in their country, and in their future destiny. In that faith they conquered.

It is possible that this kind of talent is born, not made. Yet, as we study the lives of those who have possessed it, we can not escape the conviction that it is enlarged by rigorous training. The only military experience that Lincoln ever had was a few days' service in the Black Hawk War, to which he always referred to with a mixture of amusement. Yet from his early youth we find him constantly employed in the deepest of study trying to learn how to think. Mathematical accuracy was no mere figure of speech with him. His old note papers show that he was engaged in demonstrating his conclusions in accordance with the principles of geometry. When he came to be tried out in a great conflict the dispatches he sent to his armies in the field indicate that his military judgment was unsurpassed by that of any of his generals. When the great Jefferson, master writer, brilliantly discoursing on the rights of man, was markedly indifferent to declaring and defending the rights of his countrymen it was the practical Washington who was bending all his energies to make the rights of man a reality by establishing this Republic under a Federal Constitution.

In all the efforts which our institutions of learning are making to develop science they ought not to fail to put a large emphasis on the development of wisdom. We shall fail, if we put all our endowments, all our honor, and all our efforts into our technical schools and leave unsupported our schools of liberal arts. It will be found just as impossible to secure progress without them as it is to secure civilization without religion.

In addition to the great example of his life, he left a legacy of wise advice and counsel to his fellow countrymen concerning their relations to each other, to their Government, and to their God. As he was about to leave the Army at the close of the Revolutionary War in June, 1783, he issued a letter addressed to the governors of the several States in which he summed up his solicitous interest in the cultivation of good citizenship in the following paragraph:

"I now make it my earnest prayer that God would have you, and the State over which you preside, in His holy protection; that He would incline the hearts of the citizens to cultivate a spirit of subordination and obedience to government; to entertain a brotherly affection and love for one another, for their fellow citizens of the United States at large, and particularly for their brethren who have served in the field; and, finally, that He would most graciously be pleased to dispose us all to do justice, to love mercy, and to demean ourselves with that charity, humility, and pacific temper of mind which were the characteristics of the Divine Author of our blessed religion, and without an humble imitation of whose example in these things we can never hope to be a happy nation."

His better-known Farewell Address contains nothing finer than this simple, direct, but all-embracing admonition.

Washington was one of the first in a practical way to conceive of the United States as an independent establishment. Before him it had been a Province. After him it was a Nation. Even following the Revolution there were many people in this country who clung to the old thought that we were a European dependency. If we were not to look to England, then we must look to France. It was the clear belief of Washington that we must look to ourselves. Habits of thought live on. There are still those among us who have an inferiority complex, and there are still people in Europe who regard us as a Province. He therefore warned us in his Farewell Address to beware of permanent and political alliances. The phrase entangling alliances is not from him, but from Jefferson.

In the thought of that day an alliance meant the banding together of two or more nations for offensive and defensive purposes against certain other nations either expressed or implied. It was a purely artificial creation. It had no reference to an association of practically all nations in an attempt to recognize their common interests and discharge their common obligations. While we should at all times defend our own independence and maintain our own sovereignty, we should not forget that all nations as well as all individuals have natural and inalienable rights "of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," in the words of Jefferson, and, while we should fail disgracefully in our mission in the world if we did not protect those rights for ourselves, we shall also fail if we do not respect them in others.

This principle was clearly understood by our first President, and, being understood, he did not hesitate to put it into operation. When the French undertook to interfere in our affairs in such a way as to threaten the integrity of our Government, he called them to account. When our own citizens, on the other hand, were resentfully refusing to recognize the rights of English subjects, Washington was equally insistent that our Government and our citizens should faithfully discharge their legal obligations—even to our Tory enemies. The Revolutionary War inevitably left many undecided questions pending between the United States and Great Britain. There was the question of turning over to this country certain outposts. There were also certain boundary disputes, which were not adjusted until well into the next century. These in turn were followed by differences concerning fisheries. Of course, everyone recalls the difficulties under which we suffered as neutrals during the Napoleonic era, which resulted in the War of 1812. A like experience came to us in the World War. We have also had issues arise, sometimes of a serious and threatening nature, with many other countries. We had them during the early period of our national life and shall undoubtedly continue to have them in the future. Both foreign and domestic affairs will constantly produce new questions for consideration.

Those who feel in a considerable state of alarm when they learn that there are subjects requiring diplomatic adjustment at the present time would probably be somewhat relieved if they would consider the history of our international relations. So long as we continue as a Nation we shall have such relations. Because there are matters which require adjustment is no reason for grave concern. There are more and more methods by which the certainty increases that they will be composed.

It is possible to say of our foreign relations at the present time that they have rarely been in a more happy condition. The uncertainties which existed south of the Rio Grande have been very much relieved. The domestic disorders in Central America are being adjusted with a satisfaction that is almost universal. Even the mouths of those who would rather criticize us than have us do right have been stopped. The recent Pan American Congress held in Washington exhibited a spirit of friendliness and good will which was most gratifying. Competent and experienced observers have assured me that our relations with South America are on the most satisfactory basis that they have been for 25 years. On the far side of the Pacific our situation is equally satisfactory. We have no important unadjusted problem with the government of any European nation, with the exception of Russia. Outside of that country all the issues that arose, even out of the World War, have been adjusted.

Of course, our citizens meet the citizens of other countries in commercial rivalry in the market places of the world. That will always continue. It is the natural and inevitable result of foreign trade. But it does not raise any issue between our Government and other governments. We believe in a policy of national defense and maintain an Army and a Navy for that purpose. Other countries have similar military establishments. We are committed to the principle of limitation of armaments. The other great powers through the public opinion of their people and the binding obligation of their treaties are more firmly committed to this principle than we are. Each government is conscientiously seeking to extend this principle. It does not raise any issue among us.

It seems desirable to mention this subject in order that the people of the United States may have my opinion concerning it. We have recently had a national campaign in which, of course, the opposition party was expected to criticize the foreign policy of the Government and suggest that important unsettled issues were gravely interfering with the friendly attitude which we desire to cultivate abroad. In other countries there will be similar campaigns, where the parties out of power will criticize their governments in a like manner. There was nothing in our election to indicate that our own country took such statements seriously, and I therefore trust they will not be taken seriously abroad.

For the same reason, our people should not take seriously the campaign utterances of those who may be seeking to supersede the governments in power in other countries. Political utterances of this nature should be carefully differentiated from statements by responsible Government authorities. I should like the people of the United States to know that at the present time there are no questions of importance awaiting settlement between our Government and any of the European governments with which we have relations. Our Government is on the most cordial and friendly terms with all of them.

Because this is true, there should be an attitude of kindness and good will between our people and all the European people. Whenever we see statements constantly made and seriously entertained concerning the conduct and intentions of our Government likely to prejudice it at home or abroad, there comes a time when a candid presentation of the facts is required to promote a state of better understanding. Such an expression is entirely different from a constant attitude of fault-finding and hostility toward everything that is foreign. The governments are friendly. The people and the press should be friendly. The respect and confidence of European governments is especially evidenced by the unanimous request, not to say insistence, that citizens of the United States should contribute their assistance and counsel in the effort to make a final adjustment of the problem of reparations.

Of course, in past negotiations we have reached conclusions with them through the necessary process of give and take, but their actions have demonstrated that their governments feel that our conduct has been such that they can trust us. After all, the great measure of our standing in the world is determined by whether other nations turn to us for assistance when they have difficulties among themselves. Our very detachment puts us in the position where we are constantly rendering a service to the world which would not otherwise be possible. While we are not associated with any particular foreign group, in the last analysis they all know that they can apply to us when they are in need of friendly offices.

This is the position which I judge Washington wished his country to occupy. While he warned us against alliances with any, he was no less urgent in counseling the maintenance of friendly relations with all. As our strength has increased, as our power to maintain our independent position has grown, the wisdom of his warning and his counsel has become more and more apparent. Some nations are so situated that it has been and is now necessary for them to seek understandings with others in order to perpetuate their own existence. Others have interests so detached and territory so scattered that they can best protect themselves by some method of regional relations. Our situation is such that we are and can remain unhampered by any such necessities. We do not seek isolation for its own sake, or in order that we may avoid responsibility, but we cherish our position of unprejudiced detachment, because through that means we can best meet our world obligations.

If we became closely identified with any specific grouping of nations, however advantageous it might be to us, we could not hope to continue to perform that service.

As we study the statesmanship of Washington, as we see it demonstrated in our domestic and foreign experience, he becomes a larger and larger figure. The clearness of his intellect, the soundness of his judgment, the wisdom of his counsel, the disinterested patriotism of his actions, are constantly revealed to us with a new and compelling force. The reverence for his memory continues to increase. The people of the United States feel that they were exalted in his victory. The people of England feel that even in the defeat of their arms abroad he carried their ideals to victory at home. Such a conquest could not be made save by an exponent of universal truth.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on behalf of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the minutes of the twenty-fifth annual meeting held in this city February 24, 1928.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The minutes are as follows:

THE AMERICAN GROUP OF THE INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNUAL MEETING, FEBRUARY 24, 1928

(Stenographic report of the minutes)

The twenty-fifth annual meeting of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union was held in the committee room of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., this day, beginning at 10.30 o'clock a. m., Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON, the president, presiding. Those present who took part in the proceedings were: Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON, president; Hon. ANDREW J. MONTAGUE, vice president; Hon. ADOLPH J. SABATH, treasurer; Arthur Deerin Call, executive secretary; Hon. SOL BLOOM, Hon. FRED A. BRITTEN, Hon. CARL R. CHINDBLOM, Hon. HENRY ALLEN COOPER, Hon. EDGAR HOWARD, Hon. JED JOHNSON, Hon. JAMES G. MCLAUGHLIN, Hon. MELVIN J. MAAS, Hon. STEPHEN G. PORTER, Hon. FRED S. PURNELL, Hon. ELMER THOMAS and Hon. HENRY W. WATSON.

The PRESIDENT. The meeting will please come to order. Shall we listen to the reading of the minutes?

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY (Mr. Call). Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the minutes of the last meeting were printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for February 16, 1928. You may wish, therefore, to omit the reading of the minutes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I move that the reading of the minutes be omitted.

(Upon being put to vote, the reading of the minutes was dispensed with.)

The PRESIDENT. Now comes the executive secretary's report.

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY (Mr. Call). Mr. Chairman, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for February 16 contains our by-laws and a fairly complete report for the year. The Paris conference report, however, lacks two things which ought to be a part of the record, and I therefore call your attention to them here.

One is the fact that Mr. Bartholdt, who is a life member of the Interparliamentary Union, delivered an address and presented a draft treaty for general arbitration. The address appears in the Compte Rendu of the conference, and the treaty has been printed in the Bulletin of the Interparliamentary Union.

Mr. William D. B. Ainey, of Harrisburg, Pa., also a life member of our group and of the union, called a meeting in Paris, at which he reviewed the pre-war activities of the American-Japanese section of the Interparliamentary Union, which were suspended during the war.

On motion of Hon. ROY G. FITZGERALD, Member of Congress, Mr. Ainey was unanimously elected president of this section, and upon a similar motion Hon. K. Nakamura, member of the Imperial Parliament of Japan, was unanimously elected vice president.

Upon motion, it was unanimously agreed that the president and vice president be authorized, after conference with their respective groups, to arrange a program for the next meeting of the American-Japanese section. All the Japanese and American representatives to the Paris conference of the Interparliamentary Union, either personally or by authority, expressed their adherence to and interest in the organization of the American-Japanese section.

A list of the representatives, either actually present or represented by such authorizations, revealed that there are 8 Japanese and 14 American members of the group.

We have received 20 copies of the report of the Paris conference, all but 3 of which have been distributed. Extra copies have been ordered from Geneva.

I think it ought to be mentioned again that the Interparliamentary Union publishes bimonthly a periodical known as the Interparliamentary Bulletin. That is the official organ of the Interparliamentary Union. It contains documents of importance and outlines of what is going on in the Interparliamentary Union from time to time. If any of you wish that bulletin, it will cost 40 cents a year in American money. The Interparliamentary Union publishes other publications.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How generally is that bulletin sent now to members of the union here?

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. I think it is about 20 copies now that are distributed here. That is a copy of it [exhibiting copy].

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is that in French?

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. No; it is in English. It is issued in English, French, and German.

Now, gentlemen, you will be interested to know that the council of the Interparliamentary Union is to have a meeting on the 2d day of April, 1928, the place of the meeting being Prague, Czechoslovakia. The final convocation will be shortly sent out. Here is the agenda of that meeting of the council. I mention it to you because we have two members of the council, Mr. BURTON and Mr. MONTAGUE, and whether or not we should be represented at the meeting of the council is for this body to decide.

There will be on the agenda the approval of the minutes of the previous meeting; communication of the program of the bureau for 1928; report of the auditors; convocation of the twenty-fifth conference; fixation of the agenda of the conference and communication of certain draft resolutions to be submitted to the conference; application of Article X of the statutes fixing the number of votes allowed to each group at the next conference.

You know we are allowed now under the rule to be represented by 24 delegates. It is probable that on this agenda there will be a revision of certain provisions in the statutes and regulations on the basis of proposals made by the organizations committee. It is probable that they will nominate a treasurer of the union.

There is nothing very startling on this agenda. It is not expected that the council will make any vital alteration in the program of the Berlin conference, which is fixed as follows:

First. General debate.

Second. The evolution of the representative system.

Third. Migration problems.

Fourth. Drafting of Fundamental Principles for the Collective Life of States.

In connection with the evolution of the Representative system——

Mr. COOPER. What was that last one?

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. Drafting of Fundamental Principles for the Collective Life of States.

Mr. COOPER. What does that mean?

The PRESIDENT. A platform in regard to the relations of the respective States to each other. The propositions that have been laid down by the committee are given on page 231 of the Interparliamentary Bulletin for November and December, and if we have time I will read that.

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. In connection with the evolution of the representative system, attention is called to the publications which the bureau has issued, containing the answers of the five specialists in political economy consulted by the political committee on the question of the representative system.

The PRESIDENT. If I may interrupt there for a minute, I would suggest to the members the reading of those articles. They are exceedingly valuable to any student of parliamentary procedure, the place that the government parliaments should have in the government of nations, the question whether parliamentary bodies are losing prestige, and the reasons therefor. Those are to be published in a book which costs four Swiss francs.

I am frank to say I have not read them all. There is one by Prof. Harold J. Laski, professor of political science at the London School of Economics which contains some of the most valuable suggestions in regard to legislative bodies that I have ever met. Then there is Professor Bonn, professor of the Institute of Higher Commercial Studies, at Berlin; Professor Borgeaud, professor of the University of Geneva; Professor Larnaude, dean and emeritus professor of the faculty of law of Paris University; and Prof. Gaetano Mosca, senator of the Kingdom of Italy and professor at the University of Rome.

One or two of these men represent a class of representatives in legislative bodies that we would hardly have in this country, men whose main activities are devoted to studies, professors in universities who are members of the senate or of the other house and have thereby a legislative connection. I most cordially recommend the reading of those articles. They are in English, and you will learn a great deal that is valuable.

Mr. HOWARD. Where will we find them?

The PRESIDENT. They are scattered through these issues of the Interparliamentary Bulletin. For instance, the issue for November-December has two. They are entitled "The Crisis in the Parliamentary System." Some one made the suggestion that legislative bodies were losing their hold, and thus that expression, "The Crisis," is used as the title. The November-December issue has the articles by Professor Bonn and Prof. Gaetano Mosca.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is that the beginning of the series?

The PRESIDENT. No. Those are all, I believe.

Mr. COOPER. They are to be in one volume?

The PRESIDENT. One volume.

A VOICE. How can that be procured?

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. If you will give me your name and address, I will send it or see that it is sent to you.

The PRESIDENT. Those discussions, while in a measure academic, are one of the most valuable activities of the Interparliamentary Union.

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. In addition to the council meeting, which is to be held in Prague, there will be held March 29 and March 30 meetings of the juridical and political and organization committees sitting simultaneously. These two committees will have to prepare the final draft of the resolutions on the drafting of "Fundamental principles for the collective life of states" and "The evolution of the representative system" to be submitted to the conference in July.

The political and organization committee will also discuss the question of amending certain provisions in the statutes and regulations in order to bring them into conformity with the present practice.

On March 21 the committee for social questions, to prepare a report on immigration problems, will meet with the executive committee.

Prague has been chosen as a place of meeting on the invitation of the Czechoslovak group. The group, moreover, intends to arrange for facilities to be extended to the delegates to enable them to visit the country. Czechoslovakia, as you know, is not only interesting for its picturesqueness, but also offers to the student of economic and political questions a valuable study of a country in the process of evolving national unity out of fragments of what used to be the Austro-Hungarian Empire. This, together with the interesting nature of the questions before the various committees, leads the bureau at Geneva to hope that they will have present representatives from the American group at Prague the latter part of March and the first of April.

The PRESIDENT. In that connection I want to state that we are at very considerable disadvantage at these meetings of the Interparliamentary Union for the reason that the propositions to be brought up before each successive conference are considered at these meetings of the council. I consider that it would be impracticable for either Governor MONTAGUE or myself to attend that meeting at Prague at the ending of March and the beginning of April; and the result, of course, will be that we shall go to a meeting of the conference and find certain resolutions already drafted.

We have always been listened to with the utmost respect, but in order to give the fullest effect to the activities of this group it is quite desirable that we should be present at those sessions. That could be partly provided for by our framing of resolutions on the respective subjects to be considered and forwarding them before the committees of the council meet.

Mr. HOWARD. Would it not be possible, in view of the fact that our President and Vice President say that they can not attend, to secure volunteers?

The PRESIDENT. If anyone can go and will volunteer, that will be very good, but I take it that it being a season when the Congress is in session here, and probably at the height of its activity, it would be very difficult to get anyone to go. Again, it would have to be some one who is familiar with the general work of the union and of the activities of the conference.

Mr. HOWARD. My colleagues have no opposition in the primary.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Congress is in session.

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. Mr. President, there is one other thing to report, and that ends my report, and that is that the next meeting of the conference of the Interparliamentary Union will be held in the city of Berlin, upon the invitation of the German group, probably from July 15 on, lasting for about a week.

The PRESIDENT. It all depends on the time the elections are to be held in Germany. If the election is to be postponed until some time, say, in the summer—June or July—that means one thing. If the elections are held earlier, there would probably be an adjournment, and they wish the conference to meet while the Reichstag is in session. I have very strongly urged in the meeting of council the latest convenient date. In that I was supported by the English delegates. Their Parliament usually remains in session until the end of July, and I am satisfied they will give all possible attention to the joint requests of the two countries.

I should very much regret if we are not to be represented at that meeting, because we were at Paris, and if we do not attend the conference in Germany it would evoke some unfriendly feeling. On the other hand, it is a question whether we could get away from here after the adjournment of Congress in time to attend. The promise is that they will cable me when the council meets, about the 1st of April, and then I will circulate the notice around as to when it is to occur.

Is there anything further, Mr. Call?

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. No, sir.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Secretary, I would like to make an inquiry with regard to procedure about the union. As you will recall, last summer in Paris all of the American resolutions with regard to the narcotic-drug traffic were approved, but before leaving I left another one which reads as follows:

"The Interparliamentary Conference, recognizing that, according to the scientific and medical opinion of the world, drug addiction is a disease which demands public regulation and correction, and believing that the proper treatment of those given to drug addiction, important as it is from a humanitarian standpoint, will also lessen the demand for narcotic drugs, and thus effect a curtailment of the illicit traffic and a reduction in production, recommends for the consideration of the groups of the union the adoption of measures by the governments concerned with a view to the compulsory treatment of drug addicts.

"The Interparliamentary Bureau is requested to transmit the present resolution of the groups of the union and to all the governments and parliaments of the world."

I left that resolution with Mr. Lange, assuming that that would become a part of the record, but I have a letter here from him in which he says:

"You handed me, before leaving Paris, draft of a resolution containing recommendation for adoption of measures by the governments as to compulsory treatment of drug addicts. I had no occasion to lay this before the committee."

When would that be considered under the rules of the Parliamentary Union? As I understand it, it must go to the committee first, as the other resolutions did.

The PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. And then would be reported out at the plenary session?

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. That would naturally come up, I should say, before the council in Prague.

Mr. PORTER. Do you think it would be necessary for me to reintroduce it or send it in again?

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. If you will give me a copy of it, I will send it.

The PRESIDENT. That would rather emphasize it, I think. Suppose we introduce a resolution with regard to that, and if it be the opinion of the group that that should be so, let us send that on to the meeting there in March and April. I can readily realize how that was lost in the shuffle at the end of the session. Those things have to go to the council and committee before they are considered.

Mr. PORTER. Well, I will say to the group that it is in entire harmony with a bill which I introduced the other day. We have about 6,500 prisoners in the Federal penitentiaries, which can only accommodate about 3,000. Between two thousand and twenty-three hundred of those prisoners are drug addicts. The country, and I guess the medical profession, has now come around to the view that drug addiction is a disease, and not a vice, in an overwhelming majority of cases. So I introduced a bill the other day, in view of the fact that we had to build new penitentiaries, that instead of building new penitentiaries we build a couple of institutions for the care of these addicts, giving the Attorney General the power to remove the addicts, in his discretion, from the penitentiaries to these institutions for proper treatment.

I will not take your time too much with it, but if a man is suffering from drug addiction he will never recover in a prison cell. He needs fresh air, good food, and healthy environment, and the moment they discharge the man with, say, $10 or $15 in his pocket and with his frenzied desire for this drug, he will commit many crimes in order to secure money to buy the drug, and I have discussed this with a great many people, and it seems to meet with the unanimous approval of everyone, especially of members, and I am very anxious to have this resolution considered at the next meeting of the Interparlimentary Union. Of course, our own local bill will take care of the situation here.

The PRESIDENT. There are two courses to pursue. It is already there and naturally would be considered by the committee, but we can reinforce that by sending a letter asking them—I could send it myself or the Secretary could—or if the group thinks it best we might pass a resolution giving special consideration to it.

Mr. PORTER. That would give it greater force.

The PRESIDENT. Yes. If you will introduce such a resolution that the group approve that proposition, we can discuss and present it, and do I understand that you do introduce it as a motion?

Mr. PORTER. Yes.

The PRESIDENT. You have heard the motion.

Mr. HOWARD. Just what was the motion?

The PRESIDENT. That the group approve the resolution presented by Mr. PORTER and transmit it to the secretary general of the Interparliamentary Union, a copy of which has been read.

Mr. HOWARD. I move that the group approve that resolution.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I second that motion.

(The motion was put and unanimously carried.)

The PRESIDENT. Now, I think perhaps it might be well for you, Mr. PORTER, to state briefly what occurred in the meetings of the Union at Paris. I regarded the acceptance of the American contentions with regard to the use of narcotics as one of the triumphs of our delegation at that time. The resolution has been pending for some time before the Paris group. You may say that they accepted in toto your contentions?

Mr. PORTER. Yes. It is rather difficult to boil it down. As you know, the Geneva Opium Conference was held in 1923 and 1924. I was chairman of the American delegation, and we withdrew largely because we could not get the British and French and Portuguese and Spanish to fix a definite time for the suppression of the traffic in prepared opium, as provided in Article VI, of chapter 2, of The Hague Opium Convention. In that article the contracting power agreed to suppress progressively the traffic in prepared opium.

Prepared opium is that which is used for smoking or eating. It is eaten in India and smoked in the colonies of these European powers out in the Orient. We contended that, 10 years having elapsed and that no effort had been made to suppress this traffic in the colonies of these four countries, we were entitled to have a definite time fixed. We fixed 10 years. Later we increased it to 15 years, and still later, in the final hope of coming to some sort of an agreement, I offered to make it 15 years, and it should not take effect until the treaty was ratified; but I found that, largely on account of revenue, it was impossible, and we withdrew. There were other matters, but that was the main one.

You see, they produce opium out there by the hundreds of tons, and the seepage from that opium or from the transportation of that opium enters our country through the smokers and causes a great deal of trouble. Brushing aside, of course, the idea of having one law for the East and one for the West, it is a penitentiary offense to sell a grain of morphine in the United States or England or France or any of those countries, while you can buy it by hundreds of pounds in the Orient, just like you buy groceries.

When the Interparliamentary Union met in Washington, Doctor Brabec, of Czechoslovakia, brought over a resolution urging ratification of the treaty which was made at Geneva. As I recall the language of his resolution it was this: That, while these treaties made only somewhat of a modest advance, the Interparliamentary Union urged their ratification and also that the defects be cured. I got into conference with Doctor Brabec and finally convinced him that a body representing the members of the highest legislative bodies in the world could hardly afford to say that these treaties were practically valueless and still urge their ratification. Doctor Brabec agreed with me about it, and the resolution was put in this form, that after the treaties had been perfected, as suggested in the resolution, that they should be ratified.

It was not considered in Washington for some reason. It was postponed to Ottawa, so I went up to Ottawa about a week later, and there they had two items on the agenda—the rights of minorities and opium. The debate on the rights of minorities was to be closed at 3 o'clock, but they discussed it until 6, when Sir Robert Horne got up, and I will never forget it—I have seen steam rollers before—but he said, "I venture to suggest in all humiliation that we have a dinner with the Canadian Parliament at 8 o'clock, and this matter should go over to the Geneva meeting next summer," and the chairman of the meeting announced that there would only be the one subject heard, and there was a vote of 39 to 37 in favor of postponement. So then I went to Geneva the next summer.

The PRESIDENT. That was not a meeting of the conference. That was a meeting of the committees.

Mr. PORTER. Of the committees, and I not only advocated Doctor Brabec's resolution, but introduced two of my own, one the original American proposition, urging the governments, or those governments which had not done so, to agree to stop the traffic in prepared opium within 10 years; also, a resolution urging the governments to prohibit the manufacture of heroin, which we have done in this country two years ago, on the recommendation of the American Medical Association. I may say, in regard to heroin, that it is by all odds the most dangerous of these drugs.

A VOICE. What is heroin made of?

Mr. PORTER. Heroin is made out of morphine. It is briefly this: The medical profession has never been able to find a substitute for morphine. Without morphine the practice of medicine would be a most unhappy one, and that is the difficulty in suppressing the traffic in morphine. We must have it for people who are dying with cancer and tuberculosis. But it has the bad effect of nausea and is habit forming. For hundreds of years we have been trying to find a substitute for it. A German chemist about 1906 found a substitute. It was widely advertised all over the world as the long-sought-for substitute, but it was not applicable. It was taken up by many American physicians, who became addicted to heroin, and we now know that it is the most dangerous of all drugs, and the American Medical Association in 1923 condemned its use.

There is only one instance where it is of any value, and that is in the case of very severe bronchitis; but there is another drug, codeine, which takes it place. But heroin—and I want to impress this upon you—if we can solve the heroin problem we have gone a long ways. The discovery of heroin and its sale throughout the world is responsible for the serious condition of addiction that we have to-day. The morphine addict, as a rule, does not do any particular harm to society, unless his craze for the drug is such, and he can not buy it, he will resort to crime to obtain it.

So I presented that resolution, and your president will remember we had quite a contest at Geneva, and the vote on the heroin was unanimous, the vote on the limitation of the production of arsenic was unanimous, but the vote upon fixing a definite time for the suppression of the traffic in opium was nine to seven, Great Britain and Yugoslavia opposing it.

When we got to Paris the resolutions were called up and they were all passed. The only opposition came from the British, and that was for fixing a definite period for the suppression of this traffic in prepared opium.

The difficulty there, I might as well be perfectly candid about it, is twofold: In many of those colonies the revenue derived from the government cocaine shops goes quite a long ways toward paying the expenses of the colonial governments. In the Straits Settlements it is about 47 per cent; in India it is about 7 per cent, and in the Dutch East Indies it is about the same. In Indo-China the French get about 26 per cent. Of course, that was the real opposition, and then there was another element in it. A great many of the Chinese coolies drift into these settlements, where they perform the menial labor. They naturally seek the association of their own countrymen. Many of these are smokers and many of the new men acquire the habit, and once a man acquires the smoking habit he is a slave; he is helpless. It is not like a man getting drunk, and they have to increase the dose as the tolerance of the system increases, until finally they get in a condition of abject slavery, and it insures a steady supply of menial labor throughout the entire season at the rubber and poppy and the other plantations.

There are two elements in it, the revenue and the question of menial labor.

This resolution, while it may sound rather innocent on its face, I think will be quite helpful, because when we press it, it is going to put these countries that have held back on the suppression of drug traffic in rather an awkward position. They can not recommend to their people the compulsory treatment of drug addicts, while at the same time they are deriving large revenue from the traffic.

I would like to say this: I regard these meetings of the Interparliamentary Union as very valuable; if for nothing else, it gives one valuable contacts. I have been enabled to reach an understanding with two governments through these conferences, and I know it is going to be productive of very helpful results.

Mr. WATSON. Where did the chief opposition come from?

Mr. PORTER. The British and Yugoslavs.

Mr. WATSON. Was it developed that the people over there were stockholders in the companies engaged in this traffic?

Mr. PORTER. Oh, no; this is a government monopoly.

The PRESIDENT. It is a very old question, reaching back to the war in China in about 1838 or 1840. Yugoslavia also is a producer of opium, and they oppose it. It was a matter of very serious opposition, especially in the meeting of the council and the committee at Geneva in 1926, but at Paris in 1927 the resolution was adopted substantially.

Mr. WATSON. Where does Yugoslavia produce opium?

The PRESIDENT. They produce a great share, about a million pounds' worth, they say.

Mr. WATSON. Of poppy?

The PRESIDENT. Yes, of poppy; and from that opium.

Mr. WATSON. Where do they produce it?

The PRESIDENT. I do not know what part of the country it is.

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. Their sales amount to about $5,000,000 a year.

The PRESIDENT. Yugoslavia and Turkey produce high-class opium.

Mr. SABATH. I think it is in the State of Herzegovina, in the southern section of Yugoslavia.

The PRESIDENT. At any rate, that was the country that opposed the proposition at Geneva.

Are there are any other reports of delegates to the twenty-fourth conference? If there are no further remarks in regard to the meeting at Paris, we will pass to the election of officers. Has anybody any motion with regard to that?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I move that Mr. BURTON be elected president of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union.

Mr. HOWARD. I second the motion.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If it is agreeable, can I occupy the chair for a moment and put the question?

The PRESIDENT. Certainly.

The question was put and unanimously carried.

The PRESIDENT. I thank you, gentlemen.

Now, with regard to the other officers, the three vice presidents, the treasurer, the secretary, the executive secretary, and executive committee.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Who are the three vice presidents now, please?

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. The three vice presidents are Representative ANDREW J. MONTAGUE, Representative HENRY W. TEMPLE, and Representative WILLIAM A. OLDFIELD.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. President, I move that the three vice presidents be reelected.

The motion was put and unanimously carried.

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. The treasurer is Representative ADOLPH J. SABATH.

Mr. BRITTEN. Has he ever rendered an accounting?

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. Oh, yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. With that information before the committee, I move that he be reelected.

The motion was put and unanimously carried.

The PRESIDENT. The next is the secretary.

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. Representative JOHN J. MCSWAIN, of South Carolina.

The PRESIDENT. He is not here to-day, but we all know that he takes quite an interest in these matters.

Mr. BRITTEN. I move that he be elected to succeed himself.

The motion was put and unanimously carried.

The PRESIDENT. The executive secretary is Mr. Call.

Mr. HOWARD. I nominate Mr. Call.

The motion was put and unanimously carried.

The PRESIDENT. The executive committee—will you please read the present names?

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. The executive committee consists of Representative THEODORE E. BURTON, chairman ex officio; Representative FRED BRITTEN, Representative TOM CONNALLY, Representative HENRY ALLEN COOPER, Representative CLARENCE F. LEA, Representative JAMES C. MCLAUGHLIN, Senator ALBEN W. BARKLEY, Senator CHARLES CURTIS, Senator JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, and Senator CLAUDE A. SWANSON.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I move the reelection of the executive committee.

The motion was put and unanimously carried.

The PRESIDENT. It is to be borne in mind that no member is excluded from the work of the union because it does not belong on that executive committee. Now, the two members of the council—are they elected here?

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. Yes, sir. The two members of the council are Mr. BURTON and Mr. MONTAGUE.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I nominate Mr. BURTON and Mr. MONTAGUE.

Mr. BRITTEN. I second the nomination.

Mr. HOWARD put the motion and it was unanimously carried.

The PRESIDENT. That completes the election of officers. The next item is "Unfinished business." I want to make one suggestion. There has been a great deal of correspondence in regard to the problem of immigration. That has been up before the union and before the conferences for quite a number of years. We have a definite opinion in this country in that regard, I think, that it is exclusively a domestic question. For instance, in this statement of the fundamental principles for the collective life of states—this is a proposition which will be pending at the meeting at Geneva—I find this statement (sec. 13):

"The right to admit or expulse"—that word "expulse" was chosen by someone not altogether familiar with English—"expulse aliens should be regulated in international conventions containing provisions for the right of appeal."

I think you can readily interpret what that means; that if one country wishes to send its redundant population into another country, its right to do so shall be regulated by treaty between them. It takes it away from the position that we have always maintained in this country, that it is a purely local problem, and makes it international.

After consultation with a considerable number of members of the group, I have taken the liberty to send a cablegram in December, and later a letter to that effect, that we regard that as strictly and purely a domestic problem. If there is any other notion anybody has on it, I would like to hear it.

Mr. COOPER. If I remember correctly, more than one President has announced that that position is not only nonjustifiable, but that we could do nothing else than retain exclusive power in such cases to ourselves. President Roosevelt said so, and he simply confirmed what I think Cleveland had said before. This goes, as I understand, as indicated by you in your statement, to the very life of the Nation; because if they can force any people into a country, they can eventually control the electorate. So it affects the very life of a country; and the country itself, therefore, must be the sole judge in the matter.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I had a letter from Mr. Lange upon that topic. He told me he had written you, Mr. BURTON. I wrote at once to him and told him that that subject was always considered an internal, domestic one; that it was not a subject for international consideration. My attitude upon that subject was not solely an American attitude, I told him; but it was international law. In other words, nations could not pretend to govern the internal affairs of other nations.

The PRESIDENT. The query is whether or not we ought not to introduce a resolution.

Mr. WATSON. In view of the position taken by the two members of the council in the absence of the group and speaking for the group, I think it would be proper now for this body to go on record as ratifying and confirming the position taken by our president and our vice president, with reference to their declaration of this unmistakably American principle.

The PRESIDENT. Would you accept that in any definite form, Mr. HOWARD, a resolution that the group approves the statements of the two members of the council?

Mr. HOWARD. Oh, yes.

The PRESIDENT. That it regards the question of immigration as purely a domestic problem, to be decided by each country, according to its own policies?

Mr. HOWARD. I would accept the very words of the president as the motion.

The PRESIDENT. I do not anticipate that they are going to adopt any such provision as that, but our own policy on that subject is unmistakable.

Mr. HOWARD. This would give notice.

Mr. COOPER. Who drew that, Mr. President, and who approved it?

The PRESIDENT. It was this committee on the collective life of States. I have no idea who drew that.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. President, though I have been a member of the Committee on Immigration for over 20 years, and known as one who favors a liberal immigration law, I will say right now that I have always insisted that it is a purely domestic proposition, and that we should not be dictated to by any nation, but our policy should be that it is for us to say. I believe in fair and humane legislation, treating all nationals as fairly as we can, without discrimination; but that is as far as I ever did go, and as far as I feel we should go. Therefore, I second the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. HOWARD. The substance of the motion is the position assumed by the President in his wire and letter.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The two members of the council.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Should we go a little further, and not only declare our approval of their position, but declare it as the sense of this group?

Mr. PORTER. It might not be out of place to refer to the constitutional provision that gives us exclusive control.

The PRESIDENT. In submitting it over there, I think it would be well to state what the constitutional provision is. I do not know, but that maybe we better have a committee to frame this resolution. We all know what is in our minds.

Mr. HOWARD. I think that would be better.

The PRESIDENT. Shall we submit to vote the question of the general opinion of the group, which is perfectly clear, and then have a committee frame the exact language?

Mr. MONTAGUE. As they sometimes do in the English Parliament. They prove the object and refer it to a committee for the formal language.

The PRESIDENT. Yes. Shall we have a vote on the general proposition?

The motion was put and unanimously carried.

The PRESIDENT. I will ask Mr. CHINDBLOM, Governor MONTAGUE, and Mr. PORTER to frame the language of the resolution, and it might be well to do that at an early date, because it wants to be over there in plenty of time.

Mr. BRITTEN. May I suggest also that Mr. SABATH be on that committee?

The PRESIDENT. Mr. SABATH as well, a committee of four. The only objection to a larger committee is that it is sometimes hard for them to get together. Let me impress upon you the desirability of framing that at an early date. I think it should be framed a little more carefully than we can do just offhand.

Mr. MAAS. Would not it be well to differentiate this question from others and point out that it is purely domestic and its effect is entirely local, so that later on we may not be confronted with that resolution when Mr. PORTER seeks to press his resolution and the British raise the question that it is a matter of internal revenue?

The PRESIDENT. There is a clear distinction between the two, I think.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We have had that principle involved in several cases. The subjects of religion and education have been brought up, and I think the Americans have generally taken the ground that it is our domestic and not an international question.

The PRESIDENT. I am inclined to think the sending of such a resolution as that will prevent the presentation to the conference of any radical proposition on this subject.

Further, under the head of unfinished business, this resolution of Mr. BRITTEN'S should come up. Have you a copy of that?

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. Yes, sir; the resolution reads:

House Resolution 9205, Seventieth Congress, first session

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

January 12, 1928.

Mr. BRITTEN introduced the following bill, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A bill to authorize an appropriation for the American group of the Interparliamentary Union

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to assist in meeting the annual expenses of the Interparliamentary Union there is hereby authorized an appropriation of $10,000.

The PRESIDENT. That is in general about the expense of the Interparliamentary Union.

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. The American group.

The PRESIDENT. Yes. That does not have any specific mention of the expenses of delegates.

Mr. BRITTEN. No; it does not, Mr. Chairman. I felt this way when I introduced that resolution. When I learned that the National Government has never defrayed any part of the annual running expenses of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union, from the purchase of stationery up or down, I introduced this resolution. My thought is, if we are going to continue this body, if it is going to be the representative body of members of the United States Government that it should be, the sum of $10,000 is little enough to come out of the National Treasury for its annual expense.

Mr. HOWARD. Wasn't there an appropriation right along?

Mr. BRITTEN. No.

The PRESIDENT. There have been $6,000 appropriated annually for the activities at Geneva, and Congress did appropriate $50,000 toward the expenses of the twenty-third conference here in 1925. However, that is quite apart from Mr. BRITTEN'S resolution.

Mr. MAAS. Do any of the other governments, the foreign governments, appropriate regularly for the expenses of their representatives?

The PRESIDENT. Oh, yes; particularly the northern countries of Europe, such as Sweden and Denmark.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I want to suggest that the resolution as it reads would relate to the expenses of the Interparliamentary Union itself and not of the American group.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is intended for the American group alone and solely.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It will have to be amended.

Mr. WATSON. Is there anything being paid by the particular groups to the general expenses by themselves?

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, yes. They have always paid their own expenses. This is for the American group itself. You see the difference between the two?

The PRESIDENT. I take it your idea is that this amount should be disbursed under the direction of the American group for whatever purpose they may conclude to be proper?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; all expenses; and that might include traveling expenses. It will include small expenses for clerical expense, stationery, office rent, any form of expense that may contribute directly to the American group and to the American group only and not to the main body in Europe.

Mr. BLOOM. How much money did you spend last year or did you have to raise? You say here $10,000?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. How would that $10,000 be expended? Would that be too much or not enough? What is the average expense?

The PRESIDENT. There are certain expenses which might be incurred right here. I think it would be well to get a certain amount of this literature that they are putting out and circulating, so many numbers. That is one thing. My conjecture is, Mr. BRITTEN, you have in mind paying part at least of the expenses of delegates who go abroad. Is that the fact?

Mr. BRITTEN. If necessary. I will say this, Mr. President. I have made a number of trips with the American group, and have always paid my own way; but then there are other Members of the House who would go, who would like to go, and who should go, who might not be in a position to pay their own traveling expenses, and if that condition presents itself and the American group desire to be represented by certain distinguished gentlemen of the House or Senate, I think that the American group ought to pay their expenses, at least their traveling expenses. It is a small item, and in that way the United States would be assured of proper representation there.

The PRESIDENT. As regards the paying of expenses of the persons going abroad, there are certain considerations about that. Very reluctantly I am compelled to say that some persons have gone abroad and have received a portion of the expenses advanced by the Carnegie Endowment, who have given very little attention to meetings on the other side. It has just been an opportunity for a trip to Europe, and we should have, if the expenses are paid, in whole or in part, under this resolution, some assurance that those who receive the amounts are going to give close attention to the work of the Union in these meetings; I mean to be present and not be absorbed in the attractions of Paris or Berlin, so as to travel around and visit parks and museums, but be regular in their attendance. The Congress will want to know, if we bring this up, just what use is to be made of the money, and we will have to explain that.

I do think, however, that we are justified in asking this as a recognition of the activities of this group. It seems to me so.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, laying aside for the moment the inconvenience of paying your own expenses, and I must confess it has been rather inconvenient for me, although I have received substantial help in the matter, there is another element that appeals to me. By attending these conferences in proper form and in a proper way we have opportunities to wield a tremendous influence in world affairs. If we go out as American members, without any official recognition from our Government, we have one-tenth of the prestige we would have if we had back of us the official recognition of our Government, and by providing something to pay our expenses would give us a little more official status, too. It is really much more important, to my view, than it is with regard to the matter of expense. I would suggest that a resolution be put in some concrete form that the president of the American unit should be authorized to designate five or ten members to go, representing the United States Government, and that is to be limited to actual traveling expenses, because you have to eat here just as you do over there, and I think that it should be provided that the actual traveling expenses be paid.

Mr. BRITTEN. In a fixed amount?

Mr. PORTER. Oh, yes; fix the amount. I would limit it to traveling expenses. I think you would get it through the House much easier that way than if you covered all expenses. But the important thing in my mind is this: I can see wonderful possibilities in this matter if we go over there in at least a semiofficial capacity. You go over there more or less as an individual, and you do not have the prestige of this great Government behind you. There are a great many people in the world who want to do things the way America does, because we are among the successful nations, and we carry some weight to these meetings, greater than any of us realize. I am perfectly willing to help out in this matter, and I hope my colleagues on the Foreign Affairs Committee feel likewise about it. But I would limit it to traveling expenses.

The PRESIDENT. That is, you would limit the whole amount to the payment of traveling expenses, and you would not apply it to any other purpose?

Mr. PORTER. Oh, printed matter and documents, clerical work, and things of that sort should be included.

Mr. PURNELL. What form of certificate do you give to the delegates?

The PRESIDENT. A certificate signed by the executive secretary.

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. The president and secretary sign the credentials in the form of a credentials card.

Mr. PURNELL. It is not a certificate stating that he is a delegate representing the United States?

The PRESIDENT. The American group of the Interparliamentary Union.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. President, I wish to ask to be excused. I approve of this resolution, but I have a very imperative engagement.

The PRESIDENT. Very well.

Mr. BRITTEN. May I say just one word further, please? My sole desire, in presenting this resolution, is the desire that the United States be properly represented abroad, and I think that great care should be used by the president of the American group and the other officers who select these men to represent us abroad. If this resolution does go through the House finally and $10,000 is appropriated, I hope that you, in your wisdom, will select the men who are especially qualified to represent the United States in debate over there, and not have some of them going over there, as they may have done in the past, on a mere junket at somebody else's expense. I am very earnest about that.

Mr. BLOOM. Would that only apply to the people that the president selects to attend these conferences?

Mr. BRITTEN. Any others, like yourself, for instance, who may desire to go over there and pay their own way, back and forth, may do so. But those who are selected by the president should be especially qualified for that particular duty, and the number is unimportant. Two or three disinguished representatives are vastly superior and of much greater value to our country and to the entire issue than 50 or 60 of them merely going over there for joy rides.

Mr. WATSON. Anyone would have the privilege of debate when he is a delegate?

Mr. BLOOM. Any Member of Congress is entitled to go over there, as I understand it.

The PRESIDENT. There are so many considerations to this that I think that we need to give pretty mature consideration to it, and I would suggest something like this, that there be a committee composed of the members of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. BRITTEN, and perhaps Governor MONTAGUE, to consider this and get this into shape. I think the views presented here are very important. Mr. PORTER'S suggestion that this gives official recognition to our group and gives it a prestige there that it otherwise would not have, is a good suggestion. And then Mr. BRITTEN'S suggestion—he is really the one who initiated this movement—that the delegates should be chosen with a view to their taking part in the proceedings and attending faithfully on the meetings is a good suggestion. Of course, there are a great many who would wish to pay their own expenses.

Mr. BRITTEN. I will say for you, Mr. President, that I think you are entitled to the entire amount, so far as I am concerned, because of the very, very valuable work you have done over there.

The PRESIDENT. I have paid my expenses in going over there.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I attended the meeting at Copenhagen, which is the only one that I have had the pleasure of attending. My understanding is that we are entitled to 24 votes in the conference?

The PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr CHINDBLOM. We can send as many delegates as we like, but we get 24 votes. I remember at the conference at Copenhagen the Scandinavian countries had hundreds of them from Stockholm and other Scandinavian countries, but they only had their number of votes.

Mr. BLOOM. Do we ever have 24 votes?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. We always have 24 votes, but we do not have that many delegates. As a matter of fact, they seldom take any formal vote. Everything is usually done by unanimous consent.

Mr. MAAS. I do not think there should be anything in a resolution that we are to make an appropriation for the first two years to send 24 delegates abroad, but we should have assurance that there would be no difference in the designation of the delegates, or as to the number, so that we won't have one set of official delegates and another set of semiofficial delegates, but all delegates would have the same rights.

The PRESIDENT. That would inevitably have to be so. Of course, the idea of Mr. BRITTEN, as he expresses it, is so that we may be assured of having persons go who take a real interest in the proceedings and who will take part in the deliberations.

Mr. PORTER. The reason I suggested 5 or 10 was because I feel confident we could get through the House a resolution providing for that; but if we go in there and say that we were going to send 25, we would not get it through. The real idea is the prestige it would give us.

Mr. BLOOM. Up to now, the Government has really taken no recognition in sending delegates.

The PRESIDENT. No. Well, you have to say that with some qualification. The Government did do something. The President of the United States formally presented an invitation to the conference at Berne in 1924 that the union should come to this country in 1925. He transmitted a letter which was read by our minister to Switzerland before the conference in 1924. So you can hardly say that the United States Government has given no recognition to this union.

Mr. SABATH. And it has appropriated from time to time?

The PRESIDENT. The $6,000 annually for the activities at Geneva.

Mr. PURNELL. I think the Chair would like to entertain a motion, perhaps, that a committee consisting of the five members of the Foreign Affairs Committee who are here, Governor MONTAGUE, Mr. BRITTEN, and with Mr. PORTER as chairman, of course, be appointed to give further consideration to this question, with a view of putting the matter in proper form—if necessary, for the purpose of redrafting the bill.

The PRESIDENT. Would you go further than that in presenting it for approval?

Mr. PURNELL. Well, I assume that that would have to be done by the Foreign Affairs Committee. You mean further presenting it to the American group?

The PRESIDENT. No. My thought would be to present it to the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. With the approval of this group?

The PRESIDENT. Yes; with the approval of this group.

Mr. PURNELL. Then I make such a motion.

Mr. MAAS. I amend that motion, that the membership be composed by the naming of Members and not as members of any committee of the House.

The PRESIDENT. That is, you mean those who are to consider this motion and present it?

Mr. MAAS. No; by name; and not as members of a committee.

The PRESIDENT. Leave it to the Chair to appoint the committee. Of course, the Foreign Affairs Committee have particular advantage, because they are to consider the question of reporting it.

The PRESIDENT. Those in favor of the motion of Mr. Purnell, as amended, will signify the same by saying "aye."

(The motion was put and unanimously carried.)

The PRESIDENT. I want to say that I appreciate the interest being taken in this meeting. This is altogether the largest attendance we have ever had at any meeting.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the Chair appoint that committee now?

The PRESIDENT. I think I had better meditate a bit.

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. The argument on the Britten resolution will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD should you wish to look into the facts. Other groups are supported by their governments in various ways, and so far as we have been able to get that information it is here. This is the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for February 16, page 3215.

Practically every group of the Interparliamentary Union provides for a grant included in the State budget for the expense of the Union. Many of the groups are supported by Government appropriations. For example, the Danish group received in 1926, 5,400 Danish crowns and a special grant toward the expenses of the northern assembly of delegates. The Estonian group provides from that portion of the State budget entitled international expenditure, official journeys, for the traveling expenses of its delegates. The German group receives a grant of 15,000 reichmarks from the Government, 9,000 of which are turned over to the Geneva office and the balance used for traveling expenses. The Swedish group receives a grant of 15,000 Swedish crowns. The Norwegian group receives 9,000 Norwegian crowns for traveling expenses and 1,200 for administrative expenses. Substantial contributions for the traveling expenses of delegates are received by the Bulgarian groups, the Hungarian, the Italian, Polish Rumanian, Yugoslav, and Czechoslovak groups. A sum of 45,000 French francs is placed at the disposal of the French group. Some of the groups—for example, the Egyptian and the Japanese—are officially constituted by the parliament and the expenses of their delegates automatically paid. The South and Central American groups fall also into this category. It may be now regarded as the exception for the members of the union not to receive contributions toward their traveling expenses."

Mr. President, may I bring up one other matter of business?

The PRESIDENT. Certainly.

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. Gentlemen, the fact is, after our Washington conference we were complimented by many groups for the nature of our entertainment, and we were particularly complimented by the French. They wrote gracious letters to many officials of our group. They sent presents to persons who had helped them here, such as guides, interpreters, and other officials. France gave the legion of honor to the president of our group and to the director of the conference.

Now, France has been our host during the last summer. Though not in the best of financial circumstances, France did the best she could, and it was well done. In addition to what has already been said we were taken by special train to Chantilly one Sunday, as some of you will remember. There were many receptions by the President of the Republic, by the president of the Chamber of Deputies, by the secretary of war. We were entertained with a magnificent dinner at the end of the conference. So I have been wondering if there is not something that we of the American group might do that would be gracious and acceptable to the people who were responsible for this entertainment in Paris.

I have in my hands here a book called The Treaty of 1778, and you will notice it is in buff and blue, which were George Washington's colors. It contains the record of the conferences, the plans, the journal of the Congress of September, 1776. It contains the treaties themselves, the treaty of amity and commerce, and the treaty of alliance. The treaty is in English and in French, side by side, and there is the final ratification. I do not know what would have become of this country of ours had it not been for the treaty of 1778. It occurs to me that our group might obtain a few copies of these, that the officials of the group might inscribe their names somewhere, and that copies be presented to the various officials of the French group expressing our appreciation.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Who publishes that?

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. This is published by the French Institute at Washington, and it is printed by Johns Hopkins Press on beautiful paper. It has an introduction by James Brown Scott. It is edited by Monsieur G. Chinard, a distinguished French scholar.

The PRESIDENT. Is it your idea that we should send a few copies of that to the French group?

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Have we, as a group, done anything, even to the extent of sending a letter expressing our appreciation?

The PRESIDENT. I have written myself, personally.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I mean as a group?

The PRESIDENT. No.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Have we any funds at all?

The EXECUTIVE SECRETARY. We have $254.20 in the treasury.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I move that the executive secretary secure the signatures of the delegates to this last conference on 10 copies and send them.

Mr. BLOOM. I would like to make a suggestion. If we are going to do that—this is only a paper cover—why not have copies made and bound in more beautiful covers? We can have the same thing reproduced in leather with a beautiful binding and then present it to them. I think if we are going to present a book it should not be a book in a paper cover.

Mr. HOWARD. I take it for granted that that secretary of ours, so competent in all directions, will attend to those details.

The PRESIDENT. You know, in France there are a great many books—and I have been familiar with them since 1880—that are put forth in paper bindings?

Mr. BLOOM. I mean, if we are going to present them with a book, to present them with a book like that in paper binding might look rather cheap.

The PRESIDENT. Can not we leave that to the secretary?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I move that it be left to the secretary and the chairman and first vice chairman to obtain a sufficient number of copies of this book, and that we agree to underwrite the expense. I do not know whether we have money enough in the treasury or not.

The PRESIDENT. We have.

Mr. BRITTEN. I agree with Mr. Bloom that this 10 or a dozen books should be well bound.

Mr. PORTER. I agree as to the binding, but we should not put a limit of 10 on this. Whatever is necessary should be left to the secretary.

The PRESIDENT. The motion amounts practically to this: Leave it to the secretary, by communication with the president of the French group, to obtain from him the names of persons to whom a copy of the book should be sent, to provide for a proper binding, and send the copies with the signatures.

Mr. BLOOM. With such signatures as he, in conference with the president and vice president, shall determine.

Mr. HOWARD. I second the motion.

The motion was put and unanimously carried.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I move that the group express its appreciation for his services during the past year, the very efficient and valuable services, of the president of the group, the executive secretary, and the other officers, and that we tender them this appreciation for their services.

Mr. PURNELL. And in support of that, Mr. President, I want to say, as one of the very humble delegates last summer who sat and listened and said nothing, that it was a real, genuine pleasure when the distinguished president of this group took the platform and spoke.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It was not my pleasure to be there, but I know of the work of this group, and let me refer to the work of the executive secretary. I hope that the work to be done in connection with the Britten resolution will make it possible that we can find ourselves in a position to pay him a compensation for his work which will be commensurate with its value. If you are ready for the question, I will put it.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, speaking in my capacity as delegate, I want to indorse all that my colleague from Hoosierdom has had to say. Over in Paris, had it not been for the guiding hand of the president of our group, I would have been lost every day in the maze of intricacies incident to conducting a conference in foreign languages; and in all Paris, had it not been for the guiding influence of our secretary, I had been hopelessly involved in a labyrinth of my own ignorance. So I am very grateful to both of them for the services rendered to me, and as I believe, to my friends

Mr. JOHNSON. Might I just add this? The distinguished gentleman is indeed very modest. When I saw him in Paris—I happened to be a member ot the American group—he was speaking more French than a Frenchman, and, although I had been over there and thought I knew some French, he was my very guide. He told me where to go and what to see, and I considered him one of the most conspicuous members over there. Seriously, I enjoyed the meeting tremendously. It was a wonderful thing to me to rub elbows with those boys over there, and to see what they see and get their ideas of us.

Might I add just here that I am very much in favor of sending them something to show our appreciation, for, while voting against us on every occasion, they certainly gave us a wonderful time.

The PRESIDENT. We have not heard from Senator THOMAS, who is here to-day.

Senator THOMAS. I am very glad to be here, I am sure.

The PRESIDENT. I believe that is all the business we have. The meeting stands adjourned.

Whereupon, at 12 o'clock noon, the meeting adjourned.

ARTHUR DEERIN CALL,
Executive Secretary.

HEADSTONES OVER GRAVES OF CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I take great pleasure in reporting unanimously from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (H. R. 10304) authorizing the Secretary of War to erect headstones over the graves of soldiers who served in the Confederate Army and to direct him to preserve in the records of the War Department the names and places of burial of all soldiers for whom such headstones shall have been erected, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1864) thereon. I desire to say that the report is made unanimously by a very fully attended meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I am instructed by the committee to ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I hope consent will be granted. There has been a suggestion made by some one that these Confederate records should be taken away from the National Capital and referred to the various Southern States. I do not think that would be a good idea. I believe the suggestion made by the Senator from Pennsylvania that the records be kept here is a practice and custom which should be upheld.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I assume that it will not lead to any debate.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not expect any debate on it at all.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if it is not a fact that under a previous administration authority was granted for the erection of headstones over the graves of former Confederate soldiers?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes, Mr. President; but those headstones were erected only in the national cemeteries. The bill which I have just reported covers the graves in private cemeteries as well.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, this work has been done for quite a long time. Former Governor Oakes of my State, an ex-Confederate soldier, had charge of this service; but the terms of the bill now presented cover a broader field and will allow headstones to be erected for Confederate veterans who died and were buried in other places than in national cemeteries.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized to erect headstones over the graves of soldiers who served in the Confederate Army and who have been buried in national, city, town, or village cemeteries or in any other places, each grave to be marked with a small headstone or block which shall be of durable stone and of such design and weight as shall keep it in place when set and shall bear the name of the soldier and the name of his State inscribed thereon when the same are known. The Secretary of War shall cause to be preserved in the records of the War Department the name, rank, company, regiment, and date of death of the soldier and his State; if these are unknown it shall be so recorded.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION OF SEAGOING RETRIEVERS

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. From the Committee on Military Affairs, I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (H. R. 13931) to authorize an appropriation for the construction of a building for a radio and communication center at Bolling Field, D. C., and I submit a report (No. 1863) thereon.

The bill has been amended so as to provide for the construction of three seagoing retrievers for use of the Air Corps at Panama, at Hawaii, and in the Philippines. Each of the boats will cost about $40,000. They are absolutely necessary to the salvage of airplanes which may fall into the water in those places. The loss of a single bomber costs the United States twice as much as the cost of one of these ships. It is very important that the bill should be passed now, in order to get it into conference and passed before the end of this week.

The bill also carries an authorization for an appropriation of $50,000 for additional expense found to be necessary because of difficult foundation for a barracks which is being built at Fort Wadsworth, N. Y. The original provisions of the bill for construction work at Bolling Field have all been stricken out by the committee. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the consideration of the bill lead to debate?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not think the consideration of the bill will lead to any debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania for the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not to exceed $50,000, to be expended for the construction and installation of barracks and the necessary utilities and appurtenances thereto at Fort Wadsworth, N. Y.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $120,000 to be expended by the Secretary of War for the construction or purchase of three heavy seagoing Air Corps retrievers for use in Oahu, Philippine Islands, and Albrook Field, Canal Zone.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, would the Senator from Pennsylvania be willing to add to the authorization for the construction of the three aircraft retrievers an amendment providing that the War Department and the Navy Department shall settle the question of who is responsible for the aerial coast defense?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I would agree to that, but I fear the House of Representatives would not agree to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes."

MEXICAN IMMIGRATION

Mr. HARRIS. I send to the desk an Associated Press dispatch and ask the clerk to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TWO AMERICANS KILLED BY MEXICAN BANDITS—BODIES OF MINING ENGINEERS FOUND BY TROOPS—HAD BEEN KIDNAPED—SOLDIERS SEEK SLAYERS

MEXICO CITY, February 23 (Saturday).—Dispatches to Excelsior from Guanajuato, capital of the State of that name, say that the bodies of J. M. Underwood and C. C. Aisthrope, Americans, were found by troops and taken to that city.

The two American mining engineers had been captured by bandits and were held for ransom under threat of death.

Underwood and Aisthorpe were said to be officials of the Guanajuato Reduction & Mines Co., whose home office is in Columbus, Ohio. The United States Embassy and consulate general here were seeking confirmation of the newspaper report to-night.

The Excelsior account said that troops were in pursuit of kidnapers. The bandits, guided by a former employee, were said to have crept into the mining camp on Wednesday night while everyone was asleep. They took Underwood and Aisthrope from their quarters and forced them to mount horses and to accompany them on the road toward Santa Ena.

Later they sent back a note to the mine headquarters saying that they would kill the captives unless they were paid a ransom.

The mine where the kidnaping occurred is known as the Bustos mine. Insurgent and bandit activities have been frequent in the mountainous State in which it is situated. It was in another part of Guanajuato that the train of President Emilio Portes Gil was dynamited less than two weeks ago.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 22.—C. L. Kurtz, president, and C. J. Kurtz, secretary-treasurer, of the Guanajuato Reduction & Mines Co., of Columbus, were unaware to-night that two of their employees, J. M. Underwood and C. C. Aisthorpe, have been slain by Mexican bandits.

The two officers are on their way to the property in Guanajuato, an employee of the company here said. The home cities of the murdered men are unknown here.

The employee added that recently another employee in Mexico had been kidnaped, but his freedom was effected when a cook at the mining camp paid a bandit chief $15 in American money.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I wish to say that on December 14, from the Committee on Immigration, there was reported unanimously a bill of which I was the author to place Mexico under the immigration quota, and I shall offer an amendment to place Central and South America under the quota. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and I have been trying for some time to get the steering committee of the Senate to allow us to take up this bill, but thus far we have not succeeded. I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT], the chairman of the steering committee, if he will not try to get the committee to arrange for the consideration of the bill, to which I have referred, within the next few days.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. HARRIS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think it is pertinent to his inquiry to offer a statement from a newspaper reciting that some bandits happen to be active in Mexico? Is that a reason why there should be exclusion of immigration from Mexico? There are some bandits in the United States.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator and I differ widely in our views about the matter of Mexican immigration, but I think the dispatch which has been read does have a bearing on the question. American citizens are being killed unlawfully in Mexico. I hope the Senator from Kentucky, the chairman of the steering committee, will allow us to have a vote on the bill to which I have referred before the present Congress shall close.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator's inquiry, all I can say is that I will be glad to notify the Senator of the next meeting of the committee, which will take place as soon as the bills now on the list for consideration shall have been disposed of. He can make a statement to the committee, and if he can convince the committee that the bill should be considered, I am confident that appropriate action will be taken.

Mr. HARRIS. May I ask the Senator how many other bills are ahead of the one to which I have referred?

Mr. SACKETT. There are four bills now on the list which have not as yet been disposed of.

Mr. HARRIS. What are they, may I ask?

Mr. SACKETT. The joint resolution providing for a survey of the proposed Nicaraguan canal, of which the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] is in charge, the bill providing a farmers' market in the District of Columbia, of which the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is in charge, the reapportionment bill, of which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is in charge, and the census bill. They have been set down in that order.

Mr. HARRIS. At present one-third as many immigrants come into this country from Mexico as are allowed under the quota law to come from all the world. I think Congress should pass this bill which would put immigration from Mexico, Central and South America under the quota, just as we do all other countries.

Mr. SACKETT. Of course, the Senator will recognize there are many other Senators who are seeking to have bills in which they are interested placed on the list. I can only suggest that the Senator appear before the committee and make a statement.

Mr. HARRIS. I understand that, and I appreciate the consideration shown me by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT], but if the steering committee will not grant our request and make it the special order of business, the only thing the friends of the measure can do is to try to substitute it for some other bill if we can not secure action any other way. I do not think there is any legislation pending before Congress which is more important to our country. This influx of cheap Mexican labor into our country has increased greatly, the cotton produced, which has brought about the surplus and reduced the price of cotton. Every Mexican that comes here takes the place of some American who needs work, and there are many unemployed at this time. Every bale of cotton they produce has a tendency to bring down the price of all the cotton crop.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to make an inquiry of the chairman of the steering committee. Is the reapportionment bill ahead of the census bill on the program?

Mr. SACKETT. It is.

Mr. HARRISON. The apportionment bill is ahead?

Mr. SACKETT. It comes first.

Mr. HARRISON. The bill providing for the extension of the life of the Radio Commission is not on the program at all, is it?

Mr. SACKETT. That is not on the list at present.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16714) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have offered an amendment to the pending bill which is on the table. I ask that the clerk may read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read, as requested.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 44, at the end of the amendment agreed to on yesterday, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That no part of the appropriations contained in this act shall be used for the maintenance of any officer or enlisted man in the military or naval service in Haiti.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point, without reading, excerpts from an article written by me in June, 1927, which discusses some phases of the Haitian question.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The native inhabitants of Haiti were almost wholly destroyed following its discovery by Columbus and the Spanish occupation. African slavery was thereafter introduced into Haiti as it was into other islands of the West Indies. Haiti became a French possession in 1697 and so remained until 1801, when its inhabitants, largely negroes, rose in rebellion and under the brilliant leadership of Toussaint L'Ouverture won their independence. In 1804 they established a republic with a liberal constitution, and for more than a century Haiti enjoyed the status of an independent nation, having regular international relations and equality with all the other nations of the civilized world.

However, the history of the Haitian Republic has been marked by internal disturbances and difficulties, substantially of the same character as those found in the history of many other nations, and particularly those of Central and South America. Many nations have had their succession of absolute monarchs, dictators, and constitutional rulers. Some have achieved the republican form of government and lapsed back into a monarchy. Mexico and many of the republics to the south of us have suffered from internal convulsions, and dictators and military juntas have often seized the reins of authority and imposed an arbitrary rule upon the people. Revolutions have not infrequently occurred because of the despotic rule of usurpers, and were in the interest of liberty and the welfare of the people.

AMERICA TAKES POSSESSION

The path leading to political, civil, and economic liberty is a long and hard one, and backward and primitive races only reach the heights through suffering and hardships, and after years and perhaps centuries of travail and sorrow. Haiti, through the years following the establishment of her Government, continued as an independent nation until the subversion of her Government by the armed seizure and occupation of the country by the United States in 1915. In July, 1915, a revolution occurred in Port au Prince, the capital of Haiti, against President Guillaume-Sam, who had been cruel and despotic. In this revolution neither public nor private property was molested, nor were foreigners interfered with or their property placed in jeopardy. However, in August American war vessels landed marines in Haiti, and occupied all military strategic points and took possession of the Government. Martial law was declared and a military government established under the control of American officers. In my opinion, there was no justification for this attack upon a friendly country and a weak people.

It has been claimed by some that France or Germany was about to take possession of Haiti. The facts do not justify this contention. Nor was the Monroe doctrine involved in any manner. In 1914, and continuously thereafter until the military occupation referred to, the United States had attempted to obtain a treaty similar in terms to that which had placed the United States in control of the Dominican Republic, but the officials of the Republic of Haiti declared that they "would not accept any control of Haitian affairs by a foreign power." In May, 1915, the United States sent a representative with the proposed draft of a convention into which he attempted to have the Haitian Government enter. Under the terms of this instrument, the United States was to "protect Haiti from the aggressions of foreign powers," and Haiti was to permit the establishment by the United States of an important naval and military base in Haiti. Other provisions were submitted which were derogatory to the independence and honor of Haiti. These various proposals were rejected, and, as stated, in July, 1915, forcible military possession was taken by the United States of Haiti. Some of the Haitians attempted to resist and more than 2,500 were killed.

ELECTED BY BAYONETS

While martial law prevailed and Haiti was under the control of military forces of the United States, Dartiguenave was made president, not by the will of the people but through the military pressure of the United States. Immediately after the assumption by Dartiguenave of the office of president, the United States proposed a convention which gave to it the practical control of Haiti, including the control of police, public works, and sanitary affairs. This convention was submitted to the national assembly for their advice and consent. But upon its expressing unwillingness to ratify the convention, the American admiral commanding the marines and warships in the harbor of Port au Prince cut off the salaries of members of the assembly, and announced that the United States would "retain control of Haiti until its desires were accomplished" and that it would forthwith "proceed with the complete pacification of Haiti," meaning that further military operations would be employed in the subjugation of Haiti and her people.

Under pressure of these threats, the national assembly accepted the convention. A new national assembly was elected in 1916 in accordance with the terms of the Haitian constitution. Upon its convening, the United States Government, acting through its naval forces, presented to the assembly a hand-made constitution, and demanded its acceptance by the assembly. Haiti for many years had been governed by a constitution, liberal in form and containing provisions similar to those found in the Constitution of the United States. The people were satisfied with their constitution. There was no desire to have it superceded; and the military control of Haiti by the United States met with the universal opposition of the Haitian people.

One of the provisions of the Haitian constitution prohibited foreigners or foreign corporations from holding land in Haiti. This provision of the constitution was wise, because of the limited area of arable lands and the large population in Haiti. The Haitian people foresaw that if their lands were not protected from foreign acquisition a serious agrarian problem would be presented. The exploitation of Haiti by foreign landowners was designedly interdicted. The Haitian National Assembly refused to accept the new constitution prepared in the United States and delivered to them by the mailed hand of our military forces. Thereupon American marines, acting under instructions from the State Department, forcibly dissolved the national assembly, expelled the members from the legislative chambers and locked the doors in their faces. When the two houses of the assembly met in places other than the regular chambers, they were summarily dispersed at the point of the bayonet.

MARINES RATIFY CONSTITUTION

The American occupation then went through the farce of submitting this new constitution to the terrified inhabitants of Haiti for ratification. There was, in fact, no election; a few votes were cast under the supervision and domination of American marines. It can not be contended that this American-made constitution was ratified by the people of Haiti. A few Haitians voted for ratification, by ballots put into their hands by American marines and deposited in boxes under military surveillance and intimidation.

Upon the dissolution and dispersal of the national assembly, Dartiguenave, assuming dictatorial power, and at the instigation of the American occupation, set up an extraconstitutional council of 21 members appointed by himself. This illegal body, which became his pliant tool, usurped the legislative powers of the national assembly, and continues to this day in its usurpatory acts in defiance of the will of the Haitian people. However, it is the mere creature of the so-called "president" of Haiti, and he and this council of state are controlled by the military forces of the United States, still in possession of Haiti and the Haitian Government. There was thus accomplished a complete subversion of the Haitian Republic and the Haitian constitution.

The convention of 1915, I submit, did not contemplate the overthrow of the Haitian Republic or the cessation of its constitutional functions. It did not contemplate that the United States would subvert the Haitian Republic, or the powers of the national assembly through a puppet dictator under cover of a council of state, supported by the bayonets of the American marines. But, nevertheless, such subversion has been accomplished and still exists.

There has been no election of the national assembly in Haiti since 1916, when it was forcibly dispersed by American marines. The constitutional elections of the national assembly, prescribed in the organic law to be held in 1918, 1920, 1922, 1924, and 1926 have been prevented by the American occupation. Through five terms of the national assembly of Haiti, as prescribed in its constitution, the inhabitants of Haiti have had no parliamentary body to act for them, or to be the organ of the national will. The people have been intimidated to suffering in silence. The few journalists in the country who have dared to protest against the subversion of the political institutions and liberties of the country have been incarcerated for their temerity. There has been a denial of liberty of speech and of the press and of personal and political liberty.

ENTER A NEW PUPPET

Dartiguenave's term of office expired August 12, 1922. The election of his successor was vested by the constitution in the national assembly, but no national assembly had been elected in 1918, 1920, or 1922, as provided by the constitution. The elections were prohibited by the puppet Haitian Government and the military occupation of the United States. Thereupon this illegal council of state, holding no commission from the people of Haiti, undertook, with the approval of the United States, to make Louis Borno President of Haiti. The constitution of Haiti, following the old French precedents, regards the nationality of a son to be that of his father. The constitution, in conformity to this principle of French law, prescribed that the President of Haiti must be the son of a Haitian citizen. Borno's father was not a citizen of Haiti. Therefore he did not possess the qualifications prescribed in the fundamental law to be eligible to the Presidency of Haiti.

Borno, however, was designated in this illegal manner as President of Haiti for the term of four years, as prescribed in the American-made constitution which has never become the legal organic act of the people. Borno's term, even under this illegal tenure, expired in 1926. The American-made constitution of Haiti provided for the election of the President by the national assembly on April 12, 1926. But no national assembly had been elected in 1924 or 1926.

The 10-year term of the convention forced upon Haiti by the United States terminated September 16, 1925, and Borno's illegal tenure as President ended at the same time. The convention of 1915, which was to expire by its own limitation in 10 years, was shortly after its acceptance by the national assembly extended for the additional term of 10 years. Of this extension neither the national assembly nor the Senate of the United States was notified. So far as I can learn, it was done without the knowledge of the people of Haiti or the Congress or the people of the United States.

A FRAUDULENT FAMILY AFFAIR

The conclusion is irresistible that the United States, in collusion with Borno, determined upon his continuance in office after the expiration of his illegal tenure of four years for a further period of four years at least. Accordingly, Borno, acting under the illegal decree of Dartiguenave creating the so-called council of state, in anticipation of the second usurpation of the Presidency in 1926, made provision that the so-called council of state should be made up of his personal friends, retainers, and satellites. He removed 18 of the 21 members of the council of state within the year before the anticipated election and appointed as their successors the nephew of his wife, the nephew of his first wife, his chief of staff, his assistant chief of staff, his secretary, his undersecretary, his secretary of interior, his secretary of agriculture, his secretary of public instruction, his law partner, his chargé d'affaires in Brussels, his chargé d'affaires in Berlin, his attorney at St. Marc, the chief clerk of his foreign relations department, the chief clerk of his interior department, another clerk of his interior department, his inspector general of education, and his president of the land commission. The three other members of the council were also personal appointees of Borno, their appointments having been made more than a year prior to his election. It was this hand-picked "electoral college" which went through the farce of electing Borno for a second usurpatory term on the 12th of April, 1926.

Borno's title (?) to the presidency has been obtained in the manner indicated. He is not the choice of the Haitian people. The Haitian people are practically unanimous in opposition to his illegal and usurpatory acts and to the military occupation of their country by the United States. They resent the presence of American marines, and of American war vessels in their ports, and the presence of an American brigadier general in charge of the American marines, who also represents the Department of State and the United States under the high-sounding title of high commissioner and envoy extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the United States to the Republic of Haiti.

The fact is that Haiti is not now an independent nation, nor does the will of the people now prevail. If American marines were withdrawn from Haitian soil and American war vessels from Haitian waters, Borno and his illegal régime would quickly disappear. Borno is a mere figurehead. His authority is derived from the United States and his position is upheld by a foreign government. He masquerades as president, and he and the high commissioner attempt to maintain the fiction that Borno is the duly elected president of a republic, and that the United States has no authority or power in Haiti, but occupies an unimportant position and acts only in an advisory capacity.

AMERICAN MILITARISTS IN CHARGE

To assume this position is hypocritical and absurd. Americans are in charge of the important positions in the government. They collect and disburse the revenues and control the internal and external policies of Haiti.

The Haitian people contend that American occupation has not been in the interest of the people, that thousands of acres of the best lands in Haiti have been acquired by American corporations, and many thousands of Haitians, fearing American domination, have left their country and sought homes in Cuba and other islands of the Caribbean Sea. They declare that Haitians are being forced from their homes and from lands which they and their forefathers have occupied for generations, because they do not have paper titles to their lands, and in order that they may be disposed of by the unconstitutional government which now exists; and they also assert that heavy taxes and burdens are placed upon the people and that the benefits derived therefrom and from the loans which have been made are not commensurate with the expenditures made by the American occupation and the Borno régime. While conceding that roads have been built and sanitary conditions improved, they insist that the administration of governmental affairs has not been efficient or economical, and that the wishes of the people have not been regarded.

Evidence is not lacking to support the contention of the Haitians that the high commissioner and Borno are attempting to intimidate the judges and make them subservient to the wishes of those in control of the government. The Haitian people feel that they are not free, that they are the victims of a military régime and are under the control of a foreign power. They desire to have their old constitution restored. They desire to elect their own officers and to have a government of their own, and not one forced upon them by any other nation.

For a number of years the United States was in control of the Dominican Republic. American military forces occupied that country and subjected the people to a military rule. Within the past three years our military forces have been withdrawn.

In the Senate I have contended that the United States should withdraw its military forces from Haiti and permit the Haitian people to have a government of their own choosing. I have said that if any possible reason existed to justify the seizure by military forces of Haiti and her government in 1915, that reason has long since disappeared, and that to superimpose a military government upon Haiti, as we are now doing, is unjust to the Haitian people and in violation of the traditions of our country and of the principles upon which it is founded.

I have said that Borno was a mere creature of our military forces, and that he does not represent the Haitian people. I have insisted that Congress take action and provide by suitable legislation for an election at which the Haitian people might choose representatives to a constitutional convention; and that when such convention had drafted a constitution and the same had been approved by the people, and an election of officers held thereunder, our military forces should be withdrawn and the government of Haiti surrendered to the constituted authorities selected by the Haitian people themselves.

* * * * * * *

The time has come for the United States to withdraw from Haiti, and when Congress meets in December I shall offer a measure providing that the Haitians be permitted to adopt a constitution and set up their own government and that our military forces be withdrawn.

Mr. KING. I ask for a vote on the amendment. I discussed the question very fully yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEFLIN. I offer an amendment to be added at the end of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation herein provided shall be used to fly any pennant or banner on the same staff or hoist above the United States flag on any battleship or other vessel in the United States Navy.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not insist upon bringing this amendment up. It is a matter that will unquestionably cause debate. Already the matter has been presented to the Senate, I think, by a resolution on the subject which has been submitted by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT].

Mr. HEFLIN. I am willing to submit it without debate.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have a letter from Captain Dickins, who is at the head of the Chaplain Corps of the United States Navy. I ask that his letter may be read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the letter and was interrupted by——

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order that the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent has been given to read the letter submitted by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] relative to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from Arizona has a right to have the letter read in his time if he wants that done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, so many Senators have requested information as to the authorship of this letter that I should say that the author thereof is Captain Dickins, captain of the Chaplain Corps, United States Navy. I ask that the letter be now read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

FEBRUARY 18, 1929.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to your specific inquiry, asking for as definite information as possible relative to the church pennant in use in the United States Navy, I am herein giving you all the information extant I have been able to secure after two years of research:

The United States Navy church pennant, the meaning of which, and origin and its use, which seems to have been the subject of so much discussion for and against, is a white triangular field, charged with a blue Latin cross (this is not a Roman cross). Its length is three times that of its perpendicular height. The blue cross in length is one-third the length of the pennant, and the total width of the cross one-half of its length. The ordinary pennant is 6 feet in length and 2 feet in width; therefore the blue cross would be 2 feet in length and 1 foot in width.

According to the Navy Code and Signal Book, this pennant "is to be hoisted at the peak or flagstaff at the time of commencing and kept hoisted during the continuance of divine service on board vessels of the Navy." This cross is not, nor has it ever been, the distinct copyrighted property of any denomination, but has been used for many centuries by the great Christian family throughout the world. The oriental or Greek cross used by the Eastern Orthodox Church differs from the Latin cross, in that the arms and staff are of equal length, and is known to us in America in this form as the Red Cross, which, of course, was copied from the cross used by Switzerland.

After careful research I am of the opinion that the church pennant used in the United States Navy was copied somewhat from the church flag in the British Navy. The British church pennant in use to-day differs from the American church pennant in the following particulars: It is triangular in shape, similar to ours. In the first third of the pennant is placed the cross of St. George and the other two-thirds of the pennant is broken up into three horizontal bars of red, white, and blue. During divine service on board a British man-of-war this church pennant is run up alongside the Union Jack at the stern of the ship or is flown from the peak, in practice somewhat similar to our own, with the exception that the Union Jack of the British Navy is not lowered.

The tradition regarding the use of the church pennant carries us back to the organization of the Navy. I have been unable to discover any instructions, regulations, or references relative to the church pennant prior to 1836. In 1836 the church pennant is mentioned as one of the articles in making up a ship's allowance list, and this is again mentioned in 1844. From that time on there is practically no reference to the church pennant up till 1868, when in the Code and Signal Manual of the Navy it definitely states what evidently had been the practice of the Navy for many years prior to that, i. e., that "the church pennant shall be flown above the national ensign during divine service."

One of the earliest definite references in regard to the display of the church pennant is that found in an order issued by Admiral Farragut, as follows:

U. S. FLAGSHIP "HARTFORD,"
Off the City of New Orleans,
April 26, 1862.

Eleven o'clock this morning is the hour appointed for all officers and crews of the fleet to return thanks to Almighty God for His great goodness and mercy in permitting us to pass through the events of the last two days with so little loss of life and blood.

At that hour the church pennant will be hoisted on every vessel of the fleet, and their crews assembled will, in humiliation and prayer, make their final acknowledgment therefor to the Great Dispenser of all human events.

D. G. FARRAGUT,
Flag Officer, Western Gulf Blockading Squadron.

This certainly establishes the use of the church pennant without any question back to that date; but the fact that the pennant was a part of the ship's allowance of every vessel in the fleet and that its use was so commonly known indicates that the custom is not a new one. In a French book of flags published in 1850 we find among the cuts of flags of the United States the church pennant, exactly as we have it to-day.

Desirable as it might be, were we to attempt to trace the origin of the many customs which color our life of to-day, that attempt would end in mystery. So general have they been—even though far-reaching in their effect—no one has thought it necessary in the past to carefully set down the reason or origin of these customs. So it is with the use of the church pennant in the Navy. In the pioneer days of our Navy, much as we probably disliked and distrusted our mother country, we did incorporate many of her naval customs in our naval service, too numerous to mention in this communication, but one of them undoubtedly was the use of the church pennant, and its use has been so much a matter of common knowledge as not to need statement of origin.

Before 1836, when we find the first mention of the church pennant, I doubt if there were many regulations of any kind in the service; consequently it should not be considered strange that explicit instructions have not been written in our naval logs relative to the church pennant and its use, for the same point might be raised regarding other happenings or customs in the Navy. It should be considered sufficient to establish the fact that the use of the church pennant in the Navy is of very early origin in our service, due to the fact that it was well known as far back as 1836, and again was spoken of by Admiral Farragut, showing its position of importance in connection with divine service in the Navy.

When a United States naval vessel is at sea in company with other vessels of the fleet or at anchor in port on Sunday morning, church call is usually sounded at 10 o'clock, and immediately the Stars and Stripes are lowered just sufficiently to permit the church pennant to be run to the peak over it, and there it remains until the completion of divine service, when it is run down and the Stars and Stripes are again run to the peak of the flagstaff as before. This is the only service in connection with which the church pennant is hoisted. When a funeral occurs on board, the church pennant is not used. The Stars and Stripes are half-masted and remain so during the service and until the body has left the ship or has been buried at sea, when the colors are then run to the peak. If a United States vessel is operating alone at sea and not in sight of other vessels, neither the United States colors nor the church pennant is hoisted. The service is simply carried on without these outward evidences.

To quiet the misunderstandings and misconstructions being placed upon the church pennant by overzealous, though perhaps seriously minded members of Protestant Christianity, it may be interesting to note that this pennant had long been in use in the United States Navy by Protestant chaplains prior to the appointment of the first Roman Catholic chaplain in 1888. This chaplain was the Rev. Charles H. Parks. He was the first Roman Catholic chaplain to be appointed in the United States Navy, and it is my belief that for over 80 years prior to this appointment our treasured church pennant had been in use in the Navy. It may also be interesting to note in connection with this that the first chaplain regularly commissioned in the United States Navy was the Rev. William Balch, a Congregationalist. He received his commission, No. 1, in the Chaplains Corps in 1779; and I have no doubt the church pennant was flung to the breeze during the time of his holding divine service.

As Chief of Chaplains, attached to the Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department, Washington, D. C., a clergyman of the Episcopal Church who has seen service in the Navy for over 30 years, I feel a deep sense of gratitude to the gentlemen of the Senate, who, during this past week, definitely indicated their stand in regard to the perpetuity of this simple Christian acknowledgment—the display of the church pennant—of our dependence upon Almighty God through his Son, Jesus Christ. To-day its use may be somewhat governed by old naval custom, but it is my earnest hope that the day be not far distant when, if it be thought necessary to allay all feeling of misunderstanding, definite action shall be taken by the Congress to perpetually provide for the use of this simple acknowledgment of our dependence upon the great Architect of the Universe in both branches of our military service and to assure our millions of Christian people that this cross-emblazoned flag is not the flag of any foreign potentate or any creed or race but simply an evidence that we all are believers in and followers of the Man of Galilee.

Long may it wave and point us to the way of a better and holier living in His name!

Sincerely yours,

C. H. DICKINS,
Captain, Chaplain Corps, United States Navy.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, my amendment reads:

Provided, That no part of the appropriations herein provided shall be used to fly any pennant or banner on the same staff or hoist above the United States flag on any battleship or other vessel in the United States Navy.

I have received perhaps 2,000 letters indorsing my position on this question. Other Senators have received quite a number themselves.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HALE. I made a point of order on the amendment. That being the case, until the point of order is decided upon——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is not well taken. The amendment of the Senator is simply a limitation.

Mr. HALE. May I be heard upon that, Mr. President?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that he will save time by letting me go on with the amendment, because I want another record vote on the question involved and we may have still another one later on. We may have several before this flag issue is settled, for no question is ever settled until it is settled right. The people in the States from which we come are entitled to see just how we stand on this question.

Mr. President, some Senators, I take it, have called on one of our oldest chaplains—a very old man—and have gotten him to write a letter up here thanking certain Senators who voted to continue the present practice of flying this cross above the United States flag. Senators, that practice is going to be changed. This Senate may not change it, but it will be changed by the United States Senate before this time in 1932. The American people have made up their minds on that question. The American Legion demands this change. I showed you the other day that they had indorsed it. The National Flag Conference, held in Washington, has approved the change to fly the pennant at another place.

We are not seeking to do away with the practice of flying the pennant at religious service on the ships. We are seeking to let the American flag fly, as it has a right to fly, on its own staff, in all its majesty and glory, as the emblem of our national sovereignty. Then fly the pennant at another place. Who can object to that? What does the chaplain say they fly the pennant for? What do others say it is for? To give notice to a passing ship that religious service is being conducted on that ship.

Senators, you are too discerning, I think, to be misled or deceived any longer as to who it is that is insisting on continuing the practice of flying the cross above our flag. Why is it that a certain group is fighting so persistently to prevent the change suggested by the American Legion and other patriotic orders? Why is it that the Roman Catholics here do not want this custom changed? I assert that there is not another government on the earth that flies its church pennant above its national standard. Challenge that statement, any of you. I assert that Great Britain, the mother country, never furnished us such a custom. Great Britain to-day, in flying her religious pennant, flies it, not above the Union Jack, but alongside of it, or below it; and the chaplain himself admits that when it is flown at the peak, it is at the stern of the ship. Why should our flag be pulled down when you want to give notice to a passing ship that you are holding religious service?

Senators, the national flag code, indorsed by the American Legion and by 126 patriotic societies of America, real Americans, indorse the proposition contained in my flag amendment. I want the RECORD to show that it was said here before this vote is taken. In that flag code you will find this provision: "No pennant or banner should fly above the United States flag." That is in the United States flag code, and a resolution was introduced in the House the other day to adopt that code with that provision in it.

Another statement is made by the chaplain in his letter to the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES]; that Senator is the one who first had printed in the RECORD a letter on this subject, the same letter that has been read to-day. In that letter the chaplain told the Senator from Missouri, and Senators heard it read here, that frequently when a ship is operating by itself, it does not fly the pennant. It has religious service without hoisting the pennant at all. Then, I ask, what good excuse can be given for pulling our flag down when the chaplain does decide to fly the pennant when another ship comes in sight, a foreign ship, from Italy, or Spain, or some other country? Why pull our flag down from its seat of sovereignty, in order to fly a Roman cross, a cross at least, admittedly a Latin cross, which never has been adopted, as the chaplain has said, by the church people of America as a religious pennant. It has not become the church pennant of America. No church pennant has ever been agreed upon by the religious denominations of the United States. The chaplain admits that. Now, we are asked to pull our flag down to fly a pennant, a Latin cross if you please, that has never been adopted as the church pennant of America.

over

Senators, when Admiral Farragut ordered the church pennant displayed, he did not say, "Hoist it above the Stars and Stripes." I challenge anyone to show that in his order. He said, "Hoist it," when religious services were held. That is all right. I am not objecting to that. I am willing and the millions I speak for are willing to fly a church pennant during religious services on American battleships, but we want it flown on a staff all its own, where it will not be necessary to lower the United States flag.

A retired naval officer suggested to me, "Why, Senator, if you have to pull the flag down when you have a religious service on board ship, take your flag down off the Senate every morning when your chaplain prays. You let the flag up there continue to fly to the breeze." He says that there is no good excuse for pulling our flag down in order to display a pennant. He insists that the pennant should be flown somewhere else on the ship.

I have shown you some of these things before, and I am going to show them to you again from time to time, because I am fighting a battle here that may take some time to finish. I have just begun to fight. This right of our American flag to fly alone is going to be recognized, and you are going to be asked why you did not vote to recognize that right and fly that pennant at another place on the ship. You will be asked why you did not vote to sustain the position of the American Legion, the National Flag Conference, the national flag code committee, and the Secretary of the Navy, who expressed his willingness to fly the pennant at another place on our ships. I do not apologize or beg leave of any Senator for demanding proper respect and recognition for the American flag. Senators, this is a simple thing that I am asking you to do for our flag.

There is no denying the fact that there is an outside and insidious influence at work here to prevent the passage of a measure to cease flying the cross above the American flag. Senators, that is the best beloved flag in all the world. It represents all that we hold dear. Let us here declare that hereafter that flag shall fly on its own staff, in its own right, with no other flag or pennant above it.

Mr. President, I am surprised at the stand a good many Senators have taken upon this question. I have received letters from their States expressing dissatisfaction and disappointment at the failure of their Senators to vote to permit the American flag to fly first and uppermost on its own staff. I trust that these will now give their support to my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired. He has 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am willing for a vote to be had.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who is necessarily absent from the city attending the funeral of a relative. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. LARRAZOLO] and vote "nay."

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is absent, but I am authorized to vote on this question. I vote "nay."

Mr. BRATTON (when Mr. LARRAZOLO's name was called). I previously announced the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. LARRAZOLO] on account of illness. If he were present and voting, he would vote "nay" on this question.

Mr. MCKELLAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], which I transfer to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] and vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] is absent on account of illness. If present and permitted to vote, he would vote "nay."

I also wish to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] on account of illness.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. WAGNER. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. COPELAND] is necessarily absent from the city. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. STEPHENS] is necessarily absent on official business. He has a general pair for the day with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

The result was announced—yeas 7, nays 70, as follows:

YEAS—7

Black	Harris	Mayfield	Trammell
Brookhart	Heflin	Sheppard

NAYS—70

Ashurst	Edge	McMaster	Smith
Barkley	Fess	McNary	Smoot
Bayard	Frazier	Metcalf	Steck
Bingham	Gerry	Moses	Steiwer
Blaine	Glass	Norbeck	Swanson
Blease	Glenn	Norris	Thomas, Idaho
Borah	Goff	Nye	Tydings
Bratton	Gould	Oddie	Tyson
Broussard	Greene	Overman	Vandenberg
Bruce	Hale	Phipps	Wagner
Burton	Harrison	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Capper	Hastings	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Caraway	Hawes	Reed, Mo.	Warren
Couzens	Hayden	Reed, Pa.	Waterman
Curtis	Johnson	Sackett	Watson
Dale	Jones	Schall	Wheeler
Deneen	Kendrick	Shortridge
Dill	King	Simmons

NOT VOTING—18

Copeland	Howell	McLean	Shipstead
Edwards	Keyes	Neely	Stephens
Fletcher	La Follette	Pine	Thomas, Okla.
George	Larrazolo	Robinson, Ark.
Gillett	McKellar	Robinson, Ind.

So Mr. HEFLIN's amendment was rejected.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I hold in my hand an authentic drawing of the seven different kinds of crosses, Latin, Patriarchal, Papal, Greek, Maltese, St. Andrews, and Pattee, and also a small cut of the church flag. In order that the RECORD may reflect the real fact and inasmuch as all the drawings are simple and can be easily reproduced, I ask unanimous consent to have these seven crosses printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no objection to having that done, but under the rule I do not know whether it could be done. Under the joint rule of the Senate and the House, I am very doubtful whether it can be done.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, it may be done by order of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. SMOOT. Then let it go to that committee. I think the rule would require that.

Mr. MOSES. In behalf of the chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, I may say that it will receive prompt attention.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to having it printed in the RECORD, only I want Senators to know what the rule is.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President. I have no objection if I am given consent by the Senate to print in the same RECORD the flag code of the United States—it is not long—with cuts or pictures of the flag in different positions as it appears in the flag code. I have no objection if that arrangement is agreed to, so that all of this information may appear together in the same RECORD.

Mr. MOSES. Both requests should go to the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, no.

Mr. MOSES. They have to go to that committee anyway under the rule.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I renew my request and ask unanimous consent that the crosses referred to be printed immediately following my remarks.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, unless Senators will give unanimous consent to print the cuts of the American flag and the American Flag Code indorsed by the American Legion, the National Flag Conference, the Flag Code Commission, and 126 patriotic societies, I will object. If I can get consent to print this American Flag Code, as I have suggested, I am willing for the Senator from Maryland to print in the RECORD the crosses he has mentioned.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, under the rule the request has to go to the Joint Committee on Printing, anyway. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] can withhold his remarks for revision until the committee can pass upon both requests. Therefore I ask that they be referred to the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. HEFLIN. I object to consent being given to print that list of colors and crosses unless my request is granted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I send to the clerk's desk and ask to have read in my time a short newspaper article from Canada, together with the writing on the side of the sheet.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama has the floor. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read the newspaper article, as follows:

ROMAN CATHOLICS IN OTTAWA WARNED—CONTINUED PUBLIC SCHOOLS SUPPORT WILL MEAN REFUSAL OF SACRAMENTS

OTTAWA, February 18 (C. P.).—Archbishop Forbes, in a pastoral letter read in all Roman Catholic churches in the Ottawa diocese, announced the refusal of the sacraments to all Roman Catholics who continue to pay school taxes in favor of public schools. The announcement affects 1,346 Roman Catholics assessed as public-school supporters in the capital.

The lengthy pastoral letter reviews the obligation of Catholics to support their own schools. The paragraph which refers in particular to Ottawa diocese reads:

"It can not be permitted under any pretext whatsoever, or under any consideration, that Catholics of this diocese pay their school taxes in favor of public schools in preference to the separate schools, where separate schools exist. To act counter to this discipline renders one unworthy of absolution. It is very painful to witness the large number of Catholics who act thus. We conjure them to return to their duty, whatsoever be the material loss they might sustain. Their action is not only in disobedience to the church of whose laws they can not be ignorant; it is direct cooperation in teaching opposed to the faith; and it is an injustice they commit with regard to their fellow Catholics, whose burden they increase."

Mr. HEFLIN. In longhand writing, on the sheet on which the newspaper article was pasted, appeared the following:

In due course we shall deal with your American public-school system in like manner.

Mr. President, that is a direct Roman Catholic attack upon the public-school system of Canada. Catholics are denied the sacrament if they patronize the public school and pay taxes levied upon them by the government for the support of public schools. The Roman church authority in Canada has defied civil authority and demanded that the citizen of Catholic faith shall refuse to obey the mandates of the Canadian Government. That bold and drastic order was announced by a Roman Catholic archbishop named Forbes. He demands of Catholics that they must refrain from patronizing public schools and that they must refuse to pay taxes along with other citizens levied by the Canadian Government for the support of the public-school system. That clipping was sent to me by some one. I do not know who sent it, but he wrote on the side:

This is what we are going to do for your public-school system in America in due time.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Who wrote it, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not know who wrote it. I think some Catholic wrote it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Oh, pshaw!

Mr. HEFLIN. It sounds like some other communications that I have had from Catholics. The Bible speaks about "people" that perish because of lack of knowledge. Italy is a fine example. The Italian people did not know what Mussolini's mission was when he was secretly placed in power by the Pope's lieutenants. They did not know that when he was killing off Protestant leaders and destroying Freemasonry in Italy that he was preparing to deliver the Italian Government and its liberty-loving people into the hands of the Roman Catholic Pope. They did not know that the landmarks of liberty planted deep in the soil of Italy by that great Italian patriot, Garibaldi, were so soon to be removed. Italian leaders have been murdered and Italian liberty is now bound in chains. Secret underground work of the most dangerous and despicable character has brought about Italy's undoing and downfall. The same thing is happening right here. Catholic textbooks taught in parochial schools right here in the United States contain the un-American and deadly doctrine of "union of church and state." I brought that to the attention of the Senate once before, but none of you have condemned it.

I have an amendment here now to the bill in the Senate to furnish free schoolbooks in the District of Columbia, and my amendment provides that it shall apply to public-school children only. I wonder how some Senators will vote on that?

I have another amendment to the same bill, and I shall delight in giving all Senators an opportunity to go on record on that. That amendment provides that no schoolbook that contains language contrary to the position of the United States on the "separation of church and State" shall be taught in any school in the District of Columbia. Let us see how Senators will vote on that. Mr. President, I and other Americans have pointed out time and again things that are being done in the United States to the free institutions of the Government of the United States by the un-American activities of certain Roman Catholics. These things were winked at and went on unchecked in Italy until the crash came and the Government of Italy fell.

I saw Senators vote the second time just a little while ago to compel the pulling down of the United States flag on our battle ships that this cross shall fly above it. Senators, I do not know what it is going to take to wake you up to a full realization and keen appreciation of the dangers that are stalking all around us. Italy—poor, unfortunate Italy—slept and awoke in Roman Catholic chains. Wake up, America; your danger is from within. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] both voted against my flag amendment. Were they in good faith when they voted for a like provision on the cruiser bill, or have they changed?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, does the Senator want to know how I feel about it?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator's proposal is brought up in regular form as a resolution, I am willing to vote that the United States flag shall not be superseded, but I am not willing to vote to put that sort of an amendment on every appropriation bill that may possibly come here.

Mr. HEFLIN. It has not been put on a single one of them yet.

Mr. SWANSON. No; it has not, and I am not going to vote to put it on any appropriation bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, I am glad to hear the Senator say he will vote for it as a separate measure. I have such a measure pending before the Committee on Naval Affairs now. I am going to tell the Senator about it. He is on that committee and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is chairman of that committee. I am expecting that measure to be reported out. The American people are with me in this matter and some of you Senators are going to find that out. In due time we are going to vote on that measure in this body. Every time this flag question is discussed and every time a vote is had upon it, it helps the people back home in the States to get a better understanding of the situation here. I trust that they may be aroused and become interested enough to ask why Catholic influence can keep that cross flying over the United States flag.

Who is it that is fighting a change in this ridiculous and objectionable system of flying this cross above the Stars and Stripes? Any Protestant? No. Any Jew? No. Any Protestant Italians? No. Who is it? Is it the same group that secretly had the picture of the Catholic rosary printed upon our dollar bill in 1917? [Laughter.] Yes; and some Senators did not know it was on there until I exhibited it to them here in the Senate. There it was as plain as the nose on a man's face.

It was a clever piece of work to slip that Catholic design in and have it printed on the currency of the country, and we Senators did not know it until it was shown to us. Now they have put the Roman cross, or the Latin cross, above our flag, and we have found that out and they do not want us to take it down. They are boasting that they are going to capture America, and when foreign vessels passing our vessels upon the high seas on Sunday see the cross flying above our flag they think that it is only a question of time when the Catholics will control America. So the Catholics do not want the cross disturbed. One of their Senators here the other day referred to "God's authority on earth," and some of you did not know what he was talking about. He was evidently talking about the Pope. They think he is God's authority on earth. I do not accept that doctrine. I am willing for every church to worship as it chooses, but I am against the pernicious and dangerous political activities of the Roman Catholic hierarchy, and that question has got to be met squarely by the people of the United States. Let us lay the facts before the people of the country. Let the people know the truth. Will you, who voted to continue a custom that certain Catholics want continued, tell the people back home why you will not vote to change it for those Americans who want it changed?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I rise merely to call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to one fact which he has overlooked. Every day when we have adjourned on the previous day the Chaplain of the Senate comes into the Chamber; and the Vice President, representing the power of the people and the flag of the United States, steps down on a lower step and permits the Chaplain to occupy the place on the higher step and offer prayer. Thus far the Senator from Alabama has offered no objection, and I am very much surprised that he has not, though I presume in the near future he will do so.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut has said——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama can not be recognized. He has already spoken on the bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. I can do that. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frazier	Mayfield	Smoot
Barkley	Gerry	Metcalf	Steck
Bayard	Glass	Moses	Steiwer
Bingham	Glenn	Neely	Stephens
Black	Goff	Norbeck	Swanson
Blaine	Gould	Norris	Thomas, Idaho
Blease	Greene	Nye	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Hale	Oddie	Trammell
Bratton	Harris	Overman	Tydings
Brookhart	Harrison	Phipps	Tyson
Broussard	Hastings	Pittman	Vandenberg
Bruce	Hawes	Ransdell	Wagner
Burton	Hayden	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mass.
Capper	Heflin	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mont.
Caraway	Johnson	Robinson, Ind.	Warren
Couzens	Jones	Sackett	Waterman
Curtis	Kendrick	Schall	Watson
Dale	King	Sheppard	Wheeler
Deneen	McKellar	Shortridge
Edge	McMaster	Simmons
Fess	McNary	Smith

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed——

Mr. HEFLIN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 31, at the end of line 26, it is proposed to strike out the figures "$500" and insert in lieu thereof "$600."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I offered that amendment for the purpose of affording me an opportunity to reply to the very brilliant remarks of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] about the Vice President stepping aside to permit the Chaplain to step up to his desk where he sits or stands and offer prayer. That is all right. The fact is, however, that there is scarcely room enough up there for two good and stalwart Americans like the Vice President and our splendid Chaplain. Hereafter when the Chaplain steps up there to offer prayer, according to the way the Senator from Connecticut speaks and votes on this question, the United States flag which is still above the Chaplain when he prays in the Senate should be pulled down.

Is it the desire of some Senators to pull our flag down when religious services are being held? Have we a conflict here already between the American flag and the Roman flag, and have we an alien government within the American Government?

These are questions that should concern us. Will the time ever come when Protestant and Jewish churches all over the country will have to take down the United States flag and fly the Roman cross when they hold religious services? Will our public schools have to remove the Stars and Stripes in order to put up the banner of a Catholic parochial school?

I can not give my consent to have the American flag pulled down from its place of national sovereignty every time on Sunday somebody wants to give notice to a passing ship that religious service is being held.

O Mr. President, Judge Rice, of my State, a very able and distinguished man, once said, "When you play with the deep feeling of State or national sentiment you are playing with fire." There is, thank God, a nation-wide sentiment of profound respect and deep devotion for that flag. Most Americans love it and would be willing to die for it. We can not show it too much respect. We can not exalt it above its deserts. Is it not entitled to fly undisturbed at the top of its own staff? The South, the land of Lee, calls on the North, the land of Grant, to unite in settling this question for all time—that no flag or emblem shall require Old Glory to be pulled down to give it room above it.

This smart Roman trick that has been put over us in our Navy, which puts this cross above our flag, makes us the only country in all the world where the flag of national sovereignty is lowered to put a pennant or banner above it. I deny that the custom of flying a pennant or banner above our flag came from the mother country. Great Britain does not fly a pennant above her flag, and Great Britain does not lower the Union Jack to fly a pennant above it. The pennant is flown alongside of it or below it. If England ever did fly a cross above her flag it was before she broke away from Catholic rule and before she became a Protestant country. We now are the only country that lowers the flag on a ship to put a banner or a pennant above it, to give notice to passing ships that religious services are being held thereon.

Senators, again I express my deep regret and grave concern about the vote just recorded in the Senate against the rights of our American flag.

The opposition to the United States flag's right to be first and uppermost on its own staff on American battleships can not longer be disguised.

Why did you Senators vote to-day against giving to our national flag the recognition it deserves and is entitled to? Of what political influence is it that they are afraid? I want the people back home in the States of those who voted that way to ask them, "Are you afraid of the Catholic influence and the Catholic vote? We know they will punish you if you do not do their bidding at Washington, but we Protestants and Jews and others are getting tired of your political fear of and truckling to Roman Catholics who are seeking to control America, we want you to stand for what is right. If the Catholic suggests something that is good for America vote for it, but if he is wrong dare to say so. But above all things be a statesman, and a true American, and do not permit anybody to make you prove recreant in your respect, devotion, and unyielding obligation and loyalty to the red, white, and blue—the American flag."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments adopted as in Committee of the Whole. With the exception of the amendment on which a separate vote was reserved by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], without objection, the amendments will be concurred in. The question now recurs on concurring in the amendment adopted as in Committee of the Whole, upon which a separate vote was reserved by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. That is the amendment relative to the marines in Nicaragua.

Mr. HEFLIN. What is that amendment about?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL].

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum, so that all Senators may be here.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fess	McNary	Simmons
Barkley	Frazier	Mayfield	Smith
Bayard	Gerry	Metcalf	Smoot
Bingham	Glass	Moses	Steck
Black	Glenn	Neely	Steiwer
Blaine	Goff	Norbeck	Stephens
Blease	Gould	Norris	Swanson
Borah	Greene	Nye	Thomas, Idaho
Bratton	Hale	Oddie	Thomas, Okla.
Brookhart	Harris	Overman	Trammell
Broussard	Harrison	Phipps	Tydings
Bruce	Hastings	Pittman	Tyson
Burton	Hawes	Ransdell	Vandenberg
Capper	Hayden	Reed, Mo.	Wagner
Caraway	Heflin	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mass.
Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Jones	Robinson, Ind.	Warren
Dale	Kendrick	Sackett	Waterman
Deneen	King	Schall	Watson
Dill	McKellar	Sheppard	Wheeler
Edge	McMaster	Shortridge

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HALE obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, I merely wish to state that I have asked for a separate vote on this amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays when the vote comes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on yesterday afternoon, when this amendment was before the Senate, I voted for it. I should like to see the marines out of Nicaragua just as soon as is possible, consistent with the policies of the country and with what seems to be the wise thing to be done down there. I thought about this question, however, considerably during the evening, and I feel satisfied that we can depend upon the President of the United States—either the present President or the President who is to be inaugurated within a few days—to do the wise thing, the proper thing, and the patriotic thing. I do not have personal knowledge with reference to the conditions in Nicaragua. So, Mr. President, I propose to change my vote if there is a roll call on this amendment and vote against its adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. BRATTON, and other Senators called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I should like to get some light on this proposition. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. BORAH] here. He voted to bring out the marines. The distinguished senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], the ranking member of the minority on the Foreign Relations Committee, voted to bring out the marines. I do not now recall how the distinguished chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee [Mr. HALE] voted on that proposition.

Mr. HALE. I can very quickly tell the Senator. I voted "nay."

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has voted "nay" so much that that may be just a habit.

Mr. HALE. Not on this bill, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRISON. But I am wondering if the State Department has raised any objection to this proposition. Of course, if no one on the other side can give us that information, we can not have it. It may be that the Senator from Washington, who now changes his vote, has been caused to change his mind by word coming through some grapevine route that goes up to the residence of the President elect.

Mr. JONES. No, Mr. President; I have not seen the President elect since he came back from the South.

Mr. HARRISON. Then this is no direction to anyone to change his vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I simply desire to know how the question arises.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL]. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. Not knowing how he would vote, I should be disposed to withhold my vote; but I transfer the pair to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and vote "yea."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], which I transfer to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. NYE. The senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is unavoidably absent to-day. I understand that it is possible now to pair him. If present, he would vote "yea." He stands paired with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. LARRAZOLO].

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is unavoidably absent, that he has a pair with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS], who is also unavoidably absent, and that if my colleague were present and voting he would vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON. My colleague [Mr. STEPHENS] is attending a hearing before a committee of the House of Representatives. He is paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]. If my colleague were present and voting, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 48, as follows:

YEAS—32

Barkley	Dill	McKellar	Robinson, Ark.
Black	Frazier	McMaster	Sheppard
Blaine	Gerry	Mayfield	Simmons
Borah	Glass	Neely	Swanson
Bratton	Harris	Norris	Trammell
Brookhart	Harrison	Nye	Walsh, Mass.
Capper	Heflin	Overman	Walsh, Mont.
Caraway	King	Pittman	Wheeler.

NAYS—48

Ashurst	Fess	Metcalf	Smith
Bayard	Glenn	Moses	Smoot
Bingham	Goff	Norbeck	Steck
Blease	Gould	Oddie	Steiwer
Broussard	Greene	Phipps	Thomas, Idaho
Bruce	Hale	Ransdell	Tydings
Burton	Hastings	Reed, Mo.	Tyson
Couzens	Hawes	Reed, Pa.	Vandenberg
Curtis	Johnson	Robinson, Ind.	Wagner
Dale	Jones	Sackett	Warren
Deneen	Kendrick	Schall	Waterman
Edge	McNary	Shortridge	Watson

NOT VOTING—15

Copeland	Gillett	La Follette	Shipstead
Edwards	Hayden	Larrazolo	Stephens
Fletcher	Howell	McLean	Thomas, Okla.
George	Keyes	Pine

So the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was nonconcurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment. If no further amendment be proposed, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the clerks be authorized to correct the totals and any clerical errors.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE WAR DEPARTMENT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following action of the House of Representatives relative to certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 15712, the War Department appropriation bill:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
February 21, 1929.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 16, 28, 29, and 54 to the bill (H. R. 15712) entitled "An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes," and concur therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 41 and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"Two million one hundred forty-seven thousand two hundred and eighty-one dollars, and in addition thereto there is hereby made available for this purpose the sum of $224,750 of funds received during the fiscal year 1930 from the purchase by enlisted men of the Army of their discharges and the total sum made available in this act for the Organized Reserves shall remain available until December 31, 1930, and no part of such total sum shall be available for any expense incident to giving flight training to any officer of the Officers' Reserve Corps who shall be found by such agency as the Secretary of War may designate not qualified to perform combat service as an aviation pilot."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 52 and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In line 6 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "$25,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$15,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 55 and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For bank protection for the control of floods and the prevention of erosion of the Missouri River at and near the town of Niobrara in the State of Nebraska $85,000, said work to be carried on under the control and supervision of the Chief of Engineers of the War Department: Provided, That the local interests shall contribute two-thirds of the cost of said work."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 56 and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For bank protection for the control of floods and the prevention of erosion of the Missouri River at and near the town of Yankton in the State of South Dakota $85,000, said work to be carried on under the control and supervision of the Chief of Engineers of the War Department: Provided, That the local interests shall contribute two-thirds of the cost of said work."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 57 and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That as a contribution in aid from the United States, in view of the unprecedented conditions obtaining in Conway levee district No. 1, Conway County, Ark., in the reconstruction of the levee along the left bank of the Arkansas River in the said Conway levee district No. 1, as provided under the terms of section 7 of the flood control act, approved May 15, 1928 (45 Stat. 537), authority is hereby granted to the Secretary of War, upon the recommendation and approval of the Chief of Engineers, to relocate all or any part of said levee when in the opinion of the Chief of Engineers such relocation shall be deemed practical and feasible: Provided, That the total expense occasioned to the United States by reason of the provisions of this paragraph shall not exceed $20,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 58 and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, under the direction of the Secretary of War, is authorized and directed to make an examination and survey of the Conduit Road from the District of Columbia line to Great Falls, Md., of Cabin John Bridge, and of land contiguous to that part of such road and to such bridge, for the purpose of making recommendations for improving and widening that part of such road and such bridge, and, upon the completion of such examination and survey, to report to Congress the results thereof, together with estimates of the probable cost of carrying out such recommendations, and together also with recommendations as to the amount, if any, which justly should be advanced therefor by the Government of the United States. There is hereby appropriated the sum of $3,000 to carry out the provisions of this paragraph."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 59 and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Upon the filing with the Comptroller General of the United States of evidence establishing to his satisfaction that John W. Stockett has been released by the other party thereto of all claims and demands whatsoever under a certain agreement dated April 11, 1927, and expressly released of the obligation as therein stipulated for the payment of 40 per cent of the amount involved for assistance and expenses in securing compensation from the United States, the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated for the payment as hereinafter specified in full settlement of all claims and demands whatsoever arising out of the use by the United States of the Stockett priming device and/or the Stockett breech mechanism on guns, and thereupon there shall be paid under this appropriation the sum of $45,000 to the said John W. Stockett, and the sum of $5,000 shall be paid to and retained by the other party to said agreement as compensation for his services: Provided, That if the evidence of release aforesaid is not filed with the Comptroller General of the United States upon his request within the time specified by him this appropriation shall lapse and revert back to the Treasury and be as if no appropriation had been made."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 60 and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For the relief of the following States as a reimbursement or contribution in aid from the United States, induced by the extraordinary conditions of necessity and emergency resulting from the unusually serious financial loss to such States through the damage to or destruction of roads and bridges by the floods of 1927, imposing a public charge against the property of said States beyond their reasonable capacity to bear, and without acknowledgment of any liability on the part of the United States in connection with the restoration of such local improvements, namely: Missouri, $258,418; Mississippi, $628,000; Louisiana, $967,582; Arkansas, $1,800,000; in all, $3,654,000; to be available immediately and to remain available until expended: Provided, That such portion of the sums hereby appropriated as will be available for future construction shall be expended by the State highway departments of the respective States with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture for the restoration, including relocation, of roads and bridges so damaged or destroyed, in such manner as to give the largest measure of permanent relief, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided further, That any sum hereby appropriated for any State shall become available when the State shall have actually expended or shall have made available for expenditure a like sum from State funds for the purposes contained herein: Provided further, That where any roads or bridges shall be or shall have been constructed of a more expensive type than those which were damaged or destroyed, the appropriation contained herein shall not be used to defray any part of the increase in cost occasioned thereby."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House to Senate amendments Nos. 41, 52, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, and 60 to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

On February 20, 1929:

S. J. Res. 110. Joint resolution to provide for accepting, ratifying, and confirming the cessions of certain islands of the Samoan group to the United States, and for other purposes.

On February 21, 1929:

S. 200. An act for the relief of Mary L. Roebken and Esther M. Roebken;

S. 584. An act for the relief of Frederick D. Swank;

S. 1121. An act for the relief of Grover Ashley;

S. 2439. An act for the relief of Arthur Waldenmeyer;

S. 2821. An act for the relief of Capt. Will H. Gordon;

S. 5066. An act extending the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Francis River at or near St. Francis, Ark.;

S. 5452. An act to amend the trading with the enemy act so as to extend the time within which claims may be filed with the Alien Property Custodian; and

S. 5550. An act to authorize the purchase by the Secretary of Commerce of a site, and the construction and equipment of a building thereon, for use as a constant frequency monitoring radio station, and for other purposes.

On February 23, 1929:

S. J. Res. 213. Joint resolution to provide for extending the time in which the United States Supreme Court Building Commission shall report to Congress.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RAILROADS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the report of the Director General of Railroads for the calendar year 1928.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 23, 1929.

(NOTE.—Report accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.)

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 924) for the relief of Joe D. Donisi.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3269) providing for the advancement on the retired list of the Army of Hunter Liggett and Robert L. Bullard, major generals, United States Army, retired, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. JAMES, Mr. FURLOW, and Mr. McSWAIN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

PROPOSED NICARAGUAN CANAL

Mr. EDGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 785, Senate Joint Resolution 117, authorizing an investigation and survey for a Nicaraguan canal.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, there is a matter of high privilege that I gave notice on yesterday I should call to the attention of the Senate to-day.

Mr. EDGE. Will the Senator permit a vote to be taken on my motion, so that I can lay the joint resolution temporarily aside for his matter of high privilege?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well, if that is the understanding.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I think if we are going to take up the other matter it should be taken up at this time, rather than take up the Nicaraguan measure and then lay it aside.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, there is not any business before the Senate.

Mr. DILL. There will be.

Mr. EDGE. The motion is in order. I should like to have the question put, and then of course I will lay the joint resolution aside for the matter of high privilege in which the Senator from Missouri is interested.

Mr. DILL. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. EDGE. It does not require unanimous consent for a privileged matter. It comes up anyhow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) authorizing an investigation and survey for a Nicaraguan canal.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. EDGE. I gladly temporarily lay aside the unfinished business for the purpose indicated by the Senator from Missouri.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business will be suspended for a question of privilege.

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I should like very much to arrest the attention of Senators for a few minutes. In view of the fact that so many Senators left the Chamber immediately after the vote on the naval appropriation bill, without notice that this matter was coming up at this time, I think it is only fair to them to raise the question of lack of a quorum, so that we may have a full attendance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edge	McMaster	Shortridge
Barkley	Fess	McNary	Simmons
Bayard	Frazier	Mayfield	Smith
Bingham	Gerry	Moses	Smoot
Black	Glass	Neely	Steck
Blaine	Glenn	Norbeck	Steiwer
Blease	Goff	Norris	Stephens
Borah	Gould	Nye	Thomas, Idaho
Bratton	Hale	Oddie	Trammell
Brookhart	Harris	Overman	Tydings
Broussard	Harrison	Phipps	Tyson
Bruce	Hastings	Pine	Vandenberg
Burton	Hawes	Pittman	Wagner
Capper	Hayden	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Heflin	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mont.
Couzens	Johnson	Reed, Pa.	Warren
Curtis	Jones	Robinson, Ark.	Waterman
Dale	Kendrick	Robinson, Ind.	Watson
Deneen	King	Schall	Wheeler
Dill	McKellar	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Seventy-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me to submit a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I will preface my request with a brief statement.

A number of bills on the calendar providing for additional judges and a new circuit to be known as the tenth circuit, which appear to be necessary, have been held up for some time, and no action has been taken on them. I understand that at this time they may be disposed of, and I will state that it is my purpose to ask for the immediate consideration of Orders of Business 1513, 1514, 1515, 1516, 1517, 1518, and 1874.

I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that these bills be considered, beginning with Calendar No. 1516.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was out of the Chamber for a moment; I would like to know what these bills are.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I just stated they provide for the appointment of additional judges and for the creation of the tenth circuit. It is represented that the condition of business in these various districts makes this action indispensable. My attention has been called to it by a number of lawyers and judges who are familiar with the condition in these various districts. The congestion of the dockets is alarming.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of the bills, although I am opposed to some of them, but I want to submit a very few words concerning the same.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I was out of the Chamber when the Senator from Arkansas made his first request. I understand from the Senator from Utah that he proposes to discuss the matter.

Mr. KING. Very briefly.

Mr. EDGE. I shall be willing to have the unfinished business laid aside if these bills can be passed without debate.

Mr. KING. I shall not take five minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think, in view of that, there should be no objection.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, we will have to have some night sessions real soon, as there are quite a number of bills on the calendar which ought to be considered. I am interested in the Nicaraguan resolution, if the Senator from New Jersey is going to insist on its consideration. How long will it take to consider these bills?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think it will take only a few minutes—probably not over five minutes.

Mr. EDGE. Assurance has been given that it will take no more than five minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No one wants to discuss the subjects involved in these bills except the Senator from Utah, and he has just stated that he will speak very briefly. I myself do not desire to take further time of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair will state to the Senator from Arkansas that heretofore an order was made temporarily laying aside the unfinished business. It will not be necessary to repeat that order.

The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of seven bills on the calendar. The clerk will state the first bill.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR SOUTH CAROLINA

The bill (H. R. 12811) to provide for the appointment of one additional district judge for the eastern and western districts of South Carolina was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one additional district judge for the United States District Court for the Eastern and Western Districts of South Carolina, who shall, at the time of his appointment, be a resident and a citizen of the State of South Carolina.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I voted against this bill as I have not received sufficient information showing that another judge is needed in South Carolina.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR PENNSYLVANIA

The bill (S. 5193) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Middle District of the State of Pennsylvania was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I may as well now state my general objection to these bills.

Mr. President, a few years ago there was great agitation for an enormous increase in the number of Federal judges. The propaganda in favor of this increase swelled like a mighty tide and invaded the committee rooms of Congress. It was represented that litigants could not procure the trial of their causes; that justice was being denied the people; that the courts were overwhelmed with work and were unable to properly function. It was my opinion then that much of the sentiment back of the demands for additional judges was fictitious and manufactured, in part, by organizations which exert considerable influence in our political life. Congress responded to the propaganda and passed a bill creating, as I now recall, more than 26 additional judges.

Notwithstanding the solemn declarations that the situation throughout the country imperatively required the immediate appointment of this number of additional judges, many of them were not appointed for more than a year. Factional quarrels in the Republican Party delayed the appointments; political considerations seemed to control and determine these important appointments. It was not creditable to the administration that the judiciary was made a political football and that partisan politics and political considerations played no unimportant part in the selection of persons for these judicial places. My information is that some of these appointments were not satisfactory to the people and weakened the Federal judiciary.

It is regrettable that our judicial system can not be removed from politics and that the judges are not selected because of their great ability and their fitness for office.

It is unnecessary to state that the judiciary is perhaps the most important branch of our Government whether State or National. If the people lose confidence in their judges, then our political system is in danger.

Mr. President, since the passage of the act providing for this large number of judges we have passed further measures adding to the large list of Federal judges throughout the country. In my opinion many of these appointments were unnecessary and wholly unjustifiable. Numerous bills are now pending in Congress for additional circuit and district judges. There seems to be a concerted movement backed by rather powerful forces for the creation of additional judicial districts to be followed by the appointment of additional judges.

The Senator from Arkansas has called up for consideration a number of bills providing for additional judges. One of these measures divides the eighth circuit and creates an additional circuit with four circuit judges. Perhaps a few additional judges are required in some parts of the country, but in my opinion there is no necessity for the appointment of all the judges provided for in the bills which we are now acting upon. It is said that the Volstead Act is responsible for the claimed congested condition of the courts, and creates an imperative necessity for a large number of additional judges.

Mr. President, the future will show a diminution in the number of prosecutions under the Volstead Act. Moreover there is reason to believe that subordinate tribunals with judicial powers can be created to try misdemeanors and most of the cases arising under the Volstead Act. There are eminent lawyers who believe that Congress may set up tribunals with authority to try minor offenses. If this view should prevail and tribunals of limited jurisdiction should be provided, then the Federal district courts would be relieved of a considerable part of the work which they are now performing.

Mr. President, it is interesting to note the expedition with which cases are disposed of in the English courts. A judge there will dispose of a half dozen criminal cases within a day, most of them being felonies. We have much to learn in the United States in the matter of judicial procedure. Reforms are needed in our criminal law and in our criminal procedure, both in our State and Federal courts.

The records brought to the attention of the Judiciary Committee, of which I am a member, show that some of our judges possess executive ability of a very high order. I do not wish to indulge in comparisons or to criticize our courts, but it is a fact which can not be ignored that in some districts the cases are disposed of in a most expeditious manner. I remember when the Judiciary Committee was considering the bill a few years ago providing for more than 25 judges, attention was drawn to the fact that one of the large States constituted but one district with but one district judge, and that he had no difficulty in disposing of all matters brought to his attention. The record shows that the circuit court of the ninth circuit has three judges. The docket in the circuit shows a very large number of cases disposed of, and, so far as I am advised, there is no request for an additional judge. We are about to divide the eighth circuit and give to it and the tenth circuit, which is to be carved from it, a considerable increase in the number of judges.

As I have stated, there may be need for a few additional judges, but there is no necessity for providing so large a number as are given by the pending bill as well as other measures recently passed by Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is hereby authorized to appoint an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Middle District of Pennsylvania, who shall reside in said district and shall possess the same qualifications and have the same powers and jurisdiction and receive the same compensation and allowances as the present judge of said district.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect upon its approval by the President.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR SOUTH DAKOTA

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I now ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8551) to create an additional judge in the district of South Dakota.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the District of South Dakota, who shall reside in said district and whose term of office, compensation, duties, and powers shall be the same as now provided by law for the judge of said district.

SEC. 2. When a vacancy shall occur in the office of the existing judge for said district such vacancy shall not be filled unless authorized by the Congress.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect upon its approval by the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment previously offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE] is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I now ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9200) to provide for the appointment of three additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, three additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, who shall reside in said district and who shall possess the same powers, perform the same duties, and receive the same compensation as the present district judges of said district.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR THE NINTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I now ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 8295, for the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the ninth judicial circuit.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 1, after line 5, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. When a vacancy shall occur, due to the death, resignation, or retirement of the present senior circuit judge of said circuit, such vacancy shall not be filled unless authorized by Congress.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional circuit judge for the ninth judicial circuit.

SEC. 2. When a vacancy shall occur due to the death, resignation, or retirement of the present senior circuit judge of said circuit, such vacancy shall not be filled unless authorized by Congress.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Montana a question. This does not provide for another judge, so that when the present incumbent, who may be ill, ceases to act, there will be only three circuit judges?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The present senior judge, Judge Gilbert, is now approaching 80 years of age; he still does work, however. But upon his death or retirement no successor will be appointed.

Mr. KING. May I say that in the ninth circuit, with three judges, more cases are disposed of than in almost any other circuit in the United States. This indicates what judges can do when they work. I want to compliment the judges of the ninth circuit for their excellent and able service and the great ability which they have exhibited.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I desire to say that the bill as it came from the House contemplated four permanent judges, but I think they can get along very well with three.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE, EASTERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 14659, to provide for the appointment of two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "Senate," to strike out the words "two additional judges" and to insert the words "an additional judge" in lieu thereof, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York, who shall reside in said district and who shall possess the same powers, perform the same duties, and receive the same compensation as the present district judges of said district.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to provide for the appointment of an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York."

CREATION OF NEW JUDICIAL CIRCUIT

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Now, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 16658, to amend sections 116, 118, and 126 of the Judicial Code, as amended, to divide the eighth judicial circuit of the United States and to create a tenth judicial circuit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to express my disagreement with the committee with respect to that bill. I am in favor of a division of the eighth circuit and the creation of the tenth. I am not in agreement with the committee in recommending five judges for the eighth, and four for the tenth. As I stated a moment ago, the ninth circuit, which has more business than either of these circuits will have, manages to get along with three judges. By this bill we provide five judges for the eighth circuit after having withdrawn five States therefrom, and propose to give to the new circuit four judges. In my opinion, four judges would be ample for the ninth circuit, and three for the tenth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 4, line 6, after the words "St. Louis," to insert the words "Kansas City," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 116 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 211), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 116. There shall be 10 judicial circuits of the United States, constituted as follows:

"First. The first circuit shall include the districts of Rhode Island, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Maine, and Porto Rico.

"Second. The second circuit shall include the districts of Vermont, Connecticut, and New York.

"Third. The third circuit shall include the districts of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware.

"Fourth. The fourth circuit shall include the districts of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina.

"Fifth. The fifth circuit shall include the districts of Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas.

"Sixth. The sixth circuit shall include the districts of Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky, and Tennessee.

"Seventh. The seventh circuit shall include the districts of Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin.

"Eighth. The eighth circuit shall include the districts of Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, and Arkansas.

"Ninth. The ninth circuit shall include the districts of California, Oregon, Nevada, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Hawaii, and Arizona.

"Tenth. The tenth circuit shall include the districts of Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Kansas, Oklahoma, and New Mexico."

SEC. 2. Section 118 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 213; 45 Stat. L. 492; Public, No. 664, 70th Cong.), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 118. There shall be in the sixth, seventh, and tenth circuits, respectively, four circuit judges; and in the second and eighth circuits, respectively, five circuit judges; and in each of the other circuits three circuit judges, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Each circuit judge shall receive a salary of $12,500 a year, payable monthly. Each circuit judge shall reside within his circuit, and when appointed shall be a resident of the circuit for which he is appointed. The circuit judges in each circuit shall be judges of the circuit court of appeals in that circuit, and it shall be the duty of each circuit judge in each circuit to sit as one of the judges of the circuit court of appeals in that circuit from time to time according to law. Nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent any circuit judge holding district court or otherwise, as provided by other sections of the Judicial Code."

SEC. 3. Section 126 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 223; U. S. C., Sup. I, title 28, sec. 223), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 126. A term shall be held annually by the circuit courts of appeals in the several judicial circuits at the following places, and at such times as may be fixed by said courts, respectively: In the first circuit in Boston, and when in its judgment the public interests require in San Juan, P. R.; in the second circuit, in New York; in the third circuit, in Philadelphia; in the fourth circuit, in Richmond and in Asheville, N. C.; in the fifth circuit, in New Orleans, Atlanta, Fort Worth, and Montgomery; in the sixth circuit, in Cincinnati; in the seventh circuit, in Chicago; in the eighth circuit, in St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, and St. Paul; in the ninth circuit, in San Francisco, and each year in two other places in said circuit to be designated by the judges of said court; in the tenth circuit, in Denver, Wichita, and Oklahoma City, provided that suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Oklahoma City are furnished free of expense to the United States; and in each of the above circuits terms may be held at such other times and in such other places as said courts, respectively, may from time to time designate, except that terms shall be held in Atlanta on the first Monday in October, in Fort Worth on the first Monday in November, and in Montgomery on the third Monday in October. All appeals and other appellate proceedings which may be taken or prosecuted from the district courts of the United States in the State of Georgia, in the State of Texas, and in the State of Alabama to the circuit court of appeals for the fifth judicial circuit shall be heard and disposed of, respectively, by said court at the terms held in Atlanta, in Fort Worth, and in Montgomery, except that appeals in cases of injunctions and in all other cases which, under the statutes and rules, or in the opinion of the court, are entitled to be brought to a speedy hearing, may be heard and disposed of wherever said court may be sitting. All appeals and other appellate proceedings which may be taken or prosecuted from the district court of the United States at Beaumont, Tex., to the circuit court of appeals for the fifth circuit, shall be heard and disposed of by the said circuit court of appeals at the terms of court held at New Orleans, except that appeals in cases of injunctions and in all other cases which, under the statutes and rules, or in the opinion of the court, are entitled to be brought to a speedy hearing, may be heard and disposed of wherever said court may be sitting."

SEC. 4. Any circuit judge of the eighth circuit as constituted before the effective date of this act, who resides within the eighth circuit as constituted by this act, is assigned as a circuit judge to such part of the former eighth circuit as is constituted by this act the eighth circuit, and shall be a circuit judge thereof; and any circuit judge of the eighth circuit as constituted before the effective date of this act, who resides within the tenth circuit as constituted by this act, is assigned as a circuit judge of such part of the former eighth circuit as is constituted by this act the tenth circuit, and shall be a circuit judge thereof.

SEC. 5. Where before the effective date of this act any appeal or other proceeding has been filed with the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit as constituted before the effective date of this act—

(1) If any hearing before said court has been held in the case, or if the case has been submitted for decision, then further proceedings in respect of the case shall be had in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been enacted.

(2) If no hearing before said court has been held in the case, and the case has not been submitted for decision, then the appeal, or other proceeding, together with the original papers, printed records, and record entries duly certified, shall, by appropriate orders duly entered of record, be transferred to the circuit court of appeals to which it would have gone had this act been in full force and effect at the time such appeal was taken or other proceeding commenced, and further proceedings in respect of the case shall be had in the same manner and with the same effect as if the appeal or other proceeding had been filed in said court.

SEC. 6. This act shall take effect 30 days after its enactment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, unquestionably selections for the judiciary should be free from partisan politics. I think it my duty to say that in at least one instance which has come within my observation the present incumbent of the White House, although a Republican, filled a vacancy which arose in the State of Arkansas by the appointment of a prominent Democrat solely, as I believe, for the reason that the appointee was preeminently qualified for the position.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I say to my friend from Arkansas that out of the 25 or 26 judges provided for a few years ago, one Democrat only was appointed, as I recall, and that was because there could not be found a suitable Republican lawyer in the entire State.

JUDGE FRANCIS A. WINSLOW

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the measure on the calendar next preceding the last one referred to by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is a joint resolution which came from the House. When it was reached on being reported on the last call of the calendar an objection was made to its consideration by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE]. The joint resolution, it seems to me, merely asks of this body a courtesy for the House of Representatives. It relates to an investigation of the conduct of a Federal judge in the State of New York. It does not seem to me the merits of the matter are before us at all. The House is desirous of carrying on an investigation during the recess, but is powerless to do so, except upon the adoption of such a joint resolution as this. The House, having asked this of us, it seems to me that the Senator from South Carolina should give his consent. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 425) providing for an investigation of Francis A. Winslow, United States district judge for the southern district in New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 425?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I would like to inquire of Senators who have had longer observation and more experience than I if it is usual for one House or both Houses of Congress to investigate a Federal judge? I had supposed that the method of dealing with matters of that kind was by impeachment.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what this is.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This looks to a possible impeachment. The ordinary procedure is for the House to refer to the Judiciary Committee charges in this kind of a matter. If the Judiciary Committee feel that there is a basis for an impeachment, they so recommend and prepare the articles of impeachment. This is preliminary—looking to the possible impeachment or the advisability of impeachment.

Mr. GLASS. Then it is not unusual?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; it is the regular procedure, except——

Mr. NORRIS. It is unusual in that the ordinary impeachment takes place while Congress is in session. The House desires, in the interest of the expedition of business, that the committee shall do its work during the recess. The House not being a continuing body, the joint resolution must be passed in order that they may have authority to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 425) providing for an investigation of Francis A. Winslow, United States district judge for the southern district of New York, which was read, as follows:

Whereas certain statements against Francis A. Winslow, United States district judge for the southern district of New York, have been transmitted by the Speaker of the House of Representatives to the Judiciary Committee: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That LEONIDAS C. DYER, CHARLES A. CHRISTOPHERSON, ANDREW J. HICKEY, GEORGE R. STOBBS, HATTON W. SUMNERS, ANDREW J. MONTAGUE, and FRED H. DOMINICK, being a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to inquire into the official conduct of Francis A. Winslow, United States district judge for the southern district of New York, and to report to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House whether in their opinion the said Francis A. Winslow has been guilty of any acts which in contemplation of the Constitution are high crimes or misdemeanors requiring the interposition of the constitutional powers of the House; and that the said special committee have power to hold meetings in the city of Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, and to send for persons and papers, to administer the customary oaths to witnesses, all process to be signed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives under its seal and be served by the Sergeant at Arms of the House or his special messenger; to sit during the sessions of the House until adjournment sine die of the Seventieth Congress and thereafter until said inquiry is completed, and report to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of the Seventy-first Congress.

SEC. 2. That said special committee be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ such stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as they may deem necessary, and all expenses incurred by said special committee, including the expenses of such committee when sitting in or outside the District of Columbia, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on vouchers ordered by said committee, signed by the chairman of said committee: Provided, however, That the total expenditures authorized by this resolution shall not exceed the sum of $5,000.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

POINTS OF HISTORIC INTEREST IN THE NATIONAL CAPITAL

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on yesterday afternoon the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] had to leave the Chamber because he was not feeling well and requested me to report for him a resolution from the Committee on Printing and ask for its immediate consideration. I now submit the report and request the immediate consideration of the resolution. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably, without amendment, the resolution (S. Res. 312).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 312) submitted by Mr. MOSES on January 28, 1929, was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the pamphlet, Points of Historic Interest in the National Capital, with accompanying illustrations, be printed as a Senate document, and that 10,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Chair? I do not see the majority leader [Mr. CURTIS] here, but I want to know if any arrangement has been made by which we can consider the calendar in the near future.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I can supply second-hand information for the Senator from South Carolina. The Senator from Kansas remarked earlier in the morning in my presence that he hoped to secure unanimous consent for an evening early next week for that purpose.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I can say to the Senator from South Carolina that I talked with the Republican leader and can assure him that there will be at least two evenings and perhaps one day that will be devoted to the calendar.

Mr. SMITH. There are some matters of importance on the calendar which I am very anxious to have considered and I merely wanted to know if any time had been set aside for a call of the calendar, because I do not want to interfere now with other plans, but I do want to have those matters considered before final adjournment.

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I had announced to the Senate that I intended to call attention to the report of the committee on the Vare case this afternoon. Because of the desire of Senators to have the Nicaraguan canal matter considered I have agreed to postpone the Vare question until Monday, at which time I shall ask the attention of the Senate. I very earnestly invite Senators to read the report of the committee between this time and Monday noon.

PROPOSED NICARAGUAN CANAL

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] prefers to wait until a later date to present the privileged matter to which he referred, I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) authorizing an investigation and survey for a Nicaraguan canal.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I have spoken on various occasions on the subject matter of the pending joint resolution and I shall take only a few moments now to restate the object and, in my judgment, the great importance and necessity for expediting its consideration.

The joint resolution provides simply and alone for information. It does not establish any policy at all. It provides that Congress and the country shall be informed through an investigation to be made by the Board of Engineers as to the practicability and feasibility of taking advantage of the right of way which we purchased from the Government of Nicaragua to construct an interoceanic canal across the isthmus at that point; likewise to be given all information as to the feasibility and practicability of increasing the facilities of the Panama Canal. It has been suggested that it might be possible to install a third set of locks at Panama and thus increase the facilities of the Panama Canal approximately one-third.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. KENDRICK. I desire to ask the Senator whether or not the right to build a canal granted by the Government of Nicaragua is a perpetual right?

Mr. EDGE. Yes; it is a right given to the United States under what is known as the Bryan-Chamorro treaty, which was negotiated and ratified by the Senate in 1914, according to my recollection.

Mr. KENDRICK. I wonder if the Senator has any maps showing the line of the proposed Nicaraguan canal?

Mr. EDGE. The Isthmian Canal Commission appointed in 1899, as I recall, for the purpose of considering the same general questions, submitted a report to Congress which appears in Senate Document No. 54, volume 7, report 1899–1901. In that report they proposed a route across Nicaragua and at the same time discussed the feasibility of our taking over the Panama Canal, which then had been partially constructed by the French. In the report to which I have referred at length on a previous occasion in the Senate, the commission recommended that the Government proceed with the construction of the Nicaraguan canal, but Congress in its wisdom decided to buy the rights of the French in the uncompleted Panama Canal and complete the same, which, of course, the Senator well knows has been done.

We are now facing this situation which justifies and, in fact, requires the inquiry that I am proposing as chairman of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals. The last report of the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone covering the activities up to June 30, 1928, made it perfectly clear that within 10 to 20 years based upon the present business the maximum facilities of the canal would be reached.

Mr. KENDRICK. That would mean even though the facilities of the locks as they are now constituted should be doubled?

Mr. EDGE. No; that means the present facilities. The maximum of the present facilities of the Panama Canal, with the two locks and the water supply now available, based on the business of the past, would be reached in from 10 to 20 years. I might say, supplementing that statement, that a newspaper report from Balboa on February 2 states that the toll collections averaged over $80,000 daily and a total of $2,500,000 in January, which constituted a new month's record for the Panama Canal traffic and exceeds by almost $60,000 in receipts the record made in December, 1928. In other words, the record in January, 1929, demonstrates that the increase in traffic is even going beyond the estimates of the governor in his last report.

Mr. KENDRICK. I was rather surprised to have the limitation of time when we would reach the complete capacity of the Panama Canal placed so far away, because I had reason to believe, from personal inquiries and investigations, that it would reach its full capacity within 5 to 10 years.

Mr. EDGE. I have attempted to be generous in my estimates, but with the continuation of business as demonstrated in January, the Senator's prediction is quite possible of fulfillment.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. DILL. By the placing of additional locks at the canal and keeping them open it is estimated the capacity can be doubled or trebled, is it not?

Mr. EDGE. I think it is estimated, and naturally I would so assume from a layman's standpoint, that it would increase the traffic approximately one-third.

Mr. DILL. My understanding is it can easily be doubled and can probably be trebled, and that the only question is a matter of water supply.

Mr. EDGE. I was about to remark that that is a very important matter. At the present moment we have authorized an expenditure of $12,000,000 to build dams to carry out what is known as the Alhajuela project, in order to insure sufficient water to operate the present facilities of the canal. If we add a third line of locks, the question of whether we can have furnished through any mechanical devices, dams or otherwise, a sufficient water supply to operate the third lock in the canal is a most serious question. The Governor of the Panama Canal Zone, in a personal conference which I had with him a month or so ago while in Washington, stated that it is most important that a very careful investigation of all these possibilities be had to determine our future policy.

Mr. DILL. Is it not a fact that Secretary Davis of the War Department said the facilities could be quadrupled?

Mr. EDGE. They could not be increased at all if we could not get the necessary water.

Mr. DILL. Oh, well, but the fact remains that the water can be obtained up there.

Mr. EDGE. The fact remains on the testimony of the Governor of the Canal Zone himself that he does not know—and no one apparently knows, without a very careful engineering investigation—whether it can be accomplished, and he has asked that the investigation be made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EDGE. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from New Jersey is entirely right about the fact that it is absolutely necessary to have an investigation before it can be determined whether or not the canal can be enlarged at all. In addition to the lack of water supply, the danger of slides will be vastly increased, so many engineers claim, if the canal shall be broadened so as to provide for increased traffic.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] is exactly right when he says that the Panama Canal will be used to its utmost capacity in six or seven years; it will be but a very short time until that happens; and it is absolutely necessary that something should be done at once to provide increased canal facilities.

Mr. EDGE. I am inclined to that opinion, but I did not intend to make any statement that could be seriously questioned as to the future facilities of the canal.

Mr. President, if this be correct—and it is, and can not be successfully disputed—we know perfectly well that it will require at the minimum from 10 to 15 years to construct a new canal. It will require a number of years, even though it were practical, to install third locks; and during the time the third locks were being installed it is well known, as happens in reconstructing any large public enterprise, that the present facilities of the canal to a great extent would be more or less put out of business during the time of construction. So we are faced with a very important decision—an imperative decision, in my judgment—if we are to continue interoceanic canal facilities, of deciding what policy we shall adopt in order to accommodate the world traffic and the commerce of our own country.

The joint resolution, as I have repeatedly said, simply provides for securing the information necessary. We paid $3,000,000 for a right of way across Nicaragua. It is inconceivable to me that Congress should be denied the technical information that would result from an investigation by the engineers as to what it would cost to build the Nicaraguan canal; as to its practicability, either as a sea-level waterway or one with locks, and, in fact, all information relative to the subject. We are certainly not afraid to have information. The mere fact of having information in the possession of the Senate is no criterion as to what the Senate will do, so far as its future policy in building a canal or increasing canal facilities is concerned.

I might point back to the results following the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, to which I referred a few moments ago. That commission clearly and positively recommended the construction of the Nicaraguan canal, but, I repeat, Congress in its wisdom, after almost years of debate, which was led by the late distinguished Senator from Alabama, Mr. Morgan, decided to complete the Panama Canal at an estimated cost higher than that of the then proposed Nicaraguan Canal.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

Mr. EDGE. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. KENDRICK. I should like to ask the Senator if he will not give us some information as to what the right of way across the isthmus includes. I understood him to state a moment ago that it cost the Government $3,000,000.

Mr. EDGE. It cost the Government $3,000,000, which has already been paid.

Mr. KENDRICK. How much territory does that right of way include?

Mr. EDGE. I shall be very glad to enlighten the Senator. The treaty providing for the right of way across Nicaragua provides that the United States may utilize any part of Nicaragua. It is not specified that we shall use any particular section, but the Canal Commission, after making its investigation as to a practical waterway, recommended that the United States Government should enter from the Atlantic through the San Juan River, which is the boundary line between Nicaragua and Costa Rica. This investigation occurred several years before we purchased the right of way.

Mr. KENDRICK. As a result of that recommendation, was the line of the canal limited to the particular tract along the boundary line?

Mr. EDGE. The line of the canal is in no way limited. It may be changed by negotiations, which are provided for in the treaty between Nicaragua and the United States.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

Mr. EDGE. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. What percentage of the $3,000,000 ever went to the Government of Nicaragua?

Mr. EDGE. I can not answer that question.

Mr. DILL. That goes to the very heart of the manner in which we secured the treaty and the treaty rights. I think the Senator ought to tell us what happened about that.

Mr. EDGE. The treaty was negotiated by the Secretary of State, Mr. Bryan, under the administration of President Woodrow Wilson. The treaty is known as the Bryan-Chamorro treaty.

Mr. DILL. I know all about that, and I know how Chamorro got his position down there, too; but I asked the Senator from New Jersey what became of the $3,000,000? Who got it?

Mr. EDGE. If I may be permitted, without in any way criticizing the Senator from Washington, I desire to say that I can not feel that there is any justifiable reason why any troubles or misunderstandings—if they do exist or have existed—should be loaded on this information-seeking joint resolution. Whatever was done with the money—and I do not know—the fact remains that we have the right of way under a treaty legally entered into and ratified by the Senate of the United States. We are now facing the important decision to which I have referred; and it seems to be only common business sense that the Senate be given the information as to whether it is practicable to build a canal or whether it is not.

Mr. DILL. But the fact is, as the Senator knows, that less than one-third of that money ever went to the Government of Nicaragua.

Mr. EDGE. I have no knowledge whatever on the subject, or I should be very glad, indeed, to give it to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. The Senator, in other words, does not want to discuss that phase of the question. I will undertake later to do so.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator, of course, can discuss, if he likes, any phase of Nicaraguan relations, but the question does not relate to the subject matter of the pending joint resolution.

Mr. DILL. It relates directly to this whole subject, because it goes to the very treaty rights themselves, and I wanted the Senator to tell us something about that phase of the subject.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. EDGE. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I happened to know the late W. J. Bryan very well; we were friends through a long period of years; I thought of him very highly; I think he was an absolutely honest man, as honest as any man in this country, and I do not believe he would have been connected with any shady transaction in connection with the purchase of a right of way over the isthmus of Nicaragua. I should like to hear if there is anything that reflects upon that treaty or the procurement of that treaty. If the Senator knows of anything of that kind, I think he ought to disclose it to the Senate.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I was just going to suggest that the Senator from Washington in his time can discuss that subject, and I am sure the Senate will be glad to listen to anything he may have to say.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I made no reflection on Mr. Bryan. I was trying to get some information from the Senator from New Jersey about how these treaty rights were secured and what was done with the money which we paid for those rights. The Senator from New Jersey does not want to discuss that question.

Mr. EDGE. I am very sorry, but my investigation and my conception of my responsibility as chairman of the Interoceanic Canals Committee have not led me into any research of that kind. My impression of the committee's duty is that it should try to secure for Congress necessary information relative to canal construction, and later it will be for the Congress to decide the policy to be pursued. The right of way is ours, and I assume it was secured entirely openly and above board. So far as the disposition of the money is concerned, I have not the slightest knowledge and have never made the slightest investigation.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

Mr. EDGE. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. KENDRICK. Does the Senator know whether the present Government of Nicaragua or any previous government is protesting against our right to build a canal on account of the manner in which the money was disposed of which was paid for the right of way?

Mr. EDGE. I thank the Senator for propounding that question. On the contrary, I am sure that it will interest the Senator to hear a very brief letter which I have received from the present President of Nicaragua. In acknowledging a note of congratulations he writes from Managua, Nicaragua, to me as follows:

> Allow me to present you my appreciation for your kind personal congratulations and the gratitude of the Nicaraguan people for the great service your country has just rendered to Nicaragua—

I probably should have read this letter during the debate on the naval appropriation bill—

> I am ready and willing to cooperate with the Government of the United States in the survey and construction of the Nicaraguan canal. I consider the canal a great service to Nicaragua and humanity.
>
> Very sincerely yours,
>
> J. M. MONCADO.

That letter was written before Mr. Moncado was inaugurated, he being President elect at the time. The former President whom he succeeded, President Diaz, as is well known, has issued various public statements in which he urged the United States to take advantage of the right of way to construct the Nicaraguan canal. Of course, we can not do that until the necessary information shall have been secured.

Mr. President, I am not going to take any further the time of the Senate. I repeat, summarizing, this joint resolution commits the Senate to absolutely no future canal policy; it merely provides for the securing of information just as in the case of an ordinary resolution submitted to the Senate requesting information from a department. In this case, however, of course, it is more or less of an international question; it is likewise an engineering question, and can only be handled by having our engineers go down and make an investigation. I trust Congress will not be denied the information for obtaining which the joint resolution provides.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator a question about the information which is to be secured. The Senator said that the route of the canal had not been determined. Is it the purpose of the joint resolution to have the engineers finally determine the route of the proposed canal?

Mr. EDGE. The joint resolution provides simply that the engineers shall investigate the proposed canal as suggested under the former report of the Isthmian Canal Commission.

Mr. DILL. However, that report——

Mr. EDGE. If the Senator desires a complete answer, I will endeavor to give it to him. I understand that the Senator from Utah has prepared an amendment in which he proposes that the engineer commission shall have the further power of investigating or recommending, if in their judgment it is wise, any other possible route. I am disposed to accept the amendment, because there is no reason, following my thought, that we should not have all the information that can be obtained.

Mr. DILL. Then it is proposed that the engineers shall determine what route they will recommend?

Mr. EDGE. Most assuredly.

Mr. DILL. Then are they going to tell us what particular lands it will be necessary to purchase, who owns them, and what it will cost in order to acquire the lands which will comprise this route?

Mr. EDGE. If we do not adopt the joint resolution, of course, we will not get any information. If we shall adopt the joint resolution, I assume that we will receive all the information that a board of engineers would think would be helpful in deciding our future program.

Mr. DILL. The Senator is chairman of the committee which has reported the joint resolution. I wanted to know what information it was his intention to secure. I wanted to know something specific about it. Is the Senator going to leave it entirely to the board to say just how much information shall be obtained, or has he any word from the War Department as to what particular information they are going to get?

Mr. EDGE. The Senator can read the text of the resolution. I think it is all set forth there.

Mr. DILL. I understand about that.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator has asked me a question.

Mr. DILL. I have read the resolution.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator may not be familiar with the joint resolution. It is quite complete. Referring first to the Panama Canal the joint resolution provides:

> SEC. 3. The Chief of Engineers, under the direction of the Secretary of War, shall also make an engineering survey and an investigation for the purpose of determining the possibilities and cost of enlarging the Panama Canal to the extent which may be necessary to meet the future needs of interoceanic shipping.

Then in connection with the proposed Nicaraguan canal the joint resolution provides:

> That the President is hereby authorized to cause to be made, under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, a full and complete investigation and survey for the purpose of revising and bringing down to date the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission transmitted to the Congress December 4, 1901—

Twenty-seven years ago—> and for the purpose of collecting the additional information and data necessary in order to ascertain (1) the most practicable route—

It does include an investigation as to the most practicable route—> for an interoceanic ship canal by way of the San Juan River and Great Lake of Nicaragua or by way of any route over Nicaraguan territory, including a suitable harbor at each of the termini thereof; (2) the feasibility and approximate cost of the construction and maintenance of such canal; and (3) the cost of acquiring all private rights, privileges, and franchises, if any, pertaining to such route. The investigation and survey shall be made upon the basis of a canal having a capacity sufficient for the convenient passage of vessels of such tonnage and draft as may reasonably be anticipated.

If the Senator from Washington can add any language to that section that would insure the receipt of information not covered by the section I can not imagine what it can be.

Mr. DILL. Does the Senator think $150,000 will be sufficient to cover all these purposes?

Mr. EDGE. Personally, I doubt it.

Mr. DILL. As the Senator originally introduced the joint resolution it provided an appropriation of $500,000.

Mr. EDGE. I originally introduced the joint resolution calling for an appropriation of $500,000. As I have said, personally

I doubt whether the work can be done with $150,000, but the Secretary of War, as the Senator knows, through a supplementary estimate, said that $150,000, he thought, would be sufficient to undertake the work. It may cost more and probably will.

Mr. DILL. He said that was all that could be used now.

Mr. EDGE. It probably will cost more, but whatever it may cost, I submit that we should have the information.

Mr. DILL. Does not the Senator think the wiser course would be first to determine what it will cost to enlarge the Panama Canal and the feasibility of such enlargement before we enter upon the expenditure of the immense sum necessary to get all the details provided for in the pending joint resolution?

Mr. EDGE. No; I do not. I think it would be very unbusinesslike for the Senate of the United States to determine upon a possible enlargement of the Panama Canal, at a cost of hundreds of millions of dollars, without having before it a complete statement of the facts concerning the possibility of a Nicaraguan canal.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

Mr. EDGE. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I have read the joint resolution, and I do not find anywhere in it a requirement that the commission shall make any recommendation. Even though there were a mandatory requirement that the commission should make a recommendation, that would not mean anything until the Congress had accepted or approved it. So I see no particular objection to the joint resolution on that ground. The commission could not bind Congress or the country in any way.

Mr. EDGE. I have repeatedly stated that, of course, the commission could not bind Congress in the slightest degree. The commission is simply directed to furnish necessary information. Shall Congress have it, or shall they refuse to have it? That is all there is in this joint resolution.

Mr. BURTON obtained the floor.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to the point of no quorum?

Mr. BURTON. I do not care about a quorum.

Mr. FESS. I think the Members of the Senate would like to hear the Senator. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fess	McNary	Simmons
Barkley	Frazier	Mayfield	Smith
Bayard	Gerry	Moses	Smoot
Bingham	Glass	Neely	Steck
Black	Glenn	Norbeck	Steiwer
Blaine	Goff	Norris	Stephens
Blease	Gould	Nye	Swanson
Borah	Greene	Oddie	Thomas, Idaho
Bratton	Hale	Overman	Trammell
Brookhart	Harris	Phipps	Tydings
Broussard	Harrison	Pine	Tyson
Bruce	Hastings	Pittman	Vandenberg
Burton	Hawes	Ransdell	Wagner
Capper	Hayden	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Heflin	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mont.
Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.	Warren
Curtis	Jones	Robinson, Ind.	Waterman
Dale	Kendrick	Sackett	Watson
Deneen	King	Schall	Wheeler
Dill	McKellar	Sheppard
Edge	McMaster	Shortridge

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING BEGINNING TUESDAY

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in order that I may present a proposed unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. BURTON. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I send the proposed agreement to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed agreement will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered, by unanimous consent, That beginning Tuesday, February 26, 1929, the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 11 o'clock a. m. for the remainder of the present session of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask if the proposal has the approval of the minority leader, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; it has.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think it will be necessary to make some such arrangement as that proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. HEFLIN. What is it, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That the hour of daily meeting, commencing with Tuesday, be 11 o'clock in the morning. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

UNIFICATION OF RAILROADS

Mr. FESS. Will my colleague yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. BURTON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, earlier in the week I announced that to-day I would make a report on the bill (S. 5817) to authorize the unification of carriers engaged in interstate commerce and for other purposes, on which occasion I would address the Senate on that subject at some length.

While it is a matter of transportation we are discussing now, though it is water transportation instead of land transportation, I think I ought, in the interest of expediency, and out of great regard for my friend the author of the pending resolution, to forego taking the time to address the Senate, but I must ask the privilege of submitting the report, as I had announced I would make it to-day.

Mr. EDGE. I have no objection to that, of course.

Mr. FESS. I ask unanimous consent that I may submit the report of the Committee on Interstate Commerce on railroad unification.

Mr. EDGE. I appreciate very much the Senator's consideration.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator, in view of the importance of this matter, that he give us his views orally in regard to it at an early date.

Mr. FESS. I thank the Senator for the suggestion, because that is precisely what I want to do. I do not think I ought to take the time of the Senate this afternoon, however. I announce that at the earliest convenient moment I shall address the Senate on the unification of railroads.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will.

Mr. FESS. I submit the report (No. 1884) and ask that it be received and printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

[S. Rept. No. 1884, 70th Cong., 2d sess.]

Mr. FESS, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 5817):

The Committee on Interstate Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5817) to authorize the unification of carriers engaged in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report favorably thereon (S. Rept. 1884) with amendments and recommend that, as amended, the bill do pass.

I. POLICY OF RAILWAY UNIFICATIONS

There are virtually no differences of opinion upon the basic question of policy involved in the bill. Everyone familiar with present-day railroad problems, either from the point of view of the carrier, the shipper, or the public, believes that the carriers and their properties should be consolidated into a limited number of strong, efficient, and well-balanced systems capable of giving the public the service it demands at rates reasonable to the carrier, the shipper, and the public; capable of being operated in a manner to promote the highest efficiency and to render the most dependable service; capable of assuring continued service to the communities that are dependent upon the railroads and of protecting the public that has invested in them; and capable of solving satisfactorily many of the perplexing transportation problems of the present and of meeting the problems of the future as new transportation conditions and necessities arise.

This policy has already been established by the Congress, has been recommended repeatedly by the President, and is indorsed by the Association of Railway Executives, representing primarily the strong carriers, the American Short Line Railroad Association, representing, as the name indicates, the smaller carriers, the National Industrial Traffic League, representing shippers throughout the country, and by economists, transportation experts, and various civic organizations. In addition, the Interstate Commerce Commission has for several years favored legislation along the general lines of that now proposed in order to more effectually carry out the policy and to improve the existing conditions.

In the course of the consideration of the subject by the committee during the sessions of the present Congress and in previous years, extensive public hearings have been held. Representatives of the various organizations above enumerated and others directly or indirectly interested in legislation affecting railroads have been heard. The committee has had the benefit of their testimony on many different aspects of the transportation problem. None of the persons who appeared and testified before the committee has expressed any opposition to the policy of voluntary unifications of railroads. On the contrary, the consensus of opinion seems to be that such a policy is desirable, from the standpoint of the carriers, the shippers, and the public, as well as economically sound, but that additional legislation, which will permit that policy to be carried out effectively and properly, is necessary.

MESSAGES OF THE PRESIDENT

The need for a more flexible legal machinery for carrying into effect the congressional policy of voluntary unifications has been stressed by both President Harding and President Coolidge. In his address on "The Transportation Problem" at Kansas City, Mo., June 22, 1923, President Harding referred to the consolidation of all the railroads into a small number of systems under rigorous Government supervision as being "a rational, justifiable step, full of promise toward solution"; but he also stated that it is "being seriously proposed that the next step be to further amplify the provisions for consolidation so as to stimulate the consummation."

President Coolidge, in his message to the Congress on December 3, 1924, said, in part:

"In my message last year I emphasized the necessity for further legislation with a view to expediting the consolidation of our railroads into larger systems. * * *

"The consolidations need to be carried out with due regard to public interest and to the rights and established life of various communities in our country. It does not seem to me necessary that we endeavor to anticipate any final plan or adhere to any artificial and unchangeable project which shall stipulate a fixed number of systems, but rather we ought to approach the problem with such a latitude of action that it can be worked out step by step in accordance with a comprehensive consideration of the public interest. Whether the number of ultimate systems shall be more or less seems to me can only be determined by time and actual experience in the development of such consolidations."

In his subsequent messages to the Congress President Coolidge has also urged the passage of legislation to clarify the existing law. In December, 1926, he stated:

"This principle [of railroad consolidations] has already been adopted as Federal law. Experience has shown that a more effective method must be provided. Studies have already been made and legislation introduced seeking to promote this end. It would be a great advantage if it could be taken up at once and speedily enacted. The railroad systems of the country and the convenience of all the people are waiting on this important decision."

In his annual address to the Congress on December 4, 1928, President Coolidge said:

"In previous annual messages I have suggested the enactment of laws to promote railroad consolidations with a view of increasing the efficiency of transportation and lessening its cost to the public. While consolidations can and should be made under the present law until it is changed, yet the provisions of the act of 1920 have not been found fully adequate to meet the needs of other methods of consolidation. Amendments designed to remedy these defects have been considered at length by the respective committees of Congress, and a bill was reported out late in the last session which I understand has the approval in principle of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is to be hoped that this legislation may be enacted at an early date."

The bill referred to in the message of the President last quoted is the so-called Parker bill (H. R. 12620, 70th Cong., 1st sess.), which is identical in many respects with the bill which this report accompanies. The differences between the two bills are noted elsewhere in this report.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

The Interstate Commerce Commission has repeatedly urged that paragraphs (4) to (8), inclusive, of section 5 of the interstate commerce act be amended and clarified. In its annual report for 1921 the commission made the following recommendation:

"7. That paragraphs (4) to (8), inclusive, of section 5 of the interstate commerce act be so amended or supplemented as clearly to provide whether and, if so, how voluntary consolidations of carriers may be effected pending ultimate adoption by us of a complete plan of consolidation (p. 58)."

Similar recommendations were made, or adopted by reference, in the commission's annual reports for the years 1922 to 1924, inclusive.

During the period covered by the reports above referred to the commission was proceeding with the tentative plan for consolidation provided for by paragraph (5) of section 5 of the interstate commerce act. This plan was published on August 3, 1921, in 63 I. C. C. 455, as No. 12964, Consolidation of Railroads. The hearings held upon the tentative plan were completed on December 4, 1923, and it was thought at that time that the complete plan could be prepared. In its annual report for 1924 the commission stated that the work of preparing the complete plan was progressing, but in its annual report for 1925 the commission made the following statement:

"In our last report it was noted that the work of preparing the complete plan of consolidation was progressing. On February 4, 1925, we addressed a letter to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, in which the majority of the commission expressed doubt as to the wisdom of the provisions of the law which now require us to adopt a complete plan to which all future consolidations must conform. They further stated that they had been impelled to the belief that results as good, and perhaps better, are likely to be accomplished with less loss of time if the process of consolidation is permitted to develop, under the guidance of the commission, in a more normal way. A proposed amendment to section 5 of the interstate commerce act was attached to the letter (p. 13)."

The substance of the amendment to section 5 above referred to was stated in the recommendations of the commission in its annual report for the year 1925, as follows:

"5. That paragraphs (2) to (6), inclusive, of section 5 of the interstate commerce act be amended (a) by omitting therefrom the existing requirement that we adopt and publish a complete plan of consolidation; (b) by making unlawful any consolidation or acquisition of the control of one carrier by another in any manner whatsoever, except with our specific approval and authorization; (c) by giving us broad powers upon application, and after hearing, to approve or disapprove such consolidations, acquisitions of control, mergers, or unifications in any appropriate manner; (d) by giving us specific authority to disapprove a consolidation or acquisition upon the ground that it does not include a carrier or all or any part of its property which ought to be included in the public interest and which it is possible to include upon reasonable terms; (e) by modifying subparagraph (b) of paragraph (6) so that the value of the properties proposed to be consolidated can be more expeditiously determined; and (f) by providing that in the hearing and determination of applications under section 5 the results of our investigation in the proceeding on our docket known as No. 12964, Consolidation of Railroads, may be utilized in so far as deemed by us advisable (p. 72)."

The recommendations above quoted have been repeated in identical language in each annual report of the commission since 1925 and have been embodied in the proposed legislation.

II. NECESSITY FOR THE LEGISLATION

In the administration of the existing law with respect to railway unifications certain difficulties have been encountered which were not contemplated at the time of the enactment of the transportation act of 1920. It has been discovered, for example, that the provisions which were intended to promote voluntary unifications of railroads, recognized by the Congress in 1920 as economically sound and desirable, have had an opposite tendency, due to the fact that some of the conditions imposed at that time were not sufficiently flexible to permit the congressional policy to become operative.

One of the chief obstacles to unifications since the enactment of the transportation act has been the provision imposing upon the Interstate Commerce Commission the duty of preparing and adopting a plan for the consolidation of the railway properties of the continental United States into a limited number of systems. While this provision, which now forms a part of paragraph (4) of section 5 of the interstate commerce act, was intended to form the basis for future unifications and to pave the way for unifications in harmony with the plan, the practical result has been just the opposite. The commission has found it almost impossible to carry out fully the mandate of Congress. Although the commission did prepare a tentative plan in 1921 grouping into 19 systems the Class I carriers, it has never allocated to such systems upwards of 39,000 miles of railroad belonging to the Class II and Class III carriers which forms an important part of the total railway mileage in the United States and it is extremely doubtful whether such an allocation would, if made, serve any very useful purpose. Other obstacles to the completion of the commission's plan are the necessity of making the systems of approximately equal earning power with relation to the values of their properties and of preserving competition "as fully as possible." The railroads, in the absence of the complete plan of the commission, have been unable to proceed with effective regroupings of their properties in the manner contemplated by the Congress at the time of the enactment of the transportation act, and the public has failed to realize the benefits that might reasonably be expected from unifications. There is thus in the present law a clearly expressed desire on the part of the Congress to accomplish a certain result, but an effective method of accomplishing the result is lacking.

Your committee is of the opinion that legislation is necessary in order to remove the uncertainty that surrounds the whole question of railway unifications and to provide a more definite and workable basis for future unifications that will be in the public interest. This opinion is shared by both the Republican and the Democratic members of the committee. Considerable time has been devoted to the discussion and consideration of the various problems involved, and the policies incorporated in the bill have been decided upon only after careful and painstaking study on the part of the members of the committee of the different aspects of the railway unification problem. In all its deliberations the committee has been primarily concerned with the proper and adequate protection of the public interest, and under the provisions of the bill no unifications are to be permitted except those that are determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission to be in the public interest. For the guidance of the commission in making its determinations, definite and clear-cut standards and methods of procedure have been laid down.

OUTLINE OF EXISTING LAW

The existing congressional policy with respect to railway unifications is contained in paragraphs (2), (4), (5), (6), and (8) of section 5 of the interstate commerce act.

Paragraph (2) of section 5 provides that the commission may approve the acquisition of control by one carrier of another carrier or carriers, in any manner not involving the consolidation of such carriers into a single system for ownership and operation, whenever the commission is of opinion, after hearing, that such an acquisition of control will be in the public interest. It was contemplated that this paragraph would be of temporary or limited application.

Paragraphs (4), (5), and (6) of section 5 were intended to provide the permanent basis of railway unifications. These paragraphs are so closely interrelated that they may be treated as a unit and their main provisions briefly summarized as follows:

1. The duty is imposed upon the commission of preparing and adopting a complete plan for the unification of all the railway properties in the continental United States into a limited number of systems.

2. All unifications must be in harmony with and in furtherance of such plan and must be approved by the commission.

3. Each unification must be of such a nature as to unite the railway properties of the carriers who are parties to it into one corporation for ownership, management, and operation.

4. The stocks and bonds of the corporation which is to acquire the properties of two or more carriers pursuant to unification must not exceed the value of such properties as determined by the commission under section 19a of the interstate commerce act.

5. If the commission finds, after a public hearing, that such a proposed unification will promote the public interest, it may authorize and approve it with such modifications and upon such terms and conditions as the commission may prescribe and thereupon the unification may be effected regardless of State laws.

Paragraph (8) of section 5 relieves a carrier seeking to acquire control of another under paragraph (2), and the carriers that are parties to a unification under paragraphs (4), (5), and (6), of section 5, from the prohibitions and restraints imposed by State and Federal laws (including the antitrust laws), in so far as may be necessary to enable them to carry out the orders of the commission under those paragraphs.

DEFECTS OF EXISTING LAW

During the period of more than eight years that the provisions of existing law with respect to railway unifications have been in force very little has been accomplished in the way of carrying out the policy adopted by the Congress. Experience has shown that none of those provisions, with the exception of paragraph (2) of section 5, is capable of effective administration and application. Some of the outstanding defects of the existing law are as follows:

1. Paragraph (2) of section 5 was intended to be applicable only in the cases of acquisitions of control by one carrier of another carrier (through stock ownership or lease) which do not involve a true or substantial unification contemplated by the transportation act. Accordingly, its provisions are wholly inadequate as a means of bringing about such unifications not only from the point of view of the carriers desiring to effectuate the congressional policy of voluntary consolidations, but also from the point of view of the supervision and control by the commission, the protection of minority interests and the interests of other carriers, and, what is of primary importance, the protection and promotion of the interests of the public.

2. The unifications contemplated by the Congress at the time of the enactment of the existing law can not be brought about, for the commission has found it impossible to comply fully with the requirements that it prepare a complete plan for the consolidation of all the railway properties in the United States into a limited number of systems, and the completion of the plan is a prerequisite to the approval of any such unification.

3. Only one type of unification is provided for, namely, a corporate consolidation into one corporation for ownership, management, and operation of the properties of the carriers that are parties to the unification.

4. No provision is made for a procedure under Federal law to be followed by the carriers in bringing about a proposed unification.

5. Unifications under State law are not prohibited.

6. The requirement that the securities of the new corporations shall not exceed the value of the properties sought to be consolidated as ascertained by the commission under section 19a is a condition which has materialy hindered the commission in its preparation of its complete plan.

7. No provision is made for determining the rights and remedies of dissenting stockholders or of the carriers who are not originally joined in a proposed consolidation.

8. Inadequate provision is made for safeguarding the interests of the public.

III. OUTLINE OF THE BILL

The main purposes of the bill are as follows:

(1) To authorize voluntary railroad unifications, but only to the extent that they promote the public interest.

(2) To set up definite and specific standards to be taken into consideration by the Interstate Commerce Commission in determining whether or not a proposed unification will promote the public interest.

(3) To enable the carriers to carry into effect such a unification which has been approved by the commission by establishing a uniform and effective procedure.

(4) To safeguard the interests of all who might be directly or substantially affected by such a unification, especially carriers that are not originally joined in the plan of unification.

(5) To establish an efficient system of supervision by the commission in all cases of proposed unifications.

(6) To provide adequate protection for all dissenting stockholders of the carriers who are parties to a proposed unification by establishing a procedure whereby they may receive just compensation for their stock.

(7) To remove the defects of existing law which have prevented the promotion of the policy of voluntary unifications.

(8) To relieve the commission of the duty of preparing a complete plan for the unification into a limited number of systems of all the railway properties in the continental United States and to substitute a provision directing the commission to make a study of transportation facilities and to prepare one or more tentative plans to be available for its use in passing upon petitions for unification.

(9) To permit the commission under certain circumstances to authorize the acquisition by condemnation of a carrier which was not a party to the the plan if the commission determines that it is in the public interest that such carrier be made a party to a unification.

(10) To prohibit all unifications, including consolidations, mergers, acquisition of properties, and acquisitions of securities, under State or Federal law, except as specifically provided in the bill.

(11) To provide appropriate relief from State and Federal taxation in order to encourage and make possible unifications that will be in the public interest.

IV. DIFFERENCES BETWEEN SENATE AND HOUSE BILLS

The bill which your committee is now reporting out and the bill (H. R. 12620) reported out near the end of the last session by the House committee are identical in almost all respects. There are, however, six substantial differences between the two bills. The first of these relates to the method of acquiring securities; the second, to the type of corporate consolidation to be permitted; the third, to the provisions to be made with respect to voting bonds; the fourth, to the proceedings under paragraph (2) of section 5; the fifth, to carriers not parties to a plan of unification; and the sixth, to the preparation by the commission of a plan of unification. These differences are briefly discussed in the following paragraphs.

ACQUISITION OF SECURITIES

Section 202 (2) of the Senate bill prohibits all unifications (through corporate consolidation, corporate merger, acquisition of properties, or acquisition of securities, directly or through holding companies or other agencies) that are not in accordance with the provisions of the bill or with an order of the commission under paragraph (2) of section 5, but it further provides that the prohibition shall not extend (a) to an acquisition by a carrier of shares of capital stock issued by another carrier in an amount not sufficient to constitute control of such other carrier but that no such shares, except those acquired pursuant to subscription rights, shall be voted on any question relating to unification without the approval of the commission, or (b) to an acquisition by a carrier of additional shares of capital stock issued by another carrier of which control has been previously lawfully acquired. The acquisitions of stock under both (a) and (b), however, are subject to the ordinary provisions of law, State or Federal, applicable thereto, and unless such acquisition is permitted the carriers must go before the commission either with an application under paragraph (2) of section 5 or with a plan under the provisions of the bill.

The House bill, on the other hand, provides that no securities may be acquired by a carrier except securities issued by a Class II or a Class III carrier without first presenting a petition to the commission for the approval of the plan for such acquisition. It is further provided that even where securities of a Class II or a Class III carrier are acquired the privilege of voting such securities shall not be exercised in any manner until the commission has made an order approving the acquisition. If the commission refuses to approve any such acquisition, the securities involved must be sold or otherwise disposed of by the carrier which has acquired them in the manner prescribed by the commission.

TYPE OF CONSOLIDATION PERMITTED

Section 203 (2) (c) of the Senate bill provides for a corporate consolidation under the provisions of the bill. Under this provision two or more carriers who wish to consolidate their properties, franchises, and other assets into a new corporation may present their plan to the commission and must proceed in accordance with the provisions of the bill in the same manner as if the plan called for a corporate merger or for any other type of unification. The provisions of State law relating to the machinery or procedure for carrying out the consolidation are inapplicable and the carriers are relieved from all restraints and prohibitions of State law.

The House bill permits a corporate consolidation of two or more carriers, but only if such consolidation is to be effected under State law. This means, in effect, that if two or more carriers wish to unite their properties, rights, and franchises, and form a new corporation, they must petition the commission for the approval of a plan for the consolidation, but that after the approval of the commission is obtained, they must resort to the provisions of State law relating to that type of unification. If a consolidation is not permitted under the State law, or if conditions are imposed which prevent the proposed consolidation, the carriers must resort to some other method of unification.

VOTING BONDS

Under both the Senate bill and the House bill the holders of all voting securities of the carriers involved in a unification are entitled to vote upon the question of the adoption of the plan of unification approved by the commission.

The Senate bill provides, however, that if any such carrier has outstanding voting bonds, the trustee of the mortgage securing the bonds is to be held responsible for finding out who the bondholders are and of filing a certificate showing that a majority of such bondholders dissent from the proposed plan. The House bill makes no provision for getting the holders of voting bonds together at the meeting to vote upon the plan of unification.

PARAGRAPH (2) OF SECTION 5

The Senate bill merely amends in certain respects paragraph (2) of section 5 which provides for acquisition of control through purchase of stock, leases, etc., not amounting to a consolidation, so that even after the passage of the bill applications may be made under it in the same way that they may now be made.

The House bill provides that no application shall be made under paragraph (2) of section 5 after the bill becomes law but leaves it in force as to pending cases on the condition that the commission shall apply the provisions of section 202 in determining the public interest under the paragraph.

CARRIERS NOT PARTIES

The Senate bill contains a provision which permits the commission to authorize a carrier which is a party to a plan of unification to acquire by condemnation the properties, rights, and franchises of another carrier which is not a party and which has been insisting upon unreasonable terms, if the commission determines that it is in the public interest that such carrier should be made a party to the unification.

There is no provision in the House bill corresponding to this provision.

COMMISSION'S PLAN OF UNIFICATION

The Senate bill contains a provision directing the commission to complete a comprehensive study of the transportation facilities of the railroads and to prepare a plan or plans for their unification into systems. The plans are to be tentative but available for use by the commission in passing upon petitions for unifications and are to be completed before any order of the commission is entered approving a plan of unification. This provision is intended to give the commission a working basis for its consideration of petitions and is in fact a substitute for the more rigid provisions of existing law.

There is no provision in the House bill corresponding to that above mentioned. The House bill merely repeals all the provisions of existing law relating to the preparation by the commission of a complete plan of consolidation.

As many of the provisions of the Senate bill, particularly those relating to the legal machinery for carrying out a unification (including the joint agreement and petition, consent of carriers, order of the commission, etc.), are identical to the corresponding sections of the House bill (H. R. 12620) reported out near the end of the last session, a copy of that part of the House Report (No. 1264) containing a detailed analysis of the House bill is set out in the following pages.

APPENDIX

II. DETAILED ANALYSIS OF THE BILL

STRUCTURE OF THE BILL

The bill proposes to add a new title to the interstate commerce act. The mechanical structure of the bill is designed to keep the laws relating to carriers in one place and also to make the provisions of existing law relating to the procedure of the commission applicable to the provisions of the bill.

DEFINITIONS

Section 201 contains definitions of some of the terms used in the bill.

Section 201(1) defines the term "interstate or foreign commerce" in the usual manner. The definition does not change existing law, but is used in order to prevent repetition.

Section 201(2) defines the term "carrier." Inasmuch as this term is used throughout the act, the definition is of considerable importance. As a result of the definition the provisions of the bill will apply to a common carrier engaged in the transportation in interstate or foreign commerce of passengers or property wholly by railroad or partly by railroad and partly by water, within the continental United States, if the carrier is subject to the present interstate commerce act. This definition is based upon the provisions of section 1(1)(a) of the interstate commerce act. Consequently, a carrier is included within the definition if it is engaged in transportation by railroad, even though also engaged in other transportation; for example, by motor bus.

By reason of the fact that certain railroad companies have leased all their properties and consequently are not actually engaged in transportation, and by reason of the fact that many terminal companies, although not engaged in transportation, own terminal facilities, such as passenger and freight depots, yards, and grounds, which should properly be subject to the provisions authorizing the unification of carrier properties, such companies are included within the definition. A terminal corporation is one which owns properties to supply terminal facilities for one or more railroad companies, usually operating such properties either in whole or in part, under operating agreements with the railroad companies; and, consequently, companies, such as packing, mining, warehouse, lumber, and elevator companies, etc., which own terminal properties merely as an incident to the carrying on of their other business, are not included within the definition and, therefore, are not subject to the provisions of the bill. In order to permit the organization of a new corporation, the definition includes such a corporation, if it is organized to effect a unification and also for the purpose of engaging in transportation as a carrier. It will be noted that sleeping-car and express companies are excluded from the provisions of the bill.

Section 201(3) contains an all-inclusive definition of securities.

Section 201(4) defines the term "voting securities" to mean all outstanding securities, whether shares of stock, bonds, certificates, notes, or other evidences of interest or indebtedness, issued by a carrier, if such securities have voting privileges. Unissued stock and stock acquired by the issuing carrier and held in its treasury, of course, are excluded, as well as all securities, such as preferred stock, in respect to which no privilege of voting has been conferred. In other words, your committee felt that all securities having voting privileges with respect to any question involved in a proposed unification should continue to have the voting privilege under the bill, but that no greater voting privilege should be conferred.

PROTECTION OF THE PUBLIC INTEREST

Section 202(1) authorizes a unification of carriers or of property of carriers, but only if the Interstate Commerce Commission is of opinion that the unification will promote the public interest. This paragraph requires the commission to give due consideration, among other matters, to the maintenance of competition between carriers and the prevention of any undue lessening of existing competition, the preservation and improvement of the service afforded by the necessary weak or short lines, the promotion of economy, the affording of better service, the securing of a simplified and more effective regulation of carriers, and the ultimate establishment of a number of strong and efficient systems well balanced within themselves and with other systems.

The paragraph does not require the commission to find that each of the above will result from a proposed unification. It is intended rather to give to the commission an indication of what the Congress expects will result in the future from unifications. For example, it is conceivable that a proposed unification may not produce economies, and certainly the immediate establishment of all the strong and efficient systems ultimately to be created is not expected. Nevertheless, the unification, if otherwise proper, may be approved by the commission. Furthermore, the paragraph merely requires that the commission shall give due consideration to the above factors. It does not mean that greater consideration should be given to any one of them than to any of the others. It means that a sound balancing of all the factors involved in any proposed unification will result in the opinion that the unification will promote the public interest.

It will also be observed that the paragraph does not require a specific finding as to the actual existence of any of the factors. Inasmuch as the commission will have to make a forecast of the consequences to result from the proposed unification based upon all the information and facts available, and inasmuch as the commission will be expected to use a sound discretion in making its determination under this paragraph, it will be exercising a legislative, rather than a judicial, function and will be acting as an agency of the Congress.

It may be well to point out again that unifications are not to be authorized merely to satisfy the desire of human nature to attain gigantic size to obtain control. On the contrary, unifications are to be authorized only when the public will not be deprived of any of the advantages which it now possesses (at least unless a satisfactory substitute is provided), and when it will be assured that favorable consequences will result from the unification. Every effort has been made to protect the public interest and to make it the paramount test. If the Interstate Commerce Commission is not satisfied that a proposed unification will really promote the public interest, the plan should be disapproved.

Maintenance of competition: The paragraph requires the commission to give due consideration to the maintenance of competition between carriers. It will be observed that this does not require the maintenance of existing competition, but merely that there must be competition after a unification if there is competition before unification. It is obvious that competition between two strong carriers after a unification will prove much more effective than any existing competition between a strong and a weak carrier. Consequently, the public interest will be materially promoted if, in such case, the existing competition is replaced by effective competition between carriers of substantially the same strength.

Undue lessening of existing competition: Due consideration must also be given to the prevention of any undue lessening of existing competition. This provision does not mean that there can be no lessening of existing competition, and, obviously, the substitution of effective and substantial competition described above could not be accomplished without some elimination of the existing competition between the strong and the weak carriers. It is only undue lessening that the commission must prevent. If the public interest unquestionably requires the lessening of existing competition, it is obvious that such lessening will not be "undue." Again, the primary purpose of competition among railroads is to promote efficiency, economy, and better service. Competition which requires duplication and increases costs has a contrary effect and may well be eliminated.

The real advantages to the public of substantial competition, it is believed, can be gained only through unification resulting in competitive systems of approximately equivalent earning power, financial strength, and efficiency. Such a result would in itself amply justify the enactment of the bill.

Preservation of weak or short lines: The paragraph requires the commission to give due consideration also to the preservation and improvement of the service afforded by the necessary weak or short lines. The weak-line problem is undoubtedly one of the most serious problems now confronting us. A large percentage of the lines now owned by weak roads must continue to be operated. As stated above, continued abandonments will produce disastrous results to the communities which have developed in reliance upon the continued operation of the line. Although it is not expected that unifications will entirely remove the weak-line problem, it is certain that we may expect a very substantial percentage of the weak lines to become parts of strong and efficient systems.

The promotion of economy: There is, admittedly, much difference of opinion as to the substantial effect of the economies to be realized. It is undoubtedly true that many of the savings in overhead expenses will be counterbalanced, to some extent at least, by increased expenses, for example, in the case where a weak line, now operated with a minimum of expense, becomes a part of a system. It is also true that overhead expenditures constitute but a small percentage of railroad expenses. The testimony before the committee is convincing, however, that real economies will come from unifications. Large systems can make more economical use of their equipment, for a small road does not have sufficient traffic or sufficiently diversified traffic to make the most efficient use of all the equipment required to handle peak loads and of the different types of cars required to handle different commodities. There will be more direct routing and less back hauling of freight. Direct lines will be available for commodities demanding a fast service. The cost of switching will be reduced to a minimum. Methods and equipment and practices may be standardized. A substantial and forceful purchasing power will be concentrated in one agency. Shops and equipment will be utilized to the maximum extent.

In this connection it may be pointed out that it has been alleged, and considerable testimony has been introduced tending to prove, that in one of the proposed mergers now pending there will result an aggregate saving through economies of $10,000,000 a year. It may well be that the distribution of this amount among all the shippers in the territory served may of itself not appreciably be felt in rate reductions. Even assuming that no reduction by reason of the saving should be forthcoming, the saving of this amount and the improvement of the service resulting therefrom would prove very substantial and worth while.

Better service: The strengthening of credit facilities and the economies effected will permit additions and betterments, better equipment, and improved roadbeds. A system will be in a position to make direct and fast shipments. A sufficient number of cars of the proper type will be available to meet the demand. It will be able to give regular, adequate, and satisfactory service. Each system will connect directly with another system. The operation of solid trains to and from large centers and important gateways will be facilitated. The operation of terminals at large centers will be simplified. The number of junction points will be reduced to a minimum. A simplified movement of freight or passenger traffic will result in a minimum number of transfers and the maximum operation of through trains. Uniform service can be afforded throughout the year, for even though there should be a crop failure in part of the territory served by the system, for example, conditions might well be normal in other parts of its territory.

A simplified and more effective regulation: A reduced number of carriers will greatly simplify the duties of the Interstate Commerce Commission and also the duties of the carriers in handling matters before the commission. Our present railroad tracks and facilities are owned by about 1,900 and are operated by about 1,000 separate railway companies. Each of these companies has its own individual problems before the Interstate Commerce Commission and the commission must consider each of them.

A more effective regulation of carriers is one of the most important results to be expected from unifications. No system of rate making can be based upon the condition or position of an individual railroad. It must be based upon the condition and position of the railroads as a whole within a given territory. But each railroad should obtain similar financial and operating results. Similar results, however, can be obtained only if the railroads themselves are similar in character. So long as the units of our transportation system are so greatly lacking in uniformity as at present, it is obvious that uniform results can not be obtained.

Unification offers the only means other than Government ownership by which railroad units of a substantially uniform character may be created. Public regulation under present conditions is extraordinarily difficult, and its complexities are constantly increasing. If we are unable to make it more effective, efficient, and fair, public regulation may fail. And if it fails, the continuation of private ownership will become impossible.

The ultimate establishment of systems: The ultimate goal of unifications is the establishment of a limited number of systems which will be able to render, and to continue to render, to the public the service demanded at rates which are reasonable to the public and which will yield to the carriers a fair return upon the value of their railway properties. It is not expected that the immediate establishment of the systems contemplated is possible. Years will undoubtedly elapse, during which unifications will be effected from time to time, before the ultimate goal is reached. The commission must, however, keep the ultimate end in mind and must consider whether any proposed unification will tend to bring about the ultimate establishment of a strong and efficient system.

A carrier which is "strong" is in a position to obtain the necessary funds for additions and betterments and equipment at the lowest possible cost. An efficient system is one neither so large as to be unwieldly or unmanageable, nor too small to secure economies derived from large-scale operations; one that can make the best possible use of its rolling stock, yards, and terminals, so as to avoid the congestion of transportation on the one hand and idle facilities on the other; one that will be in a position to meet the transportation demands made upon it at the lowest possible costs. A well-balanced system is one that has a reasonable opportunity to originate well-diversified and dependable traffic which assures a continuity of revenue, so that the depression in a single industry will not too greatly affect its total traffic; one which will have facilities, equipment, tracks, yards, and terminals adequate to the public needs. A system well balanced with other systems is one which will become competitively important in freight transfer and delivery, which will be able to give service comparable to that afforded by competitors, and which will be able to hold its own with other systems serving the same territory.

Other factors in the public interest: The Interstate Commerce Commission, in passing upon an application under paragraph (2) of section 5, has given consideration to practically all the factors enumerated in section 202 (1) in determining the public interest. The commission has also considered factors in addition to those specifically mentioned, which it will also consider under the provision in the section that it give due consideration to "such other factors as may be in public interest." One of the very important factors which it has considered in the past and will consider under this provision is the financial set-up of the proposed unification, involving such things as the amount of bonds and stock, the issuance of no-par-value stock, the amount of stock having voting privileges, the size of the corporation controlling the carriers involved in the unification, etc. (See Nickel Plate Unification, 105 I. C. C. 425, 444–445; Unification of Southwestern Line, 124 I. C. C. 401, 437–439.) The purpose of this general provision is to make it possible for the commission to consider, among other things, all the factors controlling an interpretation as to public interest under paragraph (2) of section 5 which are not specifically enumerated in section 202. A second important consideration is the fairness of the terms from the point of view of the stockholders. (See Nickel Plate Unification, supra, pp. 445–448.)

NEW LAW IS EXCLUSIVE

It is uncertain whether the present law constitutes the exclusive method by which unifications may be effected. Except for the question of the possible violation of the antitrust laws, the better view seems to be that unifications may be effected under authority of State law. In any event your committee is convinced that there should be but one law authorizing unifications and that that law should be a Federal statute. Consequently, the bill provides, in section 202 (2), as to the future, that no consolidation, merger, or acquisition of voting securities may be effected except in accordance with the provisions of the new bill. It should be pointed out that the committee has specifically decided to make this provision only of future application. The validity of acts done in the past must be determined under the law applicable thereto, wholly without regard to the provisions of the new bill.

It will be observed that the prohibition does not affect the provisions of paragraphs (18), (19), and (20) of section 1 (relating to extensions of line), the provisions of paragraph (4) of section 3 (relating to joint use of terminals), the provisions of paragraph (2) of section 5 (authorizing acquisitions of control), the provisions of paragraph (15) of section 1 (relating to car service and use of terminals), or the provisions of section 20a (relating to security issues), of the interstate commerce act, whether the order of the commission under any of these provisions is entered before or after the new bill becomes law. Neither does the prohibition interfere with the formation of subsidiary corporations, and the acquisition of all or any part of the securities thereof, for the construction, operation, and ownership of branches, extensions, or terminals, or equipment, or facilities to be used in connection therewith. This provision is of the utmost importance in order to care for present practices, established primarily because of the existence in mortgages of an "after acquired property" clause. The exemption, however, is limited to cases of proposed construction, operation, and ownership. It does not apply to acquisition through purchase or lease, for example, for the committee believed that purchases or leases should be effected under the provisions of the bill.

TYPES OF UNIFICATION AUTHORIZED

Section 203 (1) provides that in order to bring about a unification two or more carriers may agree on a plan therefor to be carried out under authority of the bill.

Paragraph (2) of this section enumerates the types of unification which may be included in the plan. The first of these, described in subdivision (a), is an acquisition by or transfer to a carrier of all or a part, or of the right to operate all or a part, of the properties or franchises of one or more carriers. This acquisition or transfer may be by purchase, sale, exchange, lease, or otherwise, and includes all transactions by which the ownership or possession of properties or the right to operate properties may be transferred from one carrier to another without change in the corporate organization of either of the carriers. Of course, a carrier corporation, after disposing of all its properties, may dissolve, but such dissolution is not contemplated as a part of a plan under this subdivision. It is further provided that, if desired, any remaining assets of any carrier may be disposed of. No corporate merger or consolidation is here contemplated.

Subdivision (b) provides that the plan may include a corporate merger of one or more carriers into another. The term "merger" is here used in a strict, legal sense and is intended to include only a transaction whereby the properties, franchises, and other assets of one or more carriers are taken over or absorbed by another carrier, accompanied by the termination of each merging carrier and the continuation of the acquiring or continuing carrier without any change in, or interruption of, its corporate existence. The effect of such merger upon the title to the property, and upon the rights, privileges, powers, immunities, exemptions, and franchises of each of the corporations, and upon their debts, liabilities, and duties, is specifically set forth in section 211 hereinafter discussed.

By the terms of subdivision (c) of section 203 (2) a corporate consolidation of two or more carriers may be included in the plan, but only if such consolidation is to be effected under State law. Again, the term "consolidation" is used in a strict sense to describe the type of corporate combination wherein the properties, franchises, and other assets of two or more carriers are united and passed to a new corporation, the consolidated corporation, whereupon the corporate existence of each of the constituent companies is terminated, and, generally, the stockholders of the constituent corporations become the stockholders of the consolidated corporation. A unification of this character requires the creation of a new corporation, and can be effected only under statutory authority. The corporation laws of most of the States contain provisions for this form of combination. Usually, the same provision which authorizes the consolidation creates the new consolidated corporation. The procedure prescribed ordinarily requires a joint agreement setting forth details of the organization of the new company, to be submitted for approval to the stockholders of each constituent company, and, when duly filed with the proper State officer, constituting the charter of the new corporation. It is not desirable to have in the bill any provision which might be construed as creating a corporation under Federal law. It is hardly within the power of Congress to provide for the creation of a new corporation under the laws of any of the States. Therefore, it seems desirable that a combination of this type be carried out under the laws of the State or States creating the corporations involved.

Finally, by the terms of subdivision (d) of this paragraph, the plan may provide for the acquisition by a carrier of securities of another carrier (whether or not one of the petitioning carriers) by purchase, exchange, lease, or otherwise, or the approval by the commission of an acquisition of securities of class 2 or class 3 carriers under the provisions of paragraph (2) of section 205, hereinafter referred to.

CONSOLIDATION AND MERGER DISTINGUISHED

The term "consolidation" is frequently used in statutes and judicial decisions, in a loose sense, to include corporate combinations which result in either (1) the creation of a new corporation and the dissolution or extinction of all of the combining corporations, or (2) the continued and enlarged existence of one of the corporations and the dissolution or practical extinction of the others. Thus, in the case of Central Railroad & Banking Co. v. Georgia (1875), 92 U. S. 665, the Supreme Court held that a statute providing for "consolidation" did not necessarily work a dissolution of both companies and the creation of a new one. Usually, however, when the questions involved in a case make it important to determine whether, under a particular statute, the combining corporations have all been extinguished and a new corporation created, it is found that the courts apply the term "consolidation" to such a combination, and distinguish as a "merger" the case where one of the combining corporations continues to exist and absorbs into it the properties, franchises, and other assets of the others, which thereupon go out of existence. So, in the case of Atlantic & Gulf Railroad Co. v. Georgia (1878), 98 U. S. 359, the Supreme Court, in holding a combination to be a strict consolidation, said:

"The consolidation provided for was clearly not a merger of one into the other, as was the case of Central Railroad & Banking Co. v. Georgia. * * * That generally the effect of consolidation, as distinguished from a union by merger of one company into another, is to work a dissolution of the companies consolidating, and to create a new corporation out of the elements of the former, is asserted in many cases, and it seems to be a necessary result."

A more recent Federal case pointing out the distinction is Lee v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1906), 150 Fed. 775. (See also, a valuable note on consolidation in 89 Am. St. Rept., at page 604, and cases there cited.) It may be said that the later and better considered authorities limit the term "consolidation" to combinations of two or more companies creating a new corporation and extinguishing the old ones, as distinguished from a merger by one company absorbing another without the creation of a new corporation. It is in this sense that the terms are used in the bill.

JOINT AGREEMENT AND PETITION

Section 204 provides the machinery by which two or more carriers which propose a unification may present to the commission the plan of unification that has been agreed upon.

Section 204 (1) provides that if the boards of directors of two or more carriers have authorized a joint agreement proposing the plan of unification and this agreement has been executed by the carriers, they may then petition the commission for its approval of the proposed plan. The commission may by regulations prescribe the details to be included and may by special order require the carriers to include in the petition details of the plan in addition to those included by the carriers. Such petition or plan may be amended at any time by leave of the commission.

Section 204 (2) provides for the contents of the joint agreement. This includes the terms and conditions of the plan and the methods by which it is to be effected. There is also to be a statement of the proposed financial set-up, and of the securities involved in carrying out the plan, together with the terms on which such securities are to be issued, and a statement of the rights, privileges, powers, and immunities granted or denied under the plan to different classes of stockholders. Finally, the joint agreement may contain such other provisions and details as the boards of directors may deem necessary or appropriate or as the commission may require.

Section 204 (3) provides the manner in which a joint agreement may be authorized by the board of directors.

Section 204 (4) requires that a duly executed copy of the joint agreement be filed with the commission as a part of the petition.

ACQUISITION OF SECURITIES BY A CARRIER

Section 205 authorizes a carrier to petition the commission for the approval of a plan to be effected by an acquisition of securities of another carrier, and authorizes the acquisition of securities issued by a class 2 or a class 3 carrier upon the condition that the securities can not be voted until the acquisition has been approved by the commission.

Section 205 (1) authorizes a carrier which proposes to bring about a unification through the acquisition of securities of another carrier to submit to the commission a plan which has been adopted by a majority of the directors of the petitioning carrier. The petition must include the plan and the terms, methods, and purpose of the proposed acquisition, and the issue of any new securities that may be involved in the plan, in such detail as the commission may require. This paragraph is intended to apply primarily to the case of a carrier classified by the commission as a class 1 carrier, and it sets up the only method by which, after the date of the enactment of the bill, the voting securities of any such carrier may be acquired by another carrier (except as to applications pending under paragraph (2) of section 5). If any such acquisition is attempted by any other method it will be unlawful and will fall within the prohibition of section 202 (2).

Section 205 (2) authorizes any carrier to petition the commission for the approval of an acquisition of securities of a class 2 or a class 3 carrier if the acquisition has been authorized by the vote of a majority of the directors of the acquiring carrier. No restriction is imposed upon the act of acquiring such securities, but the privilege of voting in respect to such securities is to be withheld until such time as the commission, upon petition of the acquiring carrier, has granted its approval to the acquisition. If the commission refuses to approve the acquisition, then it may require the carrier which has obtained the securities to sell or otherwise dispose of them.

PROCEDURE OF THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

Section 206 of the bill prescribes the notice to be given and provides for a public hearing upon a petition. Here again the interests of the public are protected by requiring notice to be given to the governor of each State in which any part of the line of any carrier a party to the plan is located, and to the railroad commission, public service or utilities commission, or other regulatory agency of the State, and by giving a specific right to the governor or the commission, or other representative, to be heard. The section also gives any person having an interest in the proposed unification an opportunity to be heard before the commission, so that organizations of shippers, chambers of commerce, and other community organizations, and the stockholders, or bondholders and other creditors, of the carriers involved may be heard. In order that the hearings may not be unnecessarily prolonged, and in order that the right to cross-examine witnesses may be kept within reasonable limits, the right of persons having an interest in the proposed unification to be heard is subject to rules to be prescribed by the commission.

Section 20a and paragraphs (18), (19), and (20) of section 1 of the interstate commerce act require similar notice to the governors of the States. In order to avoid duplication of hearings section 206 (2) authorizes action under the above provisions in any proceeding upon a unification under the new bill. The nature and effect of the action, however, is governed by the provisions just referred to.

Primarily for the purpose of giving weak or short lines an opportunity to become parties to any proposed unification, section 206 (3) permits the filing with the commission of an intervener's petition. In order that the filing of a petition may not unduly interrupt the proceedings, it is provided that the intervener's petition must be filed prior to or at the time the original petition is called for hearing, unless the commission grants a request after such time upon a showing of good cause for a failure to file theretofore. In any such case, of course, the commission permits the filing of the petition upon such conditions as have been prescribed, such as requiring the intervener to accept the record of the commission previously made.

The provisions of existing law, or of any future amendment thereto, relating to the procedure of the commission, are applicable to its procedure under the provisions of the new bill. (See sec. 12 and sec. 17 of the interstate commerce act.)

ORDER OF THE COMMISSION

Section 207 (1) of the bill provides that if, after the hearing, the commission is of opinion that the proposed unification will promote the public interest and finds that those provisions of the bill which are conditions precedent to the entry of the order have been complied with, the commission shall enter an order approving the plan or (in the case of a petition seeking the approval of the commission of an acquisition of securities issued by a class 2 or a class 3 carrier, effected under section 205 (2) of the bill) the acquisition of securities. It is again pointed out that the paragraph does not require a finding by the commission upon the public interest but merely requires that the commission be of the opinion that the proposed unification will promote the public interest. (Compare the Chicago Junction Case (1924), 264 U. S. 258.) The determination of the public interest must be made, of course, in accordance with the provisions of section 202.

The conditions precedent to the entry of the order are, briefly, in the case of a plan presented under section 204, that a plan has been agreed upon, that the plan provides for one of the various methods of unification, that a joint agreement has been entered into proposing the plan duly authorized by the boards of directors and executed by the carriers, and that the joint agreement contains the provisions required; and, in the case of a petition under section 205 for the approval of a plan for unification through the acquisition of securities, or for the approval of an acquisition theretofore made of securities issued by a class 2 or class 3 carrier, that the petition is properly presented, and that the plan or acquisition has been duly adopted or authorized by the board of directors; and, finally, that in all cases the requisite notice has been given and the public hearing held at which the parties or persons have been afforded a reasonable opportunity to be heard.

The approval of the commission may be made upon such terms and conditions as it may prescribe in the public interest. If the commission finds, upon objection of a stockholder, bondholder, or holder of any other security issued by a carrier a party to the plan, who has appeared before the commission, that the terms and conditions of the plan are unfair or unreasonable as to him, whether by reason of the fact that the compensation offered him in the case of an exchange of securities, for example, is inadequate or is less than the "just compensation" to which he is entitled, or by reason of the fact that he has been discriminated against and that other holders are given more favorable terms than those offered him, then the commission is authorized to approve the plan upon such terms and conditions as it finds to be fair and reasonable.

Section 207 (2) deals with the situation where a carrier not joining in the original petition is to be made a party to the plan, either upon its petition or upon the initiative of the commission. In order that the unification may be entirely voluntary, the paragraph provides that the original petitioners may report back to the commission and obtain a revocation or modification of the condition, if the new carrier is insisting upon unreasonable terms; or, if the new carrier so requests, the commission may prescribe the terms upon which it may be made a party to the proposed unification if the carriers elect to carry out the plan.

Section 207 (3) is another provision intended to protect the interests of weak and of short carriers, and requires that the carriers and the commission shall give due consideration to the inclusion in the plan of short and of weak carriers in the territory involved.

ISSUANCE OF SECURITIES

Section 207 (4) makes it certain that the provisions of section 20a will be applicable to the issuance of securities in connection with a unification. Section 5 (6) (b) of the present law imposes a condition which would, if carried into the new bill, practically prevent unifications, as it provides that the par value of the outstanding stock and bonds must not exceed the value of the consolidated properties as determined by the commission.

The director of finance of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Mr. Mahaffie, discussed the matter thoroughly and in detail in the executive sessions of the committee. Since the enactment of the transportation act of 1920, containing the provisions of section 20a, giving complete jurisdiction to the Interstate Commerce Commission over the issue of securities, there has been no overcapitalization, and the commission has been gradually "squeezing out the water" accumulated prior to that time. Your committee feels that section 20a has been ably administered, is proving very effective, and that no additional safeguards are necessary, except the imposition of one condition, namely, that there should be no capitalization of intangible values resulting from the proposed unification. Although the commission has consistently refused in the past to permit an issuance of securities based upon a capitalization of intangible values, your committee feels that any possibility of a reversal of this practice should be specifically prevented.

CONSENT OF CARRIERS

After the order of the commission has been entered, section 208 requires that the carriers must consent to the order before it becomes effective. This obviously is in line with the policy that unifications should be voluntary. In the case of an order authorizing or approving an acquisition of securities, whether under section 205 or under section 203 (2) (d), the consent of the carriers is given by the boards of directors. If the plan provides for unification through any of the other methods (whether or not the acquisition of securities is involved) the holders of the voting securities, as well as the boards of directors, must consent to the order in so far as it involves a unification by such other methods. A favorable vote of a majority of the board of directors of each carrier and a majority of the holders of voting securities is sufficient to grant the consent.

Section 208 (3) requires that, if the consent of the holders of the voting securities is required, such consent must be given at a special meeting. Notwithstanding the fact that voting bondholders, for example, are included, the paragraph provides that the special meeting is to be called and held and conducted in the manner prescribed for a special meeting of stockholders. The right to vote is not fixed in the bill but will be determined under the provisions of the State law, the articles of incorporation, the by-laws, the terms of the bond, etc. For example, if a mortgage provides that the bondholders, or any specified percentage of them, must consent to a disposition of a substantial portion of the assets of the corporation, such bondholders will have the right to vote upon so much of the plan as relates to the disposition of assets, or, if the plan includes such a disposition and no separate vote is taken on that portion of the plan, then upon the plan as a whole.

The method by which their vote is cast will be governed without regard to the provisions of the bill, in the same manner as though the specific question were presented in the ordinary course of business at a special stockholders' meeting. The bill in this respect differs materially from prior bills upon the subject.

Section 208 (4) requires the certification of the consent of the carriers, in order that the commission may be duly advised upon the action taken. This paragraph also provides that the certification shall be prima facie evidence of the facts certified. It is pointed out, however, that in section 210 (3) the certification by the commission, following the certification as to the consent of the carriers, is conclusive evidence that the applicable provisions which are conditions precedent have been complied with.

EFFECTIVE DATE OF COMMISSION'S ORDER

Section 209 provides that the order of the commission shall become effective upon the expiration of 30 days from the date on which the commission certifies that the carriers have consented, except to the extent that the order is suspended or set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction upon suit begun prior to the expiration of the 30-day period. Because of the tremendous importance attached to an order of the commission it is imperative that once an order of the commission has become effective there be no method by which the order itself can be invalidated. Consequently it is provided that any suit for an injunction must be instituted prior to the 30-day period. The jurisdiction of the courts over such a suit is fixed by the provisions of the urgent deficiency appropriation act of October 22, 1913, commonly known as the district court jurisdiction act. Wide publicity will be given to the proceedings of the commission upon a proposed unification and ample opportunity to appear before the commission will be afforded. Accordingly the 30-day period is clearly adequate.

EFFECT OF COMMISSION'S ORDER

Section 210 (1) is a grant of Federal power to each carrier designated in the order of the commission to do anything necessary or appropriate to carry into effect the plan as approved. Although this power will be derived from a Federal law, it does not mean that the carrier becomes a Federal corporation, nor does it mean that the carrier is an instrumentality of the United States.

If the plan has provided for a consolidation (and the provisions requiring that the plan can provide only for a consolidation to be effected under State law have been previously explained), it will be observed that no corporate power to carry out the consolidation will, in legal effect, be derived from this paragraph. If no power exists to consolidate under the State law, the commission can not approve. If power does exist, then the commission's order will merely authorize the carriers to proceed with the consolidation in accordance with State law.

Section 210 (2) grants immunity from the antitrust laws of the United States; from the provisions of paragraph (12) of section 20a prohibiting interlocking directorates; from any other Federal restraints or prohibitions; and (except in the case of a corporate consolidation) from all restraints or prohibitions of State law or any decision or order of any State authority. The exemption is granted, however, only in so far as may be necessary or appropriate to enable the carrier and its officers, directors, and agents to enter into and carry into effect the plan, or in accordance with the plan to hold, maintain, and operate any properties and exercise any franchises. The paragraph obviously does not affect such provisions as the commodities clause (paragraph (8) of section 1 of the interstate commerce act) any more than it relieves carriers from complying with the provisions of the law relating to rates. In any event, should the plan appear to provide for the transportation by a carrier of coal, for example, mined by it and intended for sale, adequate protection undoubtedly will be obtained in the order of the commission.

Section 210 (3) provides that the entry of the order of the commission and the certification under section 209 shall be conclusive evidence that the carriers, their boards of directors, and the holders of voting securities have complied with the provisions of the title applicable to them. The purpose of this provision is to make the finding of the commission final, subject to court "control" in any case in which the commission's action is not in accordance with law, or in which it has acted arbitrarily or without evidence.

Section 210 (4) is intended to meet the situation arising by virtue of certain conveyances to carriers with a specific prohibition upon any disposition by such carrier of the property conveyed and a provision providing for reversion to the grantor if a disposition is attempted.

EFFECT OF UNIFICATIONS

Effect of combinations generally: It may be stated broadly that the disposition of a substantial part of its assets by a railroad corporation, or the merger or consolidation of such a corporation with another, can not be effected in the absence of statutory authority. Aside from the technical legal considerations applying to corporations generally, a paramount reason for this rule is found in the fact that the property and business of railroad corporations are affected with a public interest, and, without legislative sanction, public policy will not permit transactions materially affecting the organization or conduct of such properties or business. The statutes authorizing the sale of railroad properties and the consolidation or merger of railroad corporations ordinarily make express provision as to how far the rights, powers, franchises, privileges, immunities, and exemptions of a corporation will pass with a transfer of the properties. Usually it is provided, and in the absence of express provision a presumption arises, that all rights, powers, franchises, and privileges necessary to the operation of the properties pass with them upon a transfer. (Tennessee v. Whitworth (1885), 117 U. S. 139.) In the case of consolidation it is perhaps not strictly accurate to speak of a transfer of such rights, powers, etc., as it has been held that the new corporation takes them by grant and not by transfer, and that in such cases the reference in the statutes to "all the rights, etc., of the constituent companies" is merely descriptive. (Shields v. Ohio (1877), 95 U. S. 319.) But the effect is the same.

Generally speaking, the extent to which these intangible assets are transferred is not so great upon a sale of properties as in other forms of combination, but all franchises and powers necessary to the enjoyment of the property are as a general rule held to pass. (Morgan v. Louisiana (1876), 93 U. S. 217.)

In merger and consolidation the rights, franchises, etc., acquired by the continuing or consolidated company depend upon the language of the statute authorizing the combination and the intention of the legislature, and if there is no provision in the statute a presumption arises that all righs, franchises, and privileges, other than those which are personal or exclusive, are transferred with the property subject to the same burdens and restrictions as in the hands of the merging or consolidating companies.

Both in merger and in consolidation, exclusive rights and privileges under the charter of a merging or constituent corporation, which are to be strictly construed against the corporation, are held to pass only when a transfer of such rights or privileges has been authorized, originally or subsequently, by the statute under which the combination takes place or by charter, and every doubt as to the authorization will be construed against the company. (See Rochester Railway Co. v. City of Rochester (1906), 205 U. S. 236.) Nor does an exemption enjoyed by a continuing company extend to property acquired from a merging company unless expressly so provided. (Central Railroad, etc., Co. v. Georgia (1875), 92 U. S. 665.) The law in effect at the time of a consolidation controls, for, as has been noticed, the statute makes a new grant, and can not do so in violation of a general restriction in effect at the time. For example, if a constitutional prohibition against exemptions from taxation has intervened before a consolidation is effected, the consolidated company can not acquire any such exemption as may have been enjoyed by a constituent company. (Keokuk & Western R. R. Co. v. Missouri (1894), 152 U. S. 301.) In the case of a merger, in similar circumstances, a transfer of the exemption might be possible.

The same general rules apply in combinations of companies incorporated under the laws of different States. However, when two or more such corporations merge the corporation which continues in existence acquires no new rights, powers, or privileges in the State of its incorporation but succeeds to the franchises of the merging corporations and may exercise their powers in the States of their creation, subject in each case to the restrictions and burdens under which the merging corporations existed. The extent to which the powers, privileges, and immunities of the merging corporations pass to the continuing corporation depends in each case upon the intention and language of the statute under which the merger is effected.

The same is true in the case of a consolidation of corporations of different States. Such consolidation requires the authorization of the legislature of each of the States concerned. While there has been some difference of opinion as to whether a single new corporation is created or the old corporations merely continue in existence under a common name and direction, the great weight of authority is to the effect that a new consolidated corporation is created just as in the case of a consolidation of two corporations of the same State. This corporation is a domestic corporation in each of the States concerned, has a domicile in each of them, and is subject to the control and regulation of each to the extent that its business is conducted therein. "It is a single corporation with two parents who live apart and independently, each having absolute control in his own domain. It owes allegiance and is subject alike to each, and is dependent upon each alike for future favors." (Attorney General v. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. Co., 198 Mass. 413.) The consolidated corporation can not exercise in one State powers given to it only by its charter in another State which other corporations in the first state are not permitted to exercise.

The distinction between merger and consolidation is here apparent as in the case of merger the continuing corporation does not become a domestic corporation in the State in which the merging corporation was organized. (Lee v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1906), 150 Fed. 775.)

In the Delaware Railroad Tax case (1873), 18 Wall. 206, a leading case in the United States Supreme Court, it is stated that a corporation formed by the consolidation of corporations of different States will, in its relation to each of the States, stand as a separate corporation governed by the laws of that State as to its property therein and subject to taxation in conformity with such laws.

For a more detailed statement of the effects of consolidation, both of domestic corporations and of corporations of different States, reference may be made to the note, heretofore referred to, in 89 Am. St. Rept., at page 604. This note has been frequently cited and quoted in the cases. As consolidation, though authorized by the bill, is to be carried out under State law, the bill makes no attempt to state its effect, which must depend in each case upon the law of the State or States in question. It has been discussed here mainly for purposes of comparison.

Effect of corporate merger under the bill: Section 211 states the effect of a corporate merger carried out under the bill. Paragraph (1) provides that upon the effective date of the order of the commission approving the plan the following (except as restricted or limited in the plan as approved) will result:

(a) The merging corporations shall be held to be merged into the continuing corporation.

(b) The continuing corporation shall have all the rights, privileges, powers, immunities, exemptions, and franchises of each of the merging corporations. Such a provision, as observed above, will entitle the continuing corporation to exercise all powers and franchises and to enjoy all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions theretofore exercised or enjoyed by each of the merging corporations in the same territory and in respect to the same property as in the case of such merging corporation. Exemptions from taxation are included.

(c) The title and right of each merging corporation in all property, real and personal, and in all choses in action shall be held to be transferred to and vested in the continuing corporation.

(d) All debts, liabilities, and duties of each merging corporation will be enforceable against the continuing corporation to the same extent as if originally incurred or contracted by it.

Paragraph (2) of this section provides that the rights of creditors and all liens upon properties of each merging corporation shall be preserved unimpaired and that each merging corporation shall be deemed to continue in existence so far as necessary to preserve such rights and liens.

Under paragraph (3) the continuing corporation will stand in the shoes of each merging corporation in any action or proceeding pending by or against it.

DISSENTING STOCKHOLDERS

Sections 212 and 213 provide for the protection of the legitimate interests of minority stockholders. It should be noted that there are other provisions heretofore referred to relating to protective measures available to all stockholders. Sections 212 and 213 are concerned with minority stockholders only and deal with three main questions: First, the basis of selection of minority stockholders to be protected; second, the extent of the protection to be afforded; and third, the machinery for making that protection available.

The dominating purpose of these sections is to afford certain stockholders the opportunity to refrain from going along, against their will, with the new plan, to withdraw from the enterprise, and to liquidate their holdings. Obviously, however, this opportunity need not be afforded to all stockholders. Those who favored the adoption of the plan may be dismissed from further consideration. They cast their lot with the new plan. They stand by their own decision and if they desire to get out may do so only by a sale of their stock in the open market or otherwise. Nor is the committee satisfied that the opportunity should be given to every stockholder who opposed the adoption of the plan.

Basis of selection of minority stockholders: In determining the basis of selection of those who, from among the total number opposing the plan, should have the opportunity to dispose of their stock, two factors have been observed: The effect upon their holdings of stock, and the time when they became stockholders.

Selection as affected by the plan: Paragraph (1) of section 212 specifies the classes of stockholders (from the standpoint of the effect of the plan) who may, if they meet the requirements of paragraph (2) of that section, become dissenting stockholders within the meaning of the bill and as such be entitled to its benefits. The most usual case in which a stockholder may desire to withdraw from the enterprise and liquidate his holdings is where the corporate transaction involves the disposition of all, or substantially all, of the properties, franchises, and other assets of the company. When the holders of a majority of the stock of a corporation have power to take such a step the right of dissenting minority stockholders to receive payment in cash for their shares is almost universally recognized by the courts and is expressly stated in the statutes of a number of the States. Accordingly the first class of stockholders specified in the paragraph (in subdivision (a) thereof) as entitled to become dissenting stockholders includes those holding shares issued by a carrier a party to a plan which involves the disposition of all, or substantially all, of the properties, franchises, and other assets of such carrier.

Less frequently, an acquisition by his company of properties, franchises, or other assets gives rise to a situation which in justice requires that a dissenting stockholder be entitled to withdraw from the enterprise and liquidate his holdings. The basis of such a right is the extension or alteration of the business and purposes of the company to such a degree as to amount to a material change in the enterprise upon which the stockholder embarked, to which he should not be forced to submit. The extent of change necessary to give rise to such a right is a matter of degree, and has been the subject of somewhat varying judicial decision. It has seemed best therefore to leave the question largely to the law of the State by which the corporation was created, to which law it must be assumed the stockholder looked when he entered into the contract by purchasing his share. It is therefore provided, by subdivision (b) of paragraph (1) of section 212, that the holder of a share in a carrier corporation which proposes to acquire properties, franchises, or other assets may become a dissenting stockholder for the purposes of the bill only if he would have been entitled to obtain payment for his share if the same plan were being carried out under the law of the State of incorporation of his company.

It is to be expected that many plans will include both disposition of properties and acquisition of properties by the same carrier. The plan would then fall within the terms of both subdivisions. But the acquisition might be such as would not, under the State law, give rise to any right on the part of a dissenting stockholder. In order to make it clear that in such cases the minority stockholders' rights are not dependent upon the State law, it is provided that the provisions of subdivision (b) shall not be held to limit the application of the provisions of subdivision (a).

For the purposes of this section it is immaterial whether the disposition or acquisition referred to is effected through a corporate merger, sale, exchange, or lease, or in any other manner, except through a corporate consolidation, which, under the bill, is left to State law, and in which, therefore, the rights of stockholders must depend entirely upon that law.

Conditions to be met by stockholders: Not all of the stockholders identified as above are given the opportunity to dispose of their stock. An element of time must be considered. The bill specifically provides that a stockholder shall be entitled to the privilege only if he was registered as such upon the date of the entry of the order of the commission approving the plan. The purpose of this limitation is to discourage speculation in the stocks of carriers parties to a plan of unification. Purchasers of such stocks subsequent to the date of the entry of the order of the commission will be on notice of the pending unification. If they purchase after the entry of the order and before the closing of the books they may, of course, vote at the special meeting, but no reason is perceived why they need be given a special opportunity to dispose of their stock. Of course, there will be purchases in this intervening period intended for bona fide investment, and there may be other acquisitions—e. g., by legacy—free from any speculative element, as to either or both of which some possible hardship may be entailed by withholding the opportunity to dispose of the stock. But on the whole and after due consideration of the administrative difficulties attendant upon segregating the several methods of acquisition, the committee concluded that the more feasible course was to exclude all stock acquired after the date of the entry of the order of the commission.

The mere fact, however, that the stockholder was registered on that date is not enough to entitle him to dispose of his stock to the carrier. Certain conditions must be satisfied, namely: He must have continued to be registered as a stockholder until the closing of the books for the special meeting called to pass upon the adoption of the plan; he must have voted against the adoption of the plan at the meeting or prior to the meeting have given the carrier a written protest against the adoption of the plan; and he must have given the carrier, within 60 days after the special meeting, written notice that he does not consent to the adoption of the plan. If all the foregoing conditions are satisfied, the stockholder is classed as a dissenting stockholder.

Again, however, the bare fact that a stockholder has qualified as a dissenting stockholder does not of itself entitle him to dispose of his stock to the carrier. At this point the petitioning carriers have the privilege to withdraw and abandon their petition proposing the plan. This is specifically provided in paragraph (3) of section 212—that they may withdraw and abandon the petition "proposing a plan as to which there is a dissenting stockholder." The reason for this provision is to make it plain that the carriers may desist from carrying their plan into operation if the number of dissenting stockholders would impose upon the carriers too heavy a financial burden. This privilege to the carriers is designed to be the equivalent, under the condition specified, of the privilege of the condemnor in ordinary condemnation proceedings to abandon the condemnation if the cost is excessive. True, at this particular juncture in the unification proceedings, the exact cost of purchasing the dissenting stock is not known (for the purchase price is determined subsequently in the condemnation proceedings), but the maximum probable cost can be estimated once it is known what stockholders have dissented and how much stock they have.

If the plan is not abandoned but comes into operation on the effective date of the order of the commission, the dissenting stockholder is at once entitled to sell his stock to the carrier which is to carry on the business. But the privilege does not necessarily include all the stock owned by the dissenting stockholder; it includes only the stock which was registered in his name continuously from the date of the entry of the order of the commission up to the date when he qualified as a dissenting stockholder by giving the required written notice. Nor is it merely a personal privilege of the dissenting stockholder; it is a privilege which attaches to the share itself (see par. (3) of sec. 212), to that irrespective of who may be the holder subsequently to the dissenting stockholder himself the carrier is required to purchase the stock.

Extent of the protection: Just compensation must be paid for the stock. The bill proceeds on the basis that (in all cases where the stockholder and the carrier can not agree as to the price) the stock shall be taken by eminent domain. On the basis of eminent domain the Constitution (fifth amendment) requires that just compensation shall be paid. The language of the bill, then, is the language of the Constitution. In the last analysis it is a matter of judicial determination whether the value fixed for any share of stock constitutes just compensation. (Monongahela Navigation Co. v. United States (1893), 148 U. S. 312.) Higher than this just value, the committee would not go; lower than this, even if the committee thought the bill should be so framed, the Constitution would not permit the price to be fixed.

The committee was impressed with the suggestion made in the public hearings on the bill (see p. 318) that the value should be determined without appreciation or depreciation by reason of the unification itself. An examination of the statutes of several States discloses that they attempt to meet the situation in several ways, the most frequent of which is to specify a given date as of which the value shall be determined, e. g., the date of the sale, merger, stockholders' meeting, etc. But the committee concluded not to write any rigid rule into the bill. Considerations of the character mentioned above are implicit in the term "just compensation." Other considerations also may enter. As an additional matter and to make sure that the dissenting stockholders shall have the fullest protection in respect to the valuation of their stock in condemnation proceedings, provision is made for taxing the costs and (subject to the approval of the commission or the court) the expenses incurred in the condemnation proceedings upon the carrier involved.

The desirability of inserting this provision can hardly be exaggerated. It removes a long-standing reproach to the law. Hitherto the small stockholder's remedy has been illusory. He has been burdened with the payment of those counsel fees which are not taxable against the corporation and in practice, where the holding of stock is small, their amount renders the right to institute proceedings nugatory. In effect he has had a right without a remedy—a right to just compensation for his stock but no reasonable opportunity to enforce it. In the public hearings the grounds of reason and justice on which this provision in the bill is based were admitted on all hands. Counsel for the railroads accepted it. Your committee is of the opinion that this is one of the most important safeguards provided in the bill for the small stockholder. His right to just compensation will for the future exist not only in theory but also in fact.

Machinery for making the protection available: In general, the machinery and the methods are those for condemnation proceedings. Appropriate jurisdiction is conferred upon Federal courts. The carrier is under a duty to institute the proceedings. The method of enforcement, however, is not by penalty, but by giving the stockholder himself the privilege to institute the proceedings if the carrier fails to do so. The value of the stock, the just compensation to be paid, is fixed in the first instance by the commission. The report of the commission is not binding upon the court but is to be given the effect of the report of a master in chancery.

TAXATION

In order to enable the carriers which have obtained the commission's approval of a plan of unification under this title to carry out the plan without being unduly burdened by transfer taxes, section 214 provides that no tax shall be levied by the United States or by any State in respect to any issue, sale, delivery, or transfer of any security, or any agreement to sell, or memorandum of sale of, any security involved in the proposed unification. It is to be noted that this exemption extends only to securities and that the provisions of State laws relating to grants, assignments, transfers, or other conveyances of any interest in real or personal property (other than securities) are not affected by the bill.

The section also provides that gain from the sale or other disposition of property or income from any distribution in connection with the unification shall not be taxed by a State or any political subdivision thereof except to the extent that moneys are received from time to time from such transaction. This in effect does not relieve the carriers from State income taxes but merely postpones the time for the collection of the taxes, as in the case of the provision relating to Federal taxation. It is further provided that a unification shall be held to be a reorganization as that term is used in Part I of Title II of the revenue act of 1926. The effect of this latter provision is to subject the carriers which have entered into a plan of unification approved by the commission, to Federal taxation to the same extent that they would be taxed if they were parties to a reorganization as above referred to. Briefly, the legal effect is that gain will be recognized only to the extent that cash is received, with an appropriate adjustment of the basis upon which gain from a future sale is computed, and depreciation and depletion allowed.

APPLICATION OF EXISTING LAWS

As heretofore explained, paragraph (2) of section 5 of the present law is the provision under which the commission has been considering and approving or disapproving applications of carriers for control of other carriers, through lease, purchase of stock, or in any other manner not involving the consolidation of the carriers into a single system for ownership, management, and operation. Applications under this paragraph have varied from a short-term experimental lease of a carrier in the hands of a receiver to a lease for 999 years of all the properties of a carrier and the acquisition of the stock issued by such carrier. In fact, some applications have provided for corporate mergers, but none of these has been approved.

The committee considered very carefully the policy which should be applied to the applications under this paragraph and has reached the following conclusions:

(1) No applications should be received under this paragraph after the new bill becomes law. (See sec. 3 (2) of the bill.)

(2) The standards prescribed in the bill for the determination of the public interest should be considered by the commission in connection with pending applications the consideration of which is continued under paragraph (2) of section 5. (See sec. 3 (2) of the bill.)

(3) Many of the pending applications propose acquisitions of control involving carriers of importance, affecting more than a small territory, or presenting substantial problems of policy. The further consideration of these applications, because of their nature, should continue under the new bill rather than under the present law. In order to meet this situation it is provided that the commission may require that further or supplemental proceedings upon the application be had under the new bill, if the commission believes that the public interest will be promoted more effectually by proceeding under the new bill rather than under the present law. It will not be necessary, however, that entirely new proceedings be instituted under the new bill. (See sec. 215 (1) of the bill.)

(4) Many of the pending applications propose short-term leases, or leases of carrier property where control through stock ownership is already vested in the lessee carrier, or other acquisitions of control which may well be authorized under the present law. Under the bill the commission is authorized to continue the consideration of these applications under the present law, subject, however, to the provision that its determination of public interest must be made in accordance with provisions of the new bill. Obviously it was impossible to describe with accuracy the classes of cases which should be subjected to the provisions of the new bill and those minor cases the consideration of which could continue under the present law. Consequently it was necessary to place upon the commission the responsibility of determining whether or not the public interest required the transfer. (See sec. 215 (1) of the bill.)

In order that the evidence produced before the commission in proceedings under paragraph (2), (4), or (5) of section 5 prior to the enactment of the bill may be preserved and made available in future proceedings under the bill it is specifically provided in section 215 (2) that all such evidence, and abstracts or written materials based upon such evidence, shall be preserved and shall be available to the commission. If any evidence is so used, however, it is provided that it be made a part of the record in the proceedings by reference or otherwise.

REMEDIES OF STOCKHOLDERS EXCLUSIVE

Section 216 provides that the remedies afforded by the bill shall constitute the exclusive remedies of stockholders of any carrier in opposition to the exercise of any authority or power under the bill. As hereinbefore stated, such remedies are ample to protect the rights of dissenting stockholders who are not in accord with a plan of unification.

REGULATIONS

Section 217 grants to the commission authority to prescribe such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary for carrying out the provisions of the bill. It was thought that such a provision was necessary in view of the fact that the general grant of authority to the commission to make rules and regulations under sections 12 and 17 of the interstate commerce act might not cover all matters contemplated by the bill.

REPEALS

Section 3 of the bill provides for the repeal of paragraphs (4), (5), and (6) of section 5 of the interstate commerce act. These are provisions relating to consolidations which were added by the transportation act of 1920, for which the new bill is a substitute.

Paragraph (2) of section 5 of the interstate commerce act is amended by section 3 (2) of the bill so as to provide that no future applications shall be made under that paragraph. This amendment is necessary in in view of the policy adopted by the committee to make all future unifications subject to the provisions of the bill.

SHORT TITLE

The act may be cited as the "railway consolidation act of 1928."

SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

Your committee felt that the bill should be treated as a unit, as it might become impossible to administer in the event that certain provisions were held unconstitutional. Therefore the usual section dealing with the separability of provisions which was included in former bills was omitted.

PROPOSED NICARAGUAN CANAL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) authorizing an investigation and survey for a Nicaraguan canal.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I do not rise to oppose this joint resolution, provided its purpose be restricted to obtaining information or to investigation. There are, however, certain criticisms which I wish to make upon it which in its original form was, as I think, quite open to objection.

It is of vital importance that there be a careful examination of the Panama route, which, in accordance with the latest reports made, furnishes the best promise for an enlargement of facilities.

There is another route which was only casually examined by the Isthmian Canal Commission, created by the act of March 3, 1899, which is certainly worthy of further attention. That is known as the San Blas route—a route across the Isthmus from the Bay of San Blas, some miles east of the existing Panama route, and extending to the River Bayamo, which empties into the Bay of Panama. This route is only 30 miles in length. It would make possible a sea-level canal, which all the projectors of any of these enterprises have maintained was the object most to be desired. It presents a very serious difficulty, in that for 5 miles ships would have to go through a tunnel; but that has been declared feasible by competent engineers. There would also be necessary, on both sides of this tunnel, very deep cuttings for about 3 miles on one side and 2 miles on the other; but it would have the manifest advantage which I have mentioned of a sea-level route and of a shorter distance.

If facilities for traffic across the Isthmus are to be enlarged—and I think at some day they must be—we should enter upon no undertaking except after the most careful consideration.

I must contradict statements which have been freely made in the newspapers, and to an extent on this floor, as to the urgency of immediate action. Whatever inference may be formed from the annual report of Colonel Burgess, I wish to call attention to his testimony before the Appropriations Committee of the House so recently as December 11 last.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to ask the Senator a question. I am very much interested in what he says about a new route, about 30 miles, did he say, from the present Panama route?

Mr. BURTON. It is not that distance from the present Panama route. The 30 miles to which I referred was the distance across the Isthmus.

Mr. McKELLAR. How far did the Senator say it is from the Panama Canal?

Mr. BURTON. I think about 20 miles; something like that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the Senator investigated to see whether the provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and, afterwards, the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of 1901 would apply to the new canal if one were dug there?

Mr. BURTON. I do not think that after the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of 1901 or 1902 was ratified any objection could be made to the construction by the United States of any canal across any isthmus in that locality.

Mr. McKELLAR. Even though it were that close to the present Panama Canal? The Senator may be right; I do not know; but I think a question would be raised about it.

Mr. BURTON. At any rate, it is perfectly clear that in view of the agreement having been made for the Panama Canal, as a logical sequence permission for another canal in the neighborhood would be readily granted; so I do not think there is any possible obstacle in that direction, although I have not considered that subject.

In regard to the time within which there must be further facilities, I wish to read from the testimony of Colonel Burgess, Governor of the Canal Zone, given on December 11 last. Mr. BARBOUR, chairman of the subcommittee, asked him this question:

Governor, what can you tell us with respect to the ratio of your present traffic to the total capacity of the canal? Your traffic is increasing quite materially, according to these figures you have given us, except that there has been a slight decrease during the first five months of this fiscal year.

That would be from July 1, 1928, to December 1, 1928.

Colonel BURGESS. Yes, sir; we are taking through 19 ships per day in 1928. We can take about 54 through. That is roughly about 40 per cent of our capacity.

Mr. TABER. You mean you can take 54 ships through in one day?

Colonel BURGESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. TABER. And you are now taking 19?

Colonel BURGESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. TABER. That is your average?

Colonel BURGESS. Nineteen includes the Navy and Army ships, which occupy the canal just as much as the commercial ships.

Mr. TABER. And 54——

Colonel BURGESS. Is the maximum capacity of the locks.

Mr. CLAGUE. That is 24-hour service?

Colonel BURGESS. Twenty-four-hour service; yes, sir.

Mr. BARBOUR. According to your figures for 1928, you took care of 17.63 ships.

Mr. TABER. That is, 17.63 commercial ships.

Colonel BURGESS. Those are the ships that pay tolls, but the Navy ships occupy the locks just the same as the others.

Mr. BARBOUR. I understood you to say in connection with the first figures that you have given us for 1928 that the average was 17.66.

Colonel BURGESS. That is commercial ships; yes, sir.

Mr. BARBOUR. I understood you to say including——

Colonel BURGESS. No, sir; it was 19 including the Navy ships.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is, excluding.

Colonel BURGESS. Yes, sir; excluding, the figure is 17.63.

Then a question was asked as to when the traffic was at the peak.

Colonel BURGESS. It has peaks in the winter months, December, January, February, and March, and occasionally October is among the peak months.

Mr. TABER. How high up is that?

Colonel BURGESS. The difference is not very marked. There is a difference of about an average of just one lockage per day.

Mr. TABER. About one lockage per day?

Colonel BURGESS. Yes, sir; that is the difference between the peak and the average.

Mr. TABER. What is the peak that you have put through in a day?

Colonel BURGESS. We have put through 35 commercial ships. On one occasion we combined the number of commercial ships with a great many Navy torpedo boats and submarines and the total went up to 53.

Mr. TABER. Is that 12-hour service, daytime service?

Colonel BURGESS. No, sir; that was practically continuously during the night.

Then the question was asked—and this is pertinent to this inquiry—when an increase in lockage facilities would be needed.

Mr. BARBOUR. Have you made any estimate of the time when you will have to increase the lockage facilities?

Colonel BURGESS. As nearly as we can tell, the increase will not be more than 10,000,000 tons per decade. We are transmitting 30,000,000 tons now. We can take 60,000,000 before we need the third locks. That indicates a period of about 30 years before we will need the third locks.

Mr. TABER. How is the water supply?

Colonel BURGESS. The water supply will be ample when we get Alhajuela completed.

The report of the hearing gives a great deal of other detail as to the time during which boats pass through the canal, and mentions the fact that at night fogs are somewhat of an obstacle, though unquestionably this disadvantage could be overcome by an efficient system of lights.

Mr. President, I was very familiar with the controversy in regard to the selection of a route, and it may not be without interest to the Senate to give somewhat the history of the matter.

Prior to the year 1899 the opinion of the people of this country seemed to be almost unanimous in favor of the Nicaraguan route. A number of surveys had been made. President Grant sent General Comstock, with whose work as an engineer he had been familiar while in the Army, and General Comstock reported favorably on the Nicaraguan route. Divers reports were made, but they were all more or less superficial and incomplete, differing very widely in the estimate of cost, differing also as to the exact route to be chosen across Nicaragua.

Senator Morgan, that great Senator from Alabama, was the untiring advocate of the Nicaraguan route, and in an issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I think for February 6, 1902, he quoted a vast array of authorities, beginning with Alexander von Humboldt, which seemed to be conclusive in favor of the Nicaraguan route.

There was also another reason why that was preferred. De Lesseps had commenced the Panama Canal. It was known as a French enterprise. So long ago as the administration of President Hayes, the warning was issued that whatever canal was constructed should be under the control and management of the United States. So the Panama route was regarded as an alien enterprise.

In the year 1899 a river and harbor bill was framed carrying an appropriation, as it passed the House, of somewhat less than $40,000,000. To that bill the Senate added an amendment appropriating $10,000,000 cash and making an authorization of $115,000,000 for the construction of a Nicaraguan canal.

The House, while favoring the Nicaraguan canal, did not believe in provision by the Senate for such a disproportionate amount of the total. If the question had been left to a vote, undoubtedly, whatever the preference might have been for the Nicaraguan route, or the desire for a speedy completion of a canal, that amendment would have been voted down. The two Houses by their conferees entered into consideration of the subject. The Senate conferees were Senators Frye, White, and Elkins. The House conferees were Mr. Reeves of Illinois, General Catchings, who recently died in Mississippi, and myself. As is true of many other bodies in which I have served, I am the sole survivor of that conference.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). Does the junior Senator from Ohio yield to his colleague?

Mr. BURTON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I remind the Senate that my colleague, who now has the floor, was at the time to which he refers the chairman of the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. BURTON. That is true. A compromise was drawn up by me between the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, the House making no provision for any canal and the Senate authorizing the expenditure of $125,000,000 for the Nicaraguan route.

The argument was made that we had never had a thoroughly adequate survey of the Nicaraguan or any other route. The proposition urged by the Senate was that a commission be appointed to investigate all routes, for whose work $1,000,000 should be appropriated, and who should report on the best and most feasible route, to be controlled, managed, and owned by the United States.

I remember a dramatic incident which followed the presentation of that compromise. The Senate conferees refused to agree without the approval of Senator Morgan. They sent for him to come to the committee room, and I can remember most distinctly his standing at the door of the room of the Committee on Commerce when the proposition of compromise was placed before him. He nodded his head and said, "That is all quite all right."

The commission was thus agreed upon. They entered upon their work; they went to Europe, and spent considerable time in Paris. The commission, I may say, included some of the very leading engineers of the United States. It was presided over by Admiral J. G. Walker, and included Mr. Albert Noble, a great engineer, the constructor of the tunnel leading to the Pennsylvania Station in New York City; General Ernst, who was one of the most famous of the engineers of the Engineer Corps of the Army; General Hains, another member of the Engineer Corps; Mr. Morrison, who had been educated as a lawyer but who, by reason of his facility in the trial of a case in which engineering principles were involved, was advised to take a course in engineering, and became an engineer. He was the trusted adviser of some of the leading organizations engaged in transportation and other enterprises in the United States. There was also on the commission Professor Burr, of Columbia University; Mr. Haupt, of Pennsylvania; and ex-Senator Pasco, of Florida, who was the legal adviser of the commission of nine. Prof. Emory R. Johnson, of the University of Pennsylvania, was the economic adviser.

That commission divided into subcommittees and investigated particularly the Nicaraguan and the Panama routes. Some hundreds of engineers and others were engaged to make surveys. The examination of the Panama route, and especially of the Nicaraguan route, was far and away more thorough than any examination that had ever been made before.

While the commission was making the investigations the House became somewhat impatient, and a bill was brought forward by Mr. Hepburn, of Iowa, committing the Government to the Nicaraguan route. That bill was passed, I think, on the 1st day of May, 1900, with only 35 negative votes. I was one of the 35, and with me were Mr. Moody, afterwards a Justice of the Supreme Court; Mr. Hitt, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs; Senator GILLETT, now a member of this body; and Mr. Cannon, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. There was vigorous opposition to the passage of the bill making committal to the Nicaraguan route.

After the measure had passed the House it was held back under the influence of the administration. I can now tell what could not easily have been told then. It was held back by the influence of Secretary Hay and President McKinley, because it was thought that it was in violation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and also that it was not quite in accordance with that comity which should exist between the United States and Great Britain.

In 1902 another bill was passed committing the Government to the Nicaraguan route.

Mr. McKELLAR. That was in the House?

Mr. BURTON. That was in the House. That again was delayed under the influence of the administration. I think there were only two negative votes against that measure in the House.

After the first vote in the House three reports were made by the Isthmian Canal Commission. They were somewhat belated, and there had been a good deal of impatience because earlier action was not taken by that body. The first report was merely preliminary and not of special significance. The second report was distinctly favorable to the Nicaraguan route.

I cite the language to my good friend the Senator from New Jersey of an extract from the report which I think explains in a measure the reason why the Nicaraguan route was selected:

> After considering all the facts developed by the investigations made by the commission and the actual situation as it now stands, and having in view the terms offered by the new Panama Canal Co., this commission is of the opinion that the most practicable and feasible route for an Isthmian canal to be under the control, management, and ownership of the United States is that known as the Nicaraguan route.

Mr. President, as I was in frequent communication with the chairman of the commission, Admiral Walker, and know something of the history of that report, I think I should state it to the Senate. All during this time a majority of the commission thought that from an engineering and commercial standpoint the Panama route was the better of the two. That was especially true of Mr. Morrison, one of the ablest members of the commission, who did not think the Nicaraguan route was even feasible.

The new Panama Canal Co., as it was called, had been formed after the first one had gone into bankruptcy. The later company, however, was in financial difficulties like the first, and the commission entered into negotiations with its officers to see on what terms the new Panama Canal Co. would sell out its franchise and accept compensation for the work which it had done on the Isthmus, which was very considerable. The new Panama Canal Co. adhered very strictly to the figures of $119,000,000. The Isthmian Canal Commission thought that figure altogether too high and regarded it as exorbitant. It was the earnest desire of the members to make the most favorable bargain possible, and most of them thinking the Nicaraguan route was feasible and not desiring to pay this exorbitant figure, and, still further, not being able to acquire the complete title of the French company, for their offer was not to sell out entirely at first, but to invite the United States to become a stockholder in the company and join with them, still maintaining the corporate existence of the company as a French organization, expressed themselves more vigorously than ever in favor of the Nicaraguan route. I think I can give an explanation of that report in 1901. That causes me to criticize the provision contained in the pending joint resolution on page 4, lines 17 to 22, which read as follows:

> That the President is hereby authorized to cause to be made, under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, a full and complete investigation and survey for the purpose of revising and bringing down to date the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission transmitted to Congress December 4, 1901.

I do not think that would be quite fair or adequate to meet the situation because that was the report which was friendly to the Nicaraguan route made under the circumstances which I have detailed.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. EDGE. I fully concur in the Senator's suggestion as I understand it. I think the language was incorporated when the resolution was drafted more for the purpose of permitting the engineers to utilize, as far as they in their professional judgment thought wise, the borings or surveys or facts from the standpoint of topography, depths of river, and so on, that were contained in the Isthmian Canal report, but certainly there was no intention that the conclusions of the Isthmian Canal Commission should in any way influence the further survey.

Mr. BURTON. Of course, there were three reports. I would suggest this amendment: In line 21, page 4, change the word "report" to "reports," and in line 22, strike out the words "transmitted to the Congress December 4, 1901," so that it may read "for the purpose of revising and bringing down to date the reports of the Isthmian Canal Commission."

Mr. EDGE. That is quite satisfactory.

Mr. BURTON. I make the motion that the amendment be adopted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may we have the amendment stated again?

Mr. BURTON. I will state it gladly. On page 4, line 21, strike out the word "report" and insert the word "reports," and in line 22, strike out the words "transmitted to Congress December 4, 1901."

Mr. McKELLAR. Would it not be better to merely strike out the words "December 4, 1901," because all three of the reports were actually transmitted to Congress, as I understand.

Mr. BURTON. But the word "transmitted" rather seems to point to one report; not necessarily, perhaps. We would have to change the word "report" to "reports."

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and then strike out the words "December 4, 1901."

Mr. BURTON. "The reports from the Isthmian Canal Commission transmitted to Congress." I think that would be satisfactory. Change the word "report" to "reports" and strike out the words "December 4, 1901."

Mr. EDGE. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, line 21, strike out the word "report" and insert in lieu thereof the word "reports," and in line 22 strike out the words "December 4, 1901," so as to make the sentence read:

That the President is hereby authorized to cause to be made, under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, a full and complete investigation and survey for the purpose of revising and bringing down to date the reports of the Isthmian Canal Commission transmitted to the Congress—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I think now, in justification of the selection of the Panama route, I ought to read extracts from the official report of the commission as made in February, 1902.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BURTON. I yield.

Mr. HAWES. In that portion of the joint resolution just mentioned there is a reference to the form of the commission. As an authority on this subject, did not the Senator find in his investigations that on both the Panama Commission and the Nicaraguan Commission the Government always used civil engineers in making their investigations?

Mr. BURTON. The Isthmian Canal Commission was one which was to examine all routes. It was not the Panama route nor the Nicaraguan route. A number of prior reports were made. I have referred to one personally transmitted to President Grant, which was made by General Comstock, a member of the Engineer Board of the United States. There were two reports on the Nicaraguan route made only a short time before the Isthmian Canal Commission was constituted. One was called the Ludlow Commission. Its report was rejected. The next commission was made up of Admiral Walker, General Hains, who was an engineer of the Army, and a third member whose name I have forgotten at the moment. That, I believe, answers the question of the Senator from Missouri as to ignoring the engineers of the Army. I think the selections were very far from involving anything like discrimination against the Army engineers. Those were selected who, it was thought, would do the best work.

I wish to read now from Senate reports, volume 5, Report 783, the conclusions of a minority of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, which led them to favor the Panama route:

The advantages stated by the commission concerning the Panama Canal are:

1. It is 134.57 miles shorter than the Nicaragua from sea to sea (being 49.09 miles by Panama as against 183.66 miles by Nicaragua).

2. It has less curvature, both in degrees and miles, being but 22.85 miles of curvature as against 49.29 on the Nicaragua, and but 771 degrees for Panama as against 2,339 degrees for Nicaragua.

3. The actual time of transit is less, being but 12 hours of steaming by Panama, as against a minimum of 33 hours of steaming by Nicaragua; that is, of one day of daylight as against three days of daylight (for the canal must be navigated by day exclusively at first, and, to a great extent, always, especially by large ships, which chiefly will use it. The commission's plan does not provide facilities for navigation by night).

4. The locks are fewer in number, being but 5 on the Panama to 8 on the Nicaragua.

5. The harbors are better, those of the termini of the Panama being good and already used by the commerce of the world, while at the termini of the Nicaragua there are no harbors whatever.

6. The Panama route traverses a beaten track in civilization, having been in use by the commerce of the world for four centuries, while the Nicaragua route passes through an unsettled and undeveloped wilderness.

7. There already exists on the Panama route a railroad perfect in every respect and equipped in a modern manner, closely following the line of the canal, and thus greatly facilitating the construction of the canal, as well as furnishing a source of revenue, and included in the offer of the Panama company.

8. The annual cost of maintenance and operation of the Panama Canal would be $1,300,000 less than that of the Nicaragua (which sum capitalized is the equivalent of $65,000,000).

That capitalization is computed on rather a low rate of interest, but it is based on the fact that some of the bonds issued for the construction of the Panama Canal were issued at 2 per cent and they had the privilege of being used as security for national-bank notes, and hence were floated at a very low rate.

9. All engineering and practical questions involved in the construction of the Panama are satisfactorily settled and assured, all the physical conditions are known, and the estimates of the cost reliable, while the Nicaragua involves unknown and uncertain factors in construction, and unknown difficulties to be encountered, which greatly increase the risks of construction and render uncertain the maximum cost of completion.

In addition to these facts stated by the commission are the two following, not referred to by them, but which have become of controlling importance, namely:

10. It is recognized that a sea-level canal is the ideal. The Panama Canal may be either constructed as a sea-level canal or may be subsequently converted into one. On the other hand, no sea-level canal will ever be possible on the Nicaragua route.

11. No volcanoes exist on the line of the Panama Canal nor in its neighborhood. On the other hand, the Nicaragua route traverses an almost continually volcanic tract, which has been during the last three-quarters of a century probably the most violently eruptive in the Western Hemisphere. The active volcanoes, Zapatera and Ometepe, rise actually from the waters of Lake Nicaragua.

12. At Panama earthquakes are few and unimportant, while the Nicaragua route passes over a line of well-known crustal weakness. Only five disturbances of any sort were recorded at Panama during 1901, all very slight, while similar official records at San Jose de Costa Rica, near the route of the Nicaragua canal, show for the same period 50 shocks, a number of which were severe.

13. As a practical matter, the masters of vessels prefer the Panama route for safety, convenience, and shortness of transit, for its less curvature and risks, and for the lower insurance rate by that route.

In the same report there is set forth at very considerable length a more elaborate treatment of the subject of volcanoes and earthquakes in the Nicaragua region. Angelo Heilprin, one of the most famous geologists of that day, is quoted at length. Indeed, Members of the Senate will have noticed that in the last day or two an earthquake has been recorded in Guatemala which is not a very great distance from the Nicaraguan route.

These considerations led to the selection of the Panama route. In considering a conditional measure—which I will explain in a few moments—the question was elaborately argued by Senator Hanna in the spring or early summer of 1902. I remember listening to him as he presented his argument. He was crippled by rheumatism, and nearly all the time had to sit in a chair, not being able to rise, but he made one of the most elaborate and forceful arguments ever made in this body. The result was that the membership, which at first had been altogether friendly to the Nicaraguan route, was turned in favor of Panama, on the crucial vote 42 against 33, though on the final vote the majority was much larger.

The Nicaragua Canal Co. of America, which had been incorporated to build the canal, was largely represented here. That company was formed in the early eighties but later failed. There were divers Senators who advocated subsidizing that company. Among them was Senator Morgan, who made a very able speech in this Chamber. Indeed, if anyone wishes to find a well-constructed argument in favor of governmental subsidies to private enterprise, I would recommend that he read that speech of Senator Morgan. Senator Sherman, of Ohio, who was more conservative in this regard, published an article in the Forum Magazine also favoring the giving of a subsidy to or guaranteeing the bonds of the company.

The result was the passage of the bill to the effect that President Roosevelt should proceed with the construction of the Panama Canal provided proper arrangements could be made as to acquisition of the necessary title for its location and on reasonable terms. If he were unable to proceed in that regard, then he was instructed to proceed with the construction of a canal along the Nicaraguan route. It will be noted, Senators, that this was giving to President Roosevelt almost unprecedented authority in the prosecution of a great public work.

I may say before passing to the subject of the treaty that Senator Morgan again acquiesced in the passage of that bill.

He was again, I may say, circumvented. He was so serenely confident that no arrangement could be made for the construction of the canal along the Panama route that, in view of the alternative under which the Nicaraguan route was to be adopted, he consented to the passage of the bill. It passed both Houses by a very large majority.

Just briefly I may dwell upon what followed. A treaty was negotiated with the executive department of Colombia, but the legislative body refused to ratify it, and for a time it seemed as if the selection of the Nicaraguan route would become necessary. While that treaty was pending, in October or November, 1903, a revolution occurred at Panama, under which that Province threw off the yoke of Colombia. The United States recognized the revolutionary government at an early date, and then proceeded to make a treaty with the Government of Panama under which the necessary rights were granted to the United States. That was the treaty under which we entered upon the Isthmus and constructed the canal.

The United States Government, and particularly Mr. Roosevelt, have been very much blamed for having instigated that revolution. I do not think investigation will justify that accusation. It is evidently true that our diplomatic officials on the Isthmus knew that something of the kind was brewing. I may relate one incident, a bit humorous in character, which occurred. On the day of the insurrection the Assistant Secretary of State of the United States sent a cablegram to our consul on the Isthmus, saying:

Understand that a revolution has occurred on the Isthmus. Please send us details.

The singular feature of the case is that that cablegram arrived from four to six hours before the revolution occurred. So it is perfectly evident that it was known that something was likely to occur, but I do not believe there was any instigation on the part of any official of the United States. President Roosevelt took a very stalwart ground in favor of asserting our rights there, and of protecting Panama and recognizing the new government. After delays we went ahead with the canal.

It was my good fortune, as I think, to be associated with another phase of this question. There was delay in the decision as to whether the canal should be a sea-level canal or a lock canal. De Lesseps had said that the reason why he selected Panama rather than Nicaragua as the site of an interoceanic canal was because it was possible to construct a sea-level canal on the Panama route but was not possible on the Nicaraguan route.

A commission of engineers was appointed, made up largely of representatives from abroad, chosen by President Roosevelt, to go down to the Isthmus and examine into the question of whether the canal should be of the sea-level or lock type. I think there were 13 members of the commission, including the leading German engineer on canals, the engineer who had charge of the Manchester Canal, and others. They decided by a vote of 8 to 5 in favor of the sea-level canal. The members of the commission from the United States were for the most part in the negative on that proposition. One of the members told me at one time the reason which in his mind explained that decision was this: He said the members gathered together and called at the White House on President Roosevelt for his instructions. The President stated to them, "Now, gentlemen, I want the very best canal." They interpreted that to mean that he wished a sea-level canal and brushed aside all considerations of engineering, of expense, of difficulty, and thus decided in favor of a sea-level canal, though probably it was contrary to their best judgment as to what was the most desirable plan. Be that as it may, our engineers on the Isthmus afterwards concluded that the lock plan was best, three locks with a lift of 28½ feet each at Gatun and corresponding locks on the Pacific side.

The chief engineer was Mr. Stevens, who had a prominent part in the control of the railways, I believe, in Siberia during the Great War. He said that the force there were discouraged and unless the decision was for a lock plan he feared the force would disintegrate. At the request of certain executive officers and engineers placed in contact with me, I took up the cause of the lock plan. It had been discussed for a long while here in the Senate, and I think the dominant opinion was in favor of the sea-level canal. I think the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] will remember that discussion in 1906.

Mr. WATSON. Yes; I remember it very well.

Mr. BURTON. Also, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was a Member of the House at that time. The question was discussed at very considerable length, and almost immediately after the discussion a vote was taken on it and by a very large majority the lock plan was adopted. Soon after the Senate acquiesced.

This is, to an extent, a digression from the remarks I have been making, but it is an important part of the history of the canal. Originally it had been intended that there should be a sea-level canal. I do not think at that time that would have been feasible. It would have required at the Culebra Cut so considerable a depth that it would have taken years to provide for the slides which occurred, and which impeded progress through the channel. It would also have left the Chagres River as an almost uncontrollable torrent, and thus an almost insuperable obstacle to the building and operation of the canal. The adoption of the lock plan and the creation of a great lake above by the Gatun Dam makes the Chagres River, which otherwise would have been destructive, a constructive influence. It also provides a most excellent channel for a very considerable portion of the canal.

The rest of the history of this great enterprise is probably familiar to all of the Senators. In many ways it may be said to be the greatest engineering work ever undertaken in the world. It seemed impossible; and undertakings by private companies, one after another, failed completely. The Government of the United States declared it to be its policy that there be a canal controlled and owned by the United States; and that led, as I think, inevitably to the conclusion that the Government itself must take up the work.

The original cost is said to have been about $242,000,000; but to that must be added interest during the long years in which it was under construction, fortifications, reparations, and improvements, so that the cost now may be counted as approaching double that sum.

I think Colonel Burgess gives an estimate as to that. He charges to military phases $113,000,000 and to commercial activities $273,000,000; but that includes a great deal of incidental property, such as coaling places, facilities for the repairs of ships, and so forth. Mr. Barbour asks him this question:

So at the present time you charge about $242,000,000 for actual canal investment?

That question he answered in the affirmative; and then it is stated that the capital investment would be figured at about $386,000,000.

The canal now, contrary to all prognostications and expectations, is a paying institution.

Mr. President, to sum up what I have said in rather a long way——

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator reaches the conclusion, may I ask a question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I was not quite clear, from the statement made by the Senator—perhaps he did not feel it necessary to go into that question—why, in the light of this report made by Rear Admiral Walker and signed by Samuel Pasco, Alfred Noble, George S. Morrison, Peter C. Hains, William H. Burr, and O. H. Ernst, in which they recommended the construction of the canal over the Nicaragua route, that was not taken in preference to the Panama route.

Mr. BURTON. I have partly dwelt on that already. I am quite familiar with the circumstances existing at that time. A majority of the members of the commission of nine perhaps thought the Nicaraguan route feasible. They regarded the Panama route as impossible because it could not be controlled, managed, and owned by the United States. The French company held to their ownership tenaciously and for a long time refused to make any offer of sale. Finally they did make an offer which was regarded as altogether unreasonable—$119,000,000.

Thus, as far as the Panama route was concerned, the commission were against a stone wall. It could not be acquired and owned by the United States and they were directed to recommend a canal so owned and controlled. The possible price at which they could acquire the Panama route was altogether unreasonable, they thought. They afterwards bought it for $40,000,000. I do not know to what extent the report in favor of the Nicaraguan route may have been colored by a desire to obtain more favorable terms. I do not want to ascribe that motive to Admiral Walker and his associates, but possibly that had something to do with it.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I have made quite an exhaustive research of all the reports, going back for 150 or 200 years, because there were some investigations that went back to the seventeenth century.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, before that; with Balboa about 1517. That is, the proposal was made in 1517 that there might be a canal there.

Mr. KING. Yes; but there were some surveys away back 150 or 200 years ago?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. KING. And it seemed to me, from all of the researches which I have made and the reports which I have read—and I have examined perhaps 15 or 20—that Panama furnished a far better location for a canal than Nicaragua; and I was a little surprised at the report of Admiral Walker recommending Nicaragua, in the face of what seemed to me to be superior opportunities for the construction of a canal over the Isthmus of Panama.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator can see the restraints under which they labored in making that report. In the first place, the Panama Canal was ruled out because the United States could not own and control it.

Mr. KING. There were political considerations.

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. KING. Another question: Why was not the San Blas route selected, rather than the present route?

Mr. BURTON. I think that at a very early date the members of the commission concluded that it was too much of an undertaking to engage in the building of a canal which had not even been surveyed. Their predilection for the Panama route was very strong. Part of it had been dug already.

Mr. KING. That was largely because of the French work which had been done there?

Mr. BURTON. Yes. Of course, in our final location, we did not follow the French route. A good deal of their work was abandoned, and especially their machinery. If the Senator has ever been down there, he has probably seen the graveyard where so many dredges were left to rot, and all of that was charged in in the $119,000,000.

Mr. KING. One other question, and then I shall not interrupt the Senator further. Does not the Senator think, if a survey is to be made with a view to determining whether there is another practical or feasible route for a canal, that the authorization should be to examine the Isthmus of Panama to see if there may not be a canal constructed there that would be far more feasible and practical than the one in Nicaragua?

Mr. BURTON. I think so.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is provided in the present joint resolution.

Mr. BURTON. Is there anything besides the Panama route and routes across Nicaragua?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it is the enlargement of the present route and the Nicaraguan route. I think that would take in, though, a route 20 miles from the Panama Canal. I am quite sure it would.

Mr. BURTON. I question that a little. I do not say that is the best route, but there are certain obvious advantages—it is at sea level and shorter—but, of course, it would have to go under that great tunnel, 200 feet high, at least, and probably more than that. They had figures, however, on the construction of that tunnel back in 1902, and the very highest estimate that was made for the construction at that time was $36,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. How large would it have been; does the Senator recall?

Mr. BURTON. About 5 miles in length.

Mr. McKELLAR. I mean, large enough to take through all ships?

Mr. BURTON. The original plan that they surveyed there was only for a 35-foot depth.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to say that the Senator has given us not only a remarkable demonstration of facts connected with this subject, but a remarkable demonstration of memory of these things that happened a great many years ago; and I want to thank him for the splendid contribution he has made to this debate.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator from Tennessee is very complimentary, and I thank him.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, further for the Senator's information, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has suggested an amendment which will permit the engineers to investigate any other possible or practical route; so that, with the suggestion made by the Senator, if the joint resolution passes, we will be able to receive for the first time information as to that route.

Mr. BURTON. I think that ought to be done.

Mr. EDGE. I am somewhat familiar with the section the Senator speaks of.

Mr. BURTON. The San Blas route?

Mr. EDGE. Yes.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, the only difference between the Senator and myself, if we are to pass the joint resolution at all, is this: I think the paramount object should be to make a survey of the Isthmus of Panama with a view to determining the most feasible route there of a canal that will parallel the present canal—when I use the word "parallel," I mean within a reasonable distance of it—and make the isthmian canal in Nicaragua a subordinate consideration. In other words, I think the best place for another canal, if we are to build one, is through the Isthmus of Panama rather than up in Nicaragua.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BURTON. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. In reference to the question asked by the Senator from Utah, I have no objection whatsoever to the enlargement of the inquiry. I think the more facts we get the better it will be; but there is one consideration that we shall all have to make about the matter, and that is this:

As the Senator knows, we were under a very restricted treaty obligation—I mean, restricted so far as America was concerned—in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850 and again in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of 1901. I am not at all sure that another Panama route would not be subject to all of the restrictions in that treaty, and I know the enlargement of the present Panama route would be; whereas if we have a Nicaraguan canal, we can build it as a purely American enterprise, without the necessity of any treaty with any nation other than those three, one of which it would be built through, another one of which it adjoins, and another one of which claims some kind of interest there. Of course, it is necessary to get that information; but we shall have to consider that particular feature when we come to pass upon the matter finally.

Mr. BURTON. On the other hand, Mr. President, I can hardly conceive of our building a canal there without an international agreement. Certainly we should have to make treaties with the country or countries through which the canal should go.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is provided for in the joint resolution.

Mr. BURTON. And, then, suppose we were to go ahead in a foreign land with the construction of a canal: What assurance would we have that it would not be made the subject of attack? What regulation would exist for the ships of other countries going through it?

Take the Suez Canal, which was opened in 1869: We might say that that did not require any treaty, but really it did, and a treaty was made in regard to it. I do not quite think the way would be clear to build a canal, either in Panama or Nicaragua, without a treaty.

The Senator from Tennessee no doubt has in mind that we might build a canal where we would allow our boats to go through free of tolls, and charge tolls to other countries.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not that in mind. I think what has been done in Panama has been very wisely done. I think that all nations ought to be treated absolutely alike, in so far as the use of the canal is concerned, but I do think that if America desires to protect any canal she may buy or build, she ought to have the right to protect it in any manner she sees fit.

I agree with the Senator that, so far as the uses of the canal are concerned, it ought to be used upon terms absolutely fair to all nations, including our own.

Mr. BURTON. But query: Whether we could protect it any better if we went ahead on our own initiative than we could under an agreement with other nations, by the terms of which it was to be protected against attack, and regulations made as to the passing and repassing of warships through it; that is a very essential part of any agreement like that.

Mr. McKELLAR. That might be more easily arranged after the canal was built, or at least after it was begun. If we build this other canal, I do not want our Government to have to get the permission of another nation or other nations, as we did on the occasion in 1901.

Mr. BURTON. At the same time, there would be a treaty.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I think probably that is so.

Mr. BURTON. Briefly to summarize, I think all three at least of the routes that have been suggested should be examined carefully. Frankly speaking, by partiality or predilection would be for the enlargement of the Panama Canal as the simplest way of providing facilities for the future. I do not agree with those who regard the provision for additional facilities as immediate or urgent, because the Governor of the Canal Zone has said that at the present rate of increase it will be 30 years before additional facilities will be required. That is in very flat contradiction to what has been said in some quarters, but I have no doubt that his information is the best in regard to that.

We can hardly expect that in the future the traffic will increase at the same rapid rate that it has increased since the canal was opened in 1914. There is a slackening in the percentage of increase in practically all transportation agencies, and that will be true of the canal. The biggest item that goes through there is crude oil, next to that is lumber, and next to that grain, and then different articles.

It is a source of great rejoicing that the Panama Canal brings us not only into closer touch, by water transportation, with our own Pacific coast, and creates a new bond between the regions of the Pacific and those of the Atlantic, but it also brings us nearer to the west coast of South America. Perhaps some Senators may not have had their attention called to the fact that in going from New York to Buenos Aires the shortest mileage is not by the Atlantic all the way but to go through the Panama Canal, go down to Valparaiso, cross over the Andes, and go by rail to Buenos Aires. That is very materially a shorter route, though not an all-water route, than to go by the Atlantic exclusively.

We of course stand ready to build another canal, or to enlarge the present one. The results of this great enterprise have been so far-reaching, so splendid, that we should by no means shrink from making such additions or such new construction as may be necessary.

Mr. HAWES obtained the floor.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HAWES. I yield.

Mr. DILL. The Senator from Missouri is about to present another phase of this matter, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. EDGE. Before the clerk calls the roll——

Mr. DILL. I make the point, Mr. President.

Mr. EDGE. Will the Senator withhold that a moment? I really feel it will be rather difficult to get a quorum at this time, Saturday afternoon.

Mr. DILL. The Senator from Missouri is going to discuss a new phase of this subject.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator and I have had a thorough understanding as to his amendments, and I am proposing to accept them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington insist on his point?

Mr. DILL. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fess	McNary	Shortridge
Barkley	Frazier	Mayfield	Simmons
Bayard	Gerry	Moses	Smith
Bingham	Glass	Neely	Smoot
Black	Glenn	Norbeck	Steck
Blaine	Goff	Norris	Steiwer
Blease	Gould	Nye	Stephens
Bratton	Greene	Oddie	Swanson
Brookhart	Hale	Overman	Thomas, Idaho
Broussard	Harrison	Phipps	Trammell
Bruce	Hastings	Pine	Tydings
Burton	Hawes	Pittman	Tyson
Capper	Hayden	Ransdell	Vandenberg
Caraway	Heflin	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mass.
Couzens	Johnson	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Jones	Robinson, Ark.	Warren
Dale	Kendrick	Robinson, Ind.	Waterman
Deneen	King	Sackett	Watson
Dill	McKellar	Schall	Wheeler
Edge	McMaster	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, I desire to send to the desk a communication from the American Engineering Council and ask that it be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

AMERICAN ENGINEERING COUNCIL,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1929.

Senator HARRY B. HAWES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HAWES: I wish to assure you that American Engineering Council, which represents officially 44,000 professional engineers and is the organ through which these engineers express themselves on all public questions of an engineering nature, support your amendment of January 28 on the Edge resolution (S. J. Res. 117).

The civilian engineers welcome an opportunity to serve their country along with other professions. It seems wise since Senate Joint Resolution 117 authorizes a commission to bring existing data up to date and to report on the feasibility and desirability of constructing an interoceanic canal through Nicaragua, a thing which has been a controversial subject for some time, it would seem wise to have upon this commission eminent civilian engineers so that the decision of the commission would have additional weight and be respected as the final decision of all classes of experts who are qualified to pass upon this subject.

It has been the history of many governmental undertakings, most notably and recently the Boulder Canyon Dam project, that once a qualified and impartial investigating commission has reported upon a project that its legislative path has been materially smoothed.

Your position is prompted by wisdom and foresight and American Engineering Council assures you of its support.

Yours sincerely,

B. R. VAN LEER,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, last year in the discussion of the flood-control legislation I made inquiry about the different engineering societies in the United States. I found that we have over 200,000 civilian engineers and a great national organization of 44,000 engineers, and that each State in the Union has a school for the instruction of engineers. It occurred to me that in carrying on the great work of flood control, the primary investigations of the Army engineers should be supplemented by the advice of civilian engineers.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAWES. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I recall that in the discussion of the flood-control question that matter was considered favorably. Is there any objection to including civilian engineers with the Army engineers in the pending question?

Mr. HAWES. It is not in the joint resolution, and I shall in a few moments propose an amendment to that effect.

Mr. FESS. I should think such an amendment would be acceptable. I do not see any objection to it.

Mr. HAWES. I will submit my amendment now, and if there is no objection to it I shall be glad to discontinue the discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the proposed amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Missouri offers the following amendment:

On page 4, line 19, after the words "Chief of Engineers," insert "and such civilian engineers as the President deems advisable" and on page 5, line 16, after the words "Chief of Engineers," insert "and such civilian engineers as the President deems advisable."

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAWES. Certainly.

Mr. EDGE. I have no objection to the amendment. Of course, as indicated, it leaves it entirely optional with the President whether he shall appoint them, and then, of course, the limit of money which is to be expended is fixed in the appropriation. I agree thoroughly with the Senator from Missouri that civilian engineers would be necessary certainly for any completed project. Whether it is deemed necessary in the preliminary surveys I am not so positive; nevertheless, I am entirely satisfied to leave it to the judgment of the President.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I was called out of the Chamber momentarily. What is the proposed amendment?

Mr. EDGE. It is the amendment of the Senator from Missouri and provides that the President shall have power to appoint civilian engineers with the Army engineers.

Mr. BURTON. That right has always been exercised.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the pending joint resolution provides for an expenditure of $150,000 to bring down to date the engineering information originally compiled by the Isthmian Canal Commission in 1901 relative to the construction of a Nicaraguan canal. I shall vote for the resolution because I believe that the facts thus ascertained will be worth the price.

I can not allow this occasion to pass, however, without directing attention to the fact that the necessity for the construction of the Nicaragua canal will probably be long delayed. In the report made by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] upon the bill we are told that—

It has been indicated by the annual reports of the Panama Canal Commission that if the business of the canal continues to increase as it has during recent years, the capacity of the present canal will be taxed to its maximum capacity in 10 years or at the outside 15 years.

I might point out so far as one misstatement therein is concerned that there is no such thing as the Panama Canal Commission. That commission ceased to exist years ago and we now have only a Governor of the Panama Canal whose statements before the House Committee on Appropriations were read to the Senate by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. The most significant part of that testimony I wish to repeat. The chairman of the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations asked the following question:

Mr. BARBOUR. Have you made any estimate of the time when you will have to increase the lockage facilities?

Colonel BURGESS. As nearly as we can tell, the increase will not be more than 10,000,000 tons per decade. We are transmitting 30,000,000 tons now. We can take 60,000,000 before we need the third locks. That indicates a period of about 30 years before we will need the third locks.

Thus if the Alhajuela Dam, the name of which has been changed to the Madden Dam in honor of the late chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, the construction of which has been authorized and is now in progress, with an ample water supply for the use of the present locks, it will be 30 years before it will be necessary to add a third lock to the Panama Canal.

In the last annual report of the then Governor of the Panama Canal, Gen. M. L. Walker, this statement was made.

The traffic through the Panama Canal in the fiscal year just closed was greater than in any preceding fiscal or calendar year. This statement, made last year, is repeated for this. Traffic in the fiscal year 1928 was greater than that in the fiscal year 1927 by 18 per cent in number of commercial transits, 12 per cent in net tonnage, 11 per cent in tolls, and 7 per cent in cargo carried.

The growth of traffic has brought to the front considerations of the possibility of its exceeding the capacity of the canal, with the corollary of considering ways by which the capacity may be increased. Present traffic is considered to be between 45 and 50 per cent of that which the canal can handle, as constructed at present. The first move to provide for future increases and to assure sufficient depth of water in the cut and over the upper sills of the locks has been begun in the development of a supplementary water supply. A résumé of the essentials of this project is presented in a section devoted to additional storage at Alhajuela. It is believed that this, with the eventual construction of a third flight of locks, paralleling the present twin flights will increase the present capacity of the canal by about 70 per cent.

If the present capacity of the Panama Canal is 60,000,000 tons, as stated by Colonel Burgess, and if General Walker is correct in his estimate that the third locks will increase the capacity 70 per cent, or over 40,000,000 tons, the total capacity of the canal will then be 100,000,000 tons. If, as Colonel Burgess says, 30,000,000 tons are now being transmitted through the canal, and the rate of increase is 10,000,000 tons per decade, it will be 70 years before there will be any need for construction of the Nicaraguan canal.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. DILL. The Senator surely has heard the chairman of the committee [Mr. EDGE] say so often that it will only take 10 to 15 years to have the canal facilities exhausted or used to their maximum. There must be something wrong here.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am quoting the words of the present Governor of the Panama Canal and his immediate predecessor who submitted this annual report on August 27, 1928.

Mr. DILL. I know, but I am quoting the chairman of the committee, upon whom I am supposed to rely for information on this subject.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. EDGE. I do not want to take the time of the Senator, but the figures appearing in the RECORD are absolutely taken from the same report from which the Senator himself is reading. Some supplementary information has been received from the new governor, Governor Burgess, who has only been there three months, and from various testimonials of engineers who have realized the rapidly increasing, the unprecedented increasing transit since last June, when the report was made.

I think the Senator was not in the Chamber at the time when I read the report which was submitted in January, which was that the greatest number of transits in any month since the canal had been opened occurred in January, far in excess of any month in the year before; and the estimate, of course, is necessarily more or less guesswork on the part of those engineers. We can not visualize commercial traffic for 5 or 10 or 15 or 20 years. The fact remains that in each cycle of five years since the canal has been operated the traffic has more than doubled. In other words, the traffic in the second five years was double that of the first five years, and the traffic in the third five years was double that in the second five years. I do not say that we may expect that average to continue, but I do say that this is a red flag of warning. It is coming along with such rapidity that surely there can not be any reasonable objection to getting all the information in order to be prepared for a final decision on the part of Congress as to our future canal policy. That is all the joint resolution provides.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am going to vote for the Senator's resolution, but when he says the present Governor of the Canal Zone has only been there three months, I remind him that it has been the unvarying custom since the Panama Canal was completed to advance the engineer of maintenance to the governorship, and Col. Harry Burgess, who has occupied that position for the past four years, has recently been promoted to be Governor of the Panama Canal. His testimony before the House Committee on Appropriations last December, which was read to the Senate by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] states positively that it will be 30 years at the present rate of growth before it will be necessary to add a third flight of locks. General Walker, his immediate predecessor as governor, makes a statement which leads to the conclusion that on the same basis it will be 70 years before it will be necessary to construct the Nicaraugua canal to take care of the traffic.

Governor Walker in his annual report for 1928 stated further:

The total net revenue from combined Panama Canal and Panama Railroad operations in the fiscal year was $20,621,314.82, the best showing for any year to date.

The increasing revenues have been made the occasion for proposals that the tolls be reduced, either on all traffic or on special classes of vessels. Policy in this respect is for determination by Congress. It is pertinent, however, for the administration of the canal to point out that heavy expenditures are yet due to be made for additions and replacements in the plant, for the adequate quartering of employees, for suitable retirement of employees grown old or disabled in this exacting service; that tolls at Panama are lower (by approximately a third at present) than the tolls at Suez; that reductions will benefit foreign vessels in foreign trade as well as United States vessels in domestic trade.

Then I direct the attention of the Senate to this final remark:

That the intercoastal lines are competing severely with the railroads, and a lowering of tolls may cripple the internal transportation system of the United States while reducing the Government's revenue, with offsetting benefits accruing only to limited special interests.

The Panama Canal tolls should not be lowered and I therefore heartily agree with everything Governor Walker has said except that last statement. The intercoastal steamship lines operating through the Panama Canal are not to any great degree competing with the transcontinental railroads of the United States, but the traffic through that canal is being used merely as an excuse by the railroads for making applications to the Interstate Commerce Commission for the privilege of carrying freight from one coast to another at a less rate than the railroads are willing to carry the same freight to intermediate points. I want to give notice here and now on behalf of all the Senators and Congressmen who represent the great interior regions of the United States affected by the long-and-short haul issue which so frequently comes before the Interstate Commerce Commission, that if another canal is to be constructed through Nicaragua we intend to see to it that the second canal shall not be used as an excuse for further violations of the fourth section of the interstate commerce act which prohibits charging more for a long haul than a short haul in the same direction over the same railroad line.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator indicate just how he is going to see to that?

Mr. HAYDEN. Of course, neither the Senator from Washington nor I may be Members of the Senate 70 years from now when the Nicaragua canal is built.

Mr. DILL. How can it be done? That is the question I meant to ask.

Mr. HAYDEN. It could be quickly done by the passage of the Gooding bill, which is pending before the Senate, and is upon its calendar at this moment, with a favorable report from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, the Senator, of course, is aware of the utter futility of the efforts on the part of anybody in this body or in the other House to bring about the passage of the Gooding bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have not given up hope, I may say to the Senator. The fact that the Senate of the United States once passed that bill by a very large majority, the fact that the same issues are from time to time being raised before the Interstate Commerce Commission, to the great embarrassment of the intermediate regions, makes it necessary, in my judgment, that Congress shall fully and finally determine whether a railroad company shall be allowed to charge more for a long haul than for a short haul over the same line and in the same direction.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me the liberty of saying that I think he must be endowed with a highly sanguine temperament to think the Gooding bill will ever be passed by the Congress.

Mr. HAYDEN. In any event I have been an advocate for many years of a rigid long-and-short-haul section as a part of the act to regulate commerce. The practice of charging more for a short than for a long haul results in wasteful transportation, especially where the competition which is met by such a rate is between railroads, for if commodities are hauled over the long line when they could just as well move over the short line it can mean nothing else than wasteful transportation and the lowering of the revenue of any particular group in which the various railroads may be located. The railroads should not be permitted to violate the fourth section to meet water competition or any other form of competition.

If we have another transportation system which can transport property more cheaply than the railroads it ought to be used and fostered for that purpose. The only purpose a railroad can possibly have in reducing rates to meet water competition is to take business from the water line, and if it is allowed to charge more to intermediate points than to the competitive point it simply means that they are making up out of the intermediate points their losses incurred in meeting the competition to put the boats out of existence.

The fourth section of the transportation act should be amended so as to prevent the railroads from making discriminatory rates to interior points in order that they may drive the Panama Canal and river boats out of business and thus secure a monopoly of the transportation business of the United States.

The policy of the railroads in the past has been to make exceedingly low rates to water points, with the result that there is no private capital invested to-day in water transportation on our inland waterways. While making these low rates to water points and thus driving the boats out of business, the railroads recouped their losses by charging unreasonably high and discriminatory rates to interior points, thus throttling the development of the interior.

To-day the transcontinental railroads are attempting to apply this same principle to the Panama Canal traffic. They are asking to impose upon the people of the interior West a burdensome and discriminatory freight rate in order that they may make a rate so low to the Pacific coast points as to drive the Panama Canal boat service out of business.

The Panama Canal was built by the people of the United States to serve the entire country, and the steamship service through it should not be destroyed by any decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission granting relief to the railroads from the provisions of the fourth section of the transportation act.

Mr. President, I desire to read to the Senate brief extracts from the testimony given by Mr. Mark W. Potter as receiver of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, at a hearing in New York City in July, 1926, before Commissioner Cox, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in which he discussed this issue. Mr. Potter then said:

> I haven't any doubt but that the effect of the Panama Canal has been to develop the coast as a whole, promote the prosperity of the coast, and I think by and large the railroads have been compensated through benefits from the canal which quite take care of any debits.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> But considering it by and large, I do not believe the Panama Canal is a detriment at all.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> I do not hesitate to say that if I had been the sole receiver of the St. Paul property I should have withdrawn application for fourth-section relief.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> I think that there is no necessity for fourth-section departure. I think they can get a fair rate to intermountain territory that will give them all the business, and give them a fair look into the coast business on that rate. I don't think there should be fourth-section departures except where they are necessary, and I do not believe this is one of those cases.

I have here, Mr. President, a table showing the total tonnage transported through the Panama Canal each year since its construction. I direct the particular attention of the Senate to the figures for 1920 to 1928. In 1920 the tons of cargo carried were 11,236,119, and there has been an increase every year, except in 1925, until the total in 1928 was 29,401,581 tons. That tonnage, I believe, is equivalent to about 2 per cent of the total tonnage carried by the transcontinental railroads. I ask to have that table inserted in the RECORD and also additional tables showing the intercoastal tonnage passing through the Panama Canal and the character of the commodities carried by ships from coast to coast.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibits A, B, and C.)

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I presume the figures to which the Senator has just referred represent the total tonnage that has passed through the canal as of the dates which he has given. May I ask him does he know what per cent of that was tonnage coming through the Panama Canal destined to Atlantic ports of the United States?

Mr. HAYDEN. One of the tables shows that the Atlantic to Pacific traffic is much less than that from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic seaboard.

The other tables show the character of the tonnage, whether manufactured goods, general cargo, sulphur, tobacco, oil, and so on. I am sure that the Senator from South Carolina will find the tables to be very interesting.

Mr. SMITH. I was interested because I have seen the development of an industry due to cargoes brought to the eastern seaboard from Washington and Oregon. Those cargoes are discharged at Atlantic ports and carried far into the interior by the railroads. I am sure they would never have come to the Atlantic ports as they did if it had been necessary for them to be carried by our railroad systems.

Mr. HAYDEN. Does the Senator from South Carolina refer to lumber?

Mr. SMITH. It may be called lumber, but I have in my mind all kinds of wood, even logs. I was informed to-day that vessels bring to certain Gulf ports, for instance, logs which are then shipped to the interior, cut into lumber, and distributed over the East and Southeast. This character of cargo would not have been brought to the eastern section at all if transportation had been restricted to the railroads, no matter what freight rates, within reason, might have been charged, because a good deal of this freight, I have been informed, comes to South Atlantic ports almost in the form of ballest. The railroads subsequently derive revenue from it after the cargo is discharged at the southern ports when they carry it to the interior.

Mr. HAYDEN. A comparison of the figures that I have placed before the Senate with the total tonnage carried by the transcontinental railroads would show how insignificant is the quantity of freight passing through the Panama Canal compared to the total amount of freight carried from coast to coast by the great transcontinental railroad systems. Therefore the railroads are not justified in using the Panama Canal, and would not be justified in using a new Nicaraguan canal as a reason for asking the right to carry freight at a lower rate to Pacific coast terminals in order to meet water competition.

Although the traffic through the Panama Canal has more than doubled in the past eight years, I have before me a statement of the dividends by the various transcontinental railroad systems which shows that if the Panama Canal traffic is competing with the railroads their stockholders have never known the difference. The Union Pacific Railroad Co., for example, has paid from 1920 to 1927 upon all of its common stock a 10 per cent annual dividend, amounting to $22,229,160, and on its preferred stock a 4 per cent dividend, amounting to $3,891,740. Those payments in the identical sums have been made on the 31st of December of each year for the past eight years.

I shall include in the RECORD further tables showing the dividends paid upon the common and preferred stock of all the remainder of the transcontinental railroad lines. In no instance has there been any reduction of dividends by reason of competition with ships passing through the Panama Canal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the tables will be printed in the RECORD.

(See Exhibit D.)

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator whether all of the transcontinental railroads are earning the full amount which under the transportation act they would be warranted in retaining.

Mr. HAYDEN. They are not. I happened to look that up a few days ago with particular reference to the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. At no time has that railroad system earned the full 5¾ per cent allowed under the transportation act.

Mr. KING. Has the Santa Fe system earned it?

Mr. HAYDEN. I am not so sure with respect to the Santa Fe system. The figures which I have here merely give the dividends paid and not the total net income of the railroads in proportion to the amount of capital invested, which is the basis for earnings as provided in section 15a of the transportation act.

Mr. KING. Do the figures which the Senator is inserting in the RECORD show the freight tonnage which has been carried every year by the transcontinental railroads since the Panama Canal has been constructed?

Mr. HAYDEN. No. It would be very interesting to compare the tonnage of freight carried by the transcontinental railroads and the tonnage of freight which has passed through the Panama Canal, particularly with respect to the various classes of commodities. I have not that information at hand.

Mr. KING. My information is, if the Senator will pardon me, that there has been an increase in the tonnage carried by the railroads during the past 10 or 15 years measured by the amount of tonnage prior to that time.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have no doubt that the Senator from Utah is correct in that statement, and, therefore, although the traffic through Panama Canal has more than doubled during the past eight years, nevertheless the effect upon the railroads has been comparatively slight. Just as Mr. Potter pointed out, the construction of the Panama Canal so stimulated business on the Pacific coast that the reaction was that the railroads were compelled to carry a greater tonnage of freight than ever before.

Mr. President, the railroads desire to make low rates to terminals which have water communication. They have to do so, they claim, in order to compete with shipping and get their share of business. In some cases they have made rates so low that they get most of the traffic, thus nullifying the expenditure of millions of the taxpayers' money in the improvement of waterways. So as to recoup for the low rates charged for long hauls, the railroads charge higher rates for hauls to interior points that have no alternative means of communication. Thus the freight rate from Chicago to San Francisco is in many cases lower than the rate from Chicago to Denver, only half the distance.

Manifestly such discrimination is unfair to inland communities. It has done much to hold back the development of the Rocky Mountain section and many parts of the South. These regions are great producers of raw materials; certain parts of them have easy access to coal, while others are near potential water powers; but industry remains stagnant because of high freight rates. The chief trade is in raw materials, which are the only excuse for the existence of any population in these sections. The manufacturing districts of the country are increasing marvelously in population and wealth. Other sections are comparatively at a standstill, largely because of freight-rate discrimination.

Meanwhile the railroads supplying these regions cry out that they are poor, and blame the Panama Canal for their condition. This seems a queer way of regarding the situation. Would they be poor if they assisted in the building of the States they traverse? If their rights of way were dotted with factories supplying them with freight and taking from them raw materials, would they be poor? If industry were attracted to them by cheap factory sites, abundant and inexpensive electric power, healthful living conditions, opportunities for employees to own their own homes and gardens, would not the earnings of the railways serving these communities improve? But such development is made impossible by high and discriminatory freight rates.

My father once called on the late Collis P. Huntington, who was then the president of the Southern Pacific Railroad Co., to urge better freight rates to aid in the development of the then Territory of Arizona. Mr. Huntington told him that so far as the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. was concerned, Arizona was merely a stretch of unproductive country which kept the world together; it was a distance that had to be traversed in order to carry the products of the Pacific coast to the East, and vice versa; but that his railroad expected to gain no business or profits from that area, and was not interested in its development.

I am glad to say that the attitude of the transcontinental railroads has changed somewhat of recent years. The gradual increase in population and wealth in the intermountain country, an advancement which has occurred in spite of serious handicaps, has at last made some of the leading officials of these great railway lines realize that there is business which can be developed there that is worth while. That is the point I want to emphasize in concluding my remarks upon this joint resolution.

The transcontinental railroad companies should not continually appear before the Interstate Commerce Commission seeking the privilege of making a low rate through to the Pacific coast, lower than they are willing to stop off freight in the intermediate regions, and allege the Panama Canal as an excuse for so doing. Anyone engaged in business in the intermountain country at the present time has no assurance that any day some transcontinental railroad company which carries his freight may not file an application before the Interstate Commerce Commission to be permitted to change a rate situation which will utterly ruin his business. This sword of Damocles perennially hangs over his head. We want to make business conditions certain. We ask for the enactment by Congress of legislation that will absolutely prohibit any railroad company from using the Panama Canal, in particular, as an excuse for granting a lower through rate than to the intermediate territory. If that is done, business will prosper along the entire lines of these railroads, and in the end they will gain more business and make more profit than would be possible if they follow the foolish and the unwise course, as we believe, of asking the privilege of carrying commodities through to the Pacific coast at cost or less than cost, and then seek to recoup themselves by overcharging those who live in the areas between.

EXHIBIT A

Commercial traffic through Panama Canal, years 1914–1928

Calendar year	Number of commercial ships	Tolls	Tons of cargo
1914 [1]	350	$1,508,737.56	1,758,625
1915 [2]	1,154	4,297,467.11	4,893,422
1916 [2]	1,217	3,671,162.68	4,774,822
1917	1,960	6,107,696.63	7,443,610
1918	2,070	6,317,455.39	7,284,159
1919	2,130	6,973,095.30	7,463,151
1920	2,814	10,295,362.21	11,236,119
1921	2,783	11,261,098.80	10,707,005
1922	2,997	12,573,407.77	13,710,556
1923	5,037	22,966,838.18	25,160,545
1924	4,893	22,809,416.34	25,892,134
1925	4,774	21,380,759.70	23,701,277
1926	5,420	23,901,540.04	27,586,051
1927	6,085	26,231,022.94	29,102,538
1928	6,334	26,375,962.41	29,401,581
Total	50,018	206,671,023.06	230,115,595

[1] Canal opened to traffic Aug. 15, 1914.
[2] Canal opened to traffic for approximately 8½ months only.

EXHIBIT B

Intercoastal tonnage passing through Panama Canal, by direction of movement, years 1920–1928

Year	Atlantic to Pacific (tons of 2,240 pounds)	Pacific to Atlantic (tons of 2,240 pounds)	Total (tons of 2,240 pounds)
1920	416,819	644,833	1,061,652
1921	893,396	1,050,722	1,944,118
1922	1,916,887	2,013,787	3,930,674
1923	2,926,094	9,968,751	12,894,845
1924	2,680,376	9,626,549	12,306,925
1925	2,821,006	7,688,926	10,509,932
1926	2,656,107	8,266,500	10,922,607
1927	2,725,481	8,182,983	10,908,464
1928	2,915,213	6,848,098	9,763,311

EXHIBIT C

Coast-to-coast movement of principal commodities via Panama Canal, calendar years 1926, 1927, and 1928

Commodity	1926, tons	1927, tons	1928, tons	Increase or decrease 1928 over 1927
ATLANTIC TO PACIFIC
Manufactured goods [1]	1,052,510	1,300,825	1,530,538	229,713
General cargo	1,021,711	695,434	613,733	[2] 81,701
Metals	97,943	110,494	13,310	[2] 97,184
Sulphur	87,166	77,178	90,084	12,906
Paper	44,130	62,915	64,327	1,412
Oils	34,888	63,018	72,954	9,936
Canned goods	27,520	46,033	65,701	19,668
Coal	27,264	31,846	37,032	5,186
Tobacco	20,409	17,623	28,697	11,074
All other	242,566	320,115	398,837	78,722
PACIFIC TO ATLANTIC
Oils	4,534,719	4,399,127	2,791,677	[2] 1,607,450
Coconut	42	15	112	97
Cottonseed	50	20		[2] 20
Crude	3,254,858	[3] 2,807,728	[4] 692,457	[2] 2,115,271
Lubricating	81,169	72,689	48,271	[2] 24,418
Refined	1,197,738	1,505,249	1,946,798	441,549
Olive		[5] 2		[2] 2
Vegetable	20	434	533	99
Wood		435	446	11
Other	842	[5] 12,555	[6] 103,060	90,505
Lumber	2,361,533	2,380,620	2,446,760	66,140
General cargo	445,975	236,337	111,699	124,638

[1] Iron and steel, machinery, railroad materials, textiles, tinplate, etc.
[2] Decrease.
[3] Includes 1,151,737 tons of gas and fuel oil.
[4] Includes 313,154 tons of gas and fuel oil.
[5] Includes 11,972 tons of kerosene.
[6] Includes 102,444 tons of kerosene.

Coast-to-coast movement of principal commodities via Panama Canal, calendar years 1926, 1927, and 1928—Continued

Commodity	1926, tons	1927, tons	1928, tons	Increase or decrease 1928 over 1927
PACIFIC TO ATLANTIC—con.
Canned goods	422,361	502,836	593,966	91,130
Fish	125,034	119,292	124,990	5,698
Fruit	220,271	269,859	317,422	47,563
Meat	4,318	2,251	2,598	347
Milk	3,076	11,622	9,722	[1] 1,900
Vegetable	45,247	56,621	63,467	6,846
Other	24,415	43,191	75,767	32,576
Fruit	95,552	119,377	147,892	28,515
Metals	79,518	109,203	116,497	7,294
Antimony	685	168	486	318
Copper	65,232	92,013	101,916	9,903
Iron	278	149	480	331
Lead	8,708	4,912	2,138	[1] 2,774
Scrap	3,679	5,021	4,930	[1] 91
Tin	62	141	1,060	919
Zinc	32	411	4,753	4,342
Other	842	6,388	734	[1] 5,654
Flour	59,988	49,543	79,420	29,877
Beans	49,048	58,808	77,881	19,073
Ores	30,635	25,997	24,339	[1] 1,658
Wool	27,860	36,944	40,635	3,691
Skins and hides	22,451	22,293	26,411	4,118
Paper	16,201	25,660	47,874	22,214
Cotton	14,990	26,509	25,417	[1] 1,092
Sugar	5,683	62,355	88,208	25,853
All other	99,986	127,374	229,422	102,048

[1] Decrease.

EXHIBIT D

Dividends declared, years 1920–1927

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY CO.

Year ended—	Common stock		Preferred stock
	Amount	Rate	Amount	Rate
		Per cent		Per cent
Dec. 31, 1920			$17,462,916	7
Dec. 31, 1921			17,462,974	7
Dec. 31, 1922			13,097,264	5¼
Dec. 31, 1923			12,473,605	5
Dec. 31, 1924			12,473,618	5
Dec. 31, 1925			12,369,145	5
Dec. 31, 1926			12,445,855	5
Dec. 31, 1927			12,447,355	5

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE & ST. PAUL RAILWAY CO.

Dec. 31, 1920
Dec. 31, 1921
Dec. 31, 1922
Dec. 31, 1923
Dec. 31, 1924
Dec. 31, 1925
Dec. 31, 1926
Dec. 31, 1927

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILWAY CO.

Dec. 31, 1920	$17,360,000	7
Dec. 31, 1921	17,360,000	7
Dec. 31, 1922	12,400,000	5
Dec. 31, 1923	12,400,000	5
Dec. 31, 1924	12,400,000	5
Dec. 31, 1925	12,400,000	5
Dec. 31, 1926	12,400,000	5
Dec. 31, 1927	12,400,000	5

SOUTHERN PACIFIC CO.

Dec. 31, 1920	$18,209,281	6
Dec. 31, 1921	20,639,196	6
Dec. 31, 1922	20,662,854	6
Dec. 31, 1923	20,662,854	6
Dec. 31, 1924	20,942,854	6
Dec. 31, 1925	22,342,854	6
Dec. 31, 1926	22,342,854	6
Dec. 31, 1927	22,342,854	6

ATCHISON, TOPEKA & SANTA FE RAILWAY CO.

Dec. 31, 1920	$13,441,110	6	$6,208,685	5
Dec. 31, 1921	13,518,420	6	6,208,685	5
Dec. 31, 1922	13,605,660	6	6,208,685	5
Dec. 31, 1923	13,909,245	6	6,208,685	5
Dec. 31, 1924	14,525,594	6¼	6,208,640	5
Dec. 31, 1925	16,268,665	7	6,208,640	5
Dec. 31, 1926	18,011,736	7¾	6,208,640	5
Dec. 31, 1927	23,240,950	10	6,208,640	5

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. I will yield to the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] if he desires. He advised me that he wished to address the Senate at this time. I do not want to take the floor from him.

Mr. DILL. Does the Senator care to make any remarks?

Mr. EDGE. I will propose a unanimous-consent agreement, understanding that this is what the Senator from Washington will agree to, and having discussed it with some other Senators—that when the Senate concludes its business this afternoon it adjourn until Monday at 12 o'clock, and that at 3 o'clock——

Mr. DILL. Had not the Senator better wait until the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] comes in?

Mr. EDGE. I will present the unanimous-consent request in this form, because, while I did not ask the Senator from Utah about it at this time, some time back I asked him if he was satisfied to have a limitation of debate go into effect a day ahead, and he said he was; so I assume he will take the same position now.

I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet Monday at 12 o'clock, and that beginning at 3 o'clock on Monday addresses on the joint resolution or amendments thereto shall be limited to 10 minutes.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, should not a quorum be called?

Mr. EDGE. Not on a limitation of debate; only on setting a time for a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). The present occupant of the chair desires to announce that if no one else does he will suggest the absence of a quorum, because in the past controversies have arisen because quorums have not been called for when limitations on debate have been made.

Mr. McMASTER. I think the Senator had better call for a quorum.

Mr. EDGE. I will withhold the request for the moment if the Senator from Washington is prepared to take the floor.

Mr. DILL. I am prepared to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, in the light of the reversal to-day of the vote last night on keeping the marines in Nicaragua, I suppose it is more desirable to pass this joint resolution to-day than it was yesterday; for, now that we are to permit the marines to stay in Nicaragua, there should be something to have them down there for; and if we place a lot of engineers down there, working on a right of way, we will have an excuse to keep the marines there for many years to come.

I thought possibly there was a chance to get the marines out of Nicaragua, and that we might treat Nicaragua as one nation should treat another, but the claim was made through the press and by officials of the Government that the amendment withdrawing the marines from Nicaragua was in effect torpedoing the Navy bill, and we were told that if the amendment remained in the bill it would be knocked out in conference; that the House would never agree to it; or, if they ever did agree to it, that the President would veto the bill.

I have wondered what there is about keeping the marines in Nicaragua that is so sacred to this administration. I do not know whether there is some peculiar purpose back of it or whether it is just a habit that this Government has gotten into by reason of having kept the marines down there for so many years. The truth of the matter is that the history of our record in Nicaragua is one that in my judgment is not only inconsistent but is untenable, and in no connection have we been so unreasonable, in no connection is our record so indefensible, as it is in connection with securing the rights for a Nicaraguan canal toward which the pending joint resolution is directed.

I desire to call attention first to the way we have treated Nicaragua. I think our record in that country for the past 20 years is the most disgraceful of any record we have made in connection with any part of the world.

As I said yesterday, in 1907 President Roosevelt induced the Central American governments to enter into a treaty by which they agreed with one another that no one of them would interfere in the internal affairs of another when a revolution was going on. Within two or three years of that time this Government did interfere in a way that we had bound Central American countries not to interfere, by taking the side of one of the revolutionary parties in Nicaragua. We indorsed the side of the revolution. By the help of the United States marines a conservative government was set up in place of the liberal government, and our marines were never withdrawn from then until January 1, 1925. Not only that, but the United States Government recognized the Estrada government in 1911, although it was a revolutionary government and the people had not yet voted to support it.

I have here a description by Walter Liggett of how we secured the treaty with Nicaragua upon which the Senator from New Jersey bases his joint resolution, known as the Bryan-Chamorro treaty. I want to read a part of this:

> The Bryan-Chamorro treaty, whereby the United States paid Nicaragua $3,000,000 for the exclusive right to construct a transisthmus canal and also for the privilege of establishing a naval base in the Gulf of Fonseca, was negotiated by Diaz in 1913.
>
> Before the Bryan-Chamorro treaty was ratified, Costa Rica, Salvador, and Honduras protested vigorously to the United States against its provisions. Salvador and Honduras both had as much claim to the Gulf of Fonseca as Nicaragua; and the northern boundary of Costa Rica borders the San Juan River, to which Nicaragua signed away exclusive canal rights. A prior treaty between Costa Rica and Nicaragua also forbade Nicaragua to make any canal rights without first consulting Costa Rica.

That leads me to remind the Senate of how Diaz came to be able to negotiate this treaty. I tried to get the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] this afternoon to discuss that phase of the subject. He pretended not to know anything about it. He said that it was not important; that it made no difference how we got these rights; that we have them now. He reminded me of the Irish politician I heard in a play some years ago. When discussing with another politician the subject of money he said: "I have noticed in this world that if you have money, people never ask you how you got it, but 'Have you got it?'" So the philosophy of the Senator from New Jersey here to-day regarding our rights in Nicaragua, he says, is, "It makes no difference how we got them; the point is, we have them."

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRATTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. DILL. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. I can not permit that statement to go unchallenged—at least, in the way in which the Senator has presented it.

Mr. DILL. Will the Senator state his position, then?

Mr. EDGE. In answer to the Senator's question, I said very frankly that I was not familiar with the transaction beyond what history records. I was not in public life at the time; and now the Senator uses rather offensive language in saying that "the Senator from New Jersey pretends not to know." I do not know; and, if that is not sufficient for the Senator, I certainly have no further explanation to make.

Beyond that, I still insist that so far as my duty is concerned as chairman of the Interoceanic Canals Committee in asking for this survey, it is not a part of that duty for me to try, in some unknown way or method, to ascertain what may have surrounded this transaction at the time it was entered into by the Secretary of State, William Jennings Bryan, and the President of the United States, Woodrow Wilson, who were in charge of our foreign affairs at that time. I would not consider it at all a part of the responsibility of the chairman of the Interoceanic Canals Committee in asking for a survey.

Mr. DILL. The Senator begs the question. The Senator is chairman of this committee, and he came here as the sponsor of this joint resolution, and he objects to my saying that he pretended not to know about this matter, and says that he is ignorant. I think it is worse to be ignorant in a case like this than it would be to pretend ignorance. It seems to me it is the Senator's business, as chairman of the committee, to know the facts about the matter.

I am not blaming the President who came into office in 1913, and the new Secretary of State who came on the scene at that time. This revolution had been fomented largely at the instigation of American capitalists down there; and it is a matter of common knowledge to-day that a clerk of the United States Steel Corporation was in reality placed in charge of the Government of Nicaragua, and that the Government that existed in Nicaragua when this treaty was made was a government of our own choosing and not of the choosing of the people of Nicaragua; and, that being the fact, we paid $3,000,000, and about 30 per cent of it went to Nicaragua, and the rest of it went to pay American claimants.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, it required two parties to conclude that transaction—one, the President of Nicaragua and his representative, Chamorro; the other, the President of the United States and his representative, the Secretary of State. Does the Senator mean to imply that one party to this contract was either dumb as to the transaction or was knowingly a party to it at the same time that he attempts to insinuate that the Senator from New Jersey 14 years afterwards should know something that I am quite sure the Secretary of State and the President of the United States—I will defend them—did not know when they took part in the transaction?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, if the Senator had read a statement of the facts at all as they are recorded in history, he would know that what I have stated is true. He would know that Chamorro was a president not by the will of the people but by the influence of the American forces that were in Nicaragua.

I want to call attention to the kind of a government it was, who the officials of it were when this treaty was made, and how completely it was under the domination of this one man and his friends.

The President of Nicaragua was Diego Chamorro. The minister of the interior was Rosendo Chamorro. The president of the congress was Salvador Chamorro. The director of internal revenue was Dionisio Chamorro. The councilor of the treasury was Augustin Chamorro. The chief of the northern army was Carlos Chamorro. The chief of the Managua Fortress was Frutus Chamorro. The chief of police at Managua was Fidelfo Chamorro. The chief of police at Corinto was Leandro Chamorro. The minister at Washington was Emiliano Chamorro. The consul at San Francisco was Fernando Chamorro. The consul at New Orleans was Augustin Bolanas Chamorro.

The brothers-in-law, the cousins, and nephews of the Chamorro clan who held office in addition to those are too numerous to mention. That is the kind of a government that was set up in Nicaragua, with whom we made the treaty upon which the Senator comes here and talks about our rights in Nicaragua. I think the $3,000,000 ought to be written off, as the $25,000,000 we paid to Colombia was written off. I think we have no legal rights in Nicaragua.

I do not need to make a speech here about the lack of necessity for this resolution. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], venerable Senator that he is, was here in the days when the Panama Canal was built and gave reasons more clear than any I could give. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] has quoted here from officials who were before the Committee on Appropriations, showing an average of 19 ships a day going through the Panama Canal, with present facilities for 54, and if we put in an additional lock we will not have to have an additional canal, and the facilities, with an additional lock, would not be exhausted for 70 years.

What is the purpose and what is the reason for wanting to get a lot of engineers down into Nicaragua? If we are going to build another canal in Nicaragua that is going to be better than the Panama Canal, it must be a sea-level canal and will cost at least a billion dollars and perhaps a billion and a half.

It is estimated that to enlarge the Panama Canal will probably cost $100,000,000, and that is a legitimate and natural expansion, when it shall be needed, but the Senator from New Jersey rushed in here with his resolution last December; and I want to call attention to the history of this resolution. It is a very interesting history. The resolution was introduced on the 20th of March and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. April 9, 1928, it was reported by the committee with amendments. On May 28 it was ordered printed, showing the amendments agreed to. December 10, 1928, certain amendments offered by Senator MCKELLAR were placed in it. Then, on January 7, it was ordered reprinted. It has been thrashing around that committee for some reason or other, and when we come to read it we have to go through two or three sets of resolutions to find out what is actually proposed. They keep changing the resolution from time to time to meet the changing needs of those who are back of this proposal.

The truth of the matter is that the real purpose back of all this is to give an excuse for keeping the marines in Nicaragua. There is no need for it: the arguments of the Senator from New Jersey have fallen flat here in the face of the facts that are produced by those who claim to be the friends of the resolution, namely, that it will be 30 or 40 years before we even need to enlarge the Panama Canal, and 70 years before the canal's facilities will be completely utilized, when a third lock shall have been put in.

I hold in my hand an editorial appearing in the New Republic, the publication of January 23, 1929, and I want to read from it:

> Despite the return of the American electoral mission from Nicaragua and the withdrawal of some of our marines, the future of this so-called Republic remains uncertain. Is the American Government openly to assume some permanent responsibility in this country, such as Doctor Cumberland recommended in his recent report? Is it to adopt a hands-off policy and allow the Nicaraguans to work out their own destiny?

Or will it, while professing to regard Nicaragua as an independent State, find some indirect and surreptitious means for perpetuating its control? Such are the choices confronting President-elect Hoover.

Unfortunately, signs point in favor of the last-named course. We make this statement because of the renewed zeal displayed in official and other quarters in behalf of the construction by the United States of the Nicaraguan canal. Such an enterprise will mean the occupation of the heart of the Republic by the United States and will make Nicaragua an American protectorate for all time. At the time of President-elect Hoover's recent visit to Corinto, the press published enthusiastic accounts of the Nicaraguan engineering project—a project which is being advocated by the New York Herald-Tribune and by President Moncada, whose sympathies with the State Department are well known. Senator EDGE a few days ago revived his bill authorizing a survey of the route.

Proponents advocate the construction of this canal upon economic and strategic grounds. They declare that the Panama Canal will soon be utilized to capacity.

Just as the Senator from New Jersey has been claiming here, in the face of the evidence given before the Committee on Appropriations by men who know what they are talking about, who are not giving hearsay reports. The same kind of arguments are being used by the Senator from New Jersey here. These same people who are wanting to start some work down in Nicaragua argue that the Panama Canal will soon be utilized to capacity and that another canal is therefore necessary for expanding commercial needs. They argue that should the Panama Canal be taken by a future enemy our naval communications between the East and West would be cut, with disastrous consequences.

The only reason why the Panama Canal is so vulnerable is the fact that it is a lock canal. If we should build another lock canal, we would have two lock canals to defend, instead of one. The only kind of a canal that would be of any more real value, so far as military defense is concerned, would be a sea-level canal. When the question was up the other day, the Senator from New Jersey did not dare stand here and attempt to defend building a sea-level canal at this time, and he will not do so now.

What are these arguments worth? In the first place, there is no present economic need for another canal.

The evidence shows there will be no need for it for 30 years to come, and if we put another lock in the Panama Canal, it will be 70 years. Yet there is legislation here proposing to reapportion the Congress, legislation to carry out the Constitution regarding the census, and all of this legislation must wait while the Senator from New Jersey presses for a survey of the Nicaraguan canal route.

Weeks ago I offered to let the resolution go through, as far as I was concerned, if the Senator would confine it to a study of the situation in Panama. I am perfectly willing to spend whatever money is necessary to ascertain the facts as to Panama. I object, under the color of trying to get information, to finding a new reason for keeping American boys down in Nicaragua, who are being killed under the guise of being needed there.

A year ago we wanted to take them out, and they said then we had an agreement to hold an election. That election has been held. Now we keep them there because they say that the rulers of Nicaragua want to keep them there. Are we to become the policemen of the world? Is every country that may want soldiers of some kind to be at liberty to call upon this country to furnish soldiers at its need? No; and as the time approaches when there is no longer a defense, much less a reason, for keeping those marines there, they come along with a resolution to investigate and survey the Nicaraguan canal route. Then we must have our engineers there, and we must have our marines there to protect our engineers. Then those of us who would stand up here and propose that the marines come out of Nicaragua would be held up as unwilling to protect the lives of men down there trying to get a treaty for a new canal. Thus the marines are to be used in the future, as in the past, not to protect American life and property that would legitimately be there, but to enable those who have made loans in that country to collect those loans out of the revenues of the Nicaraguan Government, and to exploit the territory there.

I believe that that is the principal result that will come out of this, because the American people can not for many, many years to come be led to sanction the expenditure of the millions and hundreds of millions of dollars it will take to build a new canal in Nicaragua when the need is no greater than it is now, with an average of 19 ships a day going through the Panama Canal, with a capacity of 54 without spending an extra dollar.

Yet we are told we must rush this resolution through in these closing days of the session, that all other business must be held up, and all other business must stand aside in order that the resolution to survey the canal district may be passed.

I want to read further from this editorial:

What are these arguments worth? In the first place, there is no present economic need for another canal. The Panama authorities estimate that the existing canal will not reach its capacity until 1960.

This agrees absolutely with the testimony read here by the friends of the resolution, as against the statement of the Senator from New Jersey, who is trying to enthuse us into passing it on the theory that we may need it in 15 or 20 years.

Last April Secretary of War Davis declared that the traffic through the canal could be quadrupled by building additional locks and by opening the canal to traffic after 6 o'clock in the evening. The cost of building a third set of locks at Panama would be $100,000,000, in comparison with a cost of constructing the Nicaraguan canal of a billion dollars. From the economic standpoint the advocates of the Nicaraguan route have failed to make a case.

The strategic argument stands on no better ground. It is all very well for the military men who draw up plans of strategy and chart out war games to discuss the possibility that the Panama Canal will be captured by "the enemy" and to demand the annexation of territory in order to ward off such an eventuality. But to those who are aware of the realities of international life, such possibilities and such policies can only be fantastic. The strategic argument could be used to justify the construction of naval bases in Haiti and Santo Domingo and the annexation of all foreign territory in the Caribbean which now is a potential "menace" to our "security." It was Lord Salisbury who once said that if the military men had their way they would annex Mars in order to protect their communications! Once we succumb to the strategic complex we will be tempted to annex half the earth. As far as the Panama Canal is concerned, many strategists already feel that this canal is impregnable. Obviously the construction of a new canal would simply increase our problem of defense and give our militarists another argument for increasing the Navy. It is certainly less difficult and less costly to defend one canal than two.

I overlooked a moment ago calling attention to what was said about this treaty with the Nicaraguan Government when it was made, and I want to quote an authority that even the Senator from New Jersey, I think, would not dispute, Mr. Elihu Root. I read from the issue of Current History of November, 1928. He said:

In the first place, in entering into that treaty the United States Government, instead of practicing its teachings by indorsing and upholding constitutional procedure, encouraged Nicaragua to violate a provision of its own constitution, which prohibits the negotiation of treaties which in any way impair the territorial integrity or the national sovereignty of the country.

That is a fact; this treaty was made in violation of the Nicaraguan constitution, and was made because it was made by officials who were under the dominance of the American leaders themselves down there.

In the second place, the treaty was negotiated with a puppet government. On that point Elihu Root expressed the opinion, based on official records, that the Nicaraguan Government at that time did not represent "more than a quarter of the people of the country," and was maintained in power by virtue of the force applied by the United States.

In the third place, the United States Government entered into the treaty with the full knowledge that a provision of the Cañas-Jéréz treaty of 1858 between Costa Rica and Nicaragua, inhibited the latter country from signing any such treaty as the Bryan-Chamorro treaty. A decision to that effect had been handed down in 1888 by President Cleveland, in arbitrating a dispute concerning the Cañas-Jéréz treaty. In that decision President Cleveland said that—

"Nicaragua remains bound not to make any grants for canal purposes across her territory without first asking the opinion of Costa Rica."

Furthermore, in case construction of a canal by Nicaragua should involve injury to the natural rights of Cost Rica, as, for example, in the San Juan River, which is a part of the internatinoal boundary between the two countries, President Cleveland held that in such cases Costa Rica's consent was "necessary." The United States Government knew from the outset that Nicaragua never attempted to secure the consent of Costa Rica nor even consulted her before signing the Bryan-Chamorro treaty.

Finally, and in the fourth place, in signing the Bryan-Chamorro treaty, the United States Government ignored the diplomatic protests of Costa Rica and Salvador to the effect that Nicaragua was incompetent to sign the treaty because of the violation of their rights. Subsequently these protests were upheld in formal decisions of the court, but they were ignored by Nicaragua, who was sustained by the United States in flouting the formal decision of the court. Such action resulted in the dissolution of the court, which under the guiding influence of Elihu Root had been established in 1908 to settle all disputes that might arise between the Central American States.

Thus we not only had no right to make the treaty, and our treaty rights are based upon the concession of a government that did not represent the people, but by insisting upon it we destroyed the very court we had helped to establish.

In his message to Congress of January 10, 1927, President Coolidge said that one of the three reasons for our recent intervention in Nicaragua was to protect the rights of the United States acquired by the Bryan-Chamorro treaty.

That reason still exists, but it is getting pretty weak, and the Senator from New Jersey now comes here with a joint resolution to bolster up the reason by having a group of American engineers establish stations down there and negotiate with the people who own those lands that will be necessary to buy in order to establish this route.

The article goes on to say:

Instead of defending it by armed force, would it not be appropriate for the United States to abrogate the treaty—charging the $3,000,000 invested in it to the same fund as the $25,000,000 paid to Colombia a few years ago—and then negotiate a new treaty by legal methods that would offend neither the majority of Nicaragua's citizens nor its neighbors? Nothing short of such action will ever fully atone for the unfortunate moral effect of the Bryan-Chamorro treaty.

I am not going to take any more time to read from this particular publication, but I am going to offer an amendment at this time providing for the striking out of sections 1 and 2 in order that the joint resolution may be made to provide simply for a study of the Panama Canal route. I think before we have a vote on the amendment I should like to have a quorum.

Mr. EDGE. Will the Senator defer asking for a quorum until I submit another unanimous-consent request for a time to vote?

Mr. DILL. There ought to be no agreement to limit debate without a quorum being present.

Mr. EDGE. As the Senator well knows, the rule does not require a quorum when the time to vote is not fixed.

Mr. DILL. I think it is a very bad interpretation of the rule, because, in effect, it is closing debate, and I have never, when I have been present, permitted any such agreement to be made without having a quorum called.

Mr. EDGE. It has been done many times. The request is usually made for an agreement with those who show sufficient interest in the measure to remain in the Chamber. I have discussed it with the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], and he said he was willing to agree to limit debate after 4 o'clock on Monday. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] said the same thing. I have discussed it with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MCMASTER]. Those three Senators have been particularly interested in the joint resolution.

Mr. DILL. There is this to be said about it. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] announced that he was going to take up the Vare case on Monday. That is a privileged matter and it might result in no one getting to say anything more on the pending joint resolution before the limitation on debate would apply.

There is another phase of the subject I shall want to discuss for possibly an hour or perhaps not longer than half an hour. I do not want to be placed in a position where I can not present the other argument, not that it is going to affect a vote, but I want to put my views on record.

Mr. EDGE. Would the Senator be willing to permit unanimous consent putting the matter over until Tuesday so we can finally dispose of it then? The Senator knows perfectly well that next week the second deficiency bill will be before us and other matters will be pressing, and I do not feel that I have any right in fairness to the Senate, to ask for a vote later than 2 o'clock on Tuesday. I really think it should be not later than 4 or 5 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. DILL. If the Senator from Missouri does not take very much time on Monday, the Senator from New Jersey will get a vote on Monday afternoon, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. EDGE. Then the Senator is not willing to enter into any unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. DILL. I do not think there should be a unanimous-consent agreement made with the condition now existing. The Senator knows that the matter which the Senator from Missouri is going to bring up is a privileged matter and takes precedence over everything else.

Mr. EDGE. If I fix the hour at 5 o'clock on Monday, will that suit the Senator? Surely, the Senator will not object to that?

Mr. DILL. If the Senator will make some sort of an agreement whereby there shall be an hour or two of time to discuss the joint resolution before the vote is taken, that is another question, but to agree to such a proposition as he has submitted, with the Vare matter coming up on Monday as a privileged matter, might preclude any discussion on the joint resolution at all.

Mr. EDGE. Of course, the Senator from New Jersey can not assure the Senator from Washington as to what other Senators who may obtain the floor may or may not discuss.

Mr. DILL. So far as I know there is no one else who desires to talk unless it is the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MCMASTER].

Mr. EDGE. I think I can meet the Senator's objection by adopting the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] just made to me sotto voce, that we enter into an agreement for a 10-minute limit, beginning at 5 o'clock, with the understanding that the Senator from Washington shall have one hour before that time for the discussion he desires to present.

Mr. DILL. Oh, that is not the way to make a unanimous-consent request. There may be other Senators who want to discuss the question. I do not think I can agree to that.

Mr. EDGE. But the other Senators will speak for themselves.

Mr. DILL. Why does not the Senator want a quorum before submitting his request for a certain time to vote? Then if nobody else objects he may be assured that I shall not object.

Mr. EDGE. I am afraid we may have difficulty in getting a quorum to-night.

Mr. DILL. I do not think an agreement ought to be entered into without a quorum being present. I have always believed so.

Mr. EDGE. Then my own desire is to continue to-night.

Mr. DILL. I am perfectly willing, but I want a quorum here when a vote is had on my amendment.

Mr. EDGE. If a quorum responds, will the Senator agree to the proposition that he himself has made and which I have remade, providing that he shall have an hour and that the limitation on debate shall begin at 5 o'clock Monday afternoon?

Mr. DILL. I will work out an agreement with the Senator if I can. I do not want an agreement in the form the Senator proposes.

Mr. EDGE. There is no use calling a quorum unless I have some understanding with the Senator.

Mr. DILL. I am perfectly willing, if there is a quorum present, to go on to-night, though I really think we ought to adjourn now.

Mr. EDGE. Very well. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bingham	Glass	Mayfield	Shortridge
Black	Glenn	Moses	Simmons
Borah	Goff	Norbeck	Smith
Bratton	Gould	Norris	Smoot
Bruce	Hale	Oddie	Steck
Burton	Harris	Overman	Steiwer
Capper	Harrison	Phipps	Thomas, Idaho
Caraway	Hastings	Pine	Trammell
Couzens	Hawes	Pittman	Tydings
Curtis	Heflin	Ransdell	Tyson
Dale	Jones	Reed, Pa.	Vandenberg
Dill	Kendrick	Robinson, Ark.	Warren
Edge	King	Robinson, Ind.	Waterman
Fess	McKellar	Sackett	Watson
Frazier	McMaster	Schall
Gerry	McNary	Sheppard

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DENEEN], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] are detained on official business in the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I desire to submit another proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Why not vote now?

Mr. EDGE. I would be delighted to vote right now, but I understand there are one or two additional speeches to be made. I have no desire to cut them off, and neither have I any desire to keep the Senate here any later, although I think the joint resolution could readily be passed this afternoon.

I make this proposition after consultation with the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] and others: That at the conclusion of the debate on the Vare election case on Monday, with the understanding that it will be concluded on that day, there shall be two hours given to general debate on the joint resolution, and that at the end of two hours a vote shall be taken thereon.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, as I understood, the Senator was going to propose to limit debate to 10 minutes on the joint resolution and any amendment thereto after two hours' general debate.

Mr. EDGE. That was the first proposition. The proposal I am now making is that we shall vote at the end of two hours' debate and not have the 10-minute continuation. After a call of the roll, of course, we can make such an agreement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is the Senator proposing to limit debate on any matter which may arise touching the seat of the Senator elect from Pennsylvania;

Mr. EDGE. No; quite the contrary. My request is that at the conclusion of the debate on that question immediately following it, there shall be two hours' general debate upon the pending joint resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Provided the debate closes on the Vare election case?

Mr. EDGE. Whenever the debate closes on that question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Suppose the debate on the Vare case does not close at all on Monday?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The proposition is altogether too indefinite.

Mr. EDGE. I recognize its indefiniteness, but it seems rather difficult to provide for it. My understanding of the purpose of the Senator from Missouri is that he is not going to ask for action upon the Vare resolution, but simply desires to make a statement in connection therewith.

Mr. WATSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas, if I may, whether or not there is to be debate on the Vare case? My understanding is that the Senator from Missouri merely desires to make a statement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is a privileged matter.

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And in the event a resolution should be presented in connection with it, it would supersede any ordinary business of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I just came into the Chamber, and do not know what the pending request is. I will not, however, agree to any unanimous-consent agreement that will limit consideration of the report on the Vare case of any action that may be taken on it at this time.

Mr. EDGE. I had no intention of limiting debate on that subject.

Mr. NORRIS. The report as I have read it rather puts it up to the Senate whether the Senate shall take any action. The committee expresses its opinion. It will be in order when the report comes up for any Member of the body to offer a resolution relative thereto.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And the resolution would be privileged.

Mr. NORRIS. And the resolution would be privileged. I think at this time, at least, I would not consent to any limitation of debate.

Mr. EDGE. I am not proposing a limitation of debate on the Vare case, but I propose that after the disposition of the Vare case two hours be given for debate on the pending joint resolution and that we shall then vote.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will not the Senator from New Jersey frame his request for a unanimous agreement so as to provide that following the discussion on the Vare report general debate upon the joint resolution shall not run longer than three hours, after which time no speeches shall be longer than 10 minutes on the joint resolution or on any amendment thereto?

Mr. EDGE. Of course, if there were any extended debate on the Vare report that would make the session run beyond the hour of 6 o'clock, at which time we have already agreed to recess in order to have an evening session. So I am afraid the Senator's suggestion would be impracticable.

Mr. HARRISON. I think we are going to have a session on Tuesday. I have never heard any suggestion that we are going to take a holiday on that day.

Mr. EDGE. Agreeing to the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi, then, would mean that the general debate upon the joint resolution would run over until Tuesday.

Mr. HARRISON. It would mean that, if many Senators desired to speak.

Mr. EDGE. I think that would be asking a little too much of the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. EDGE. I am not desirous of making a proposal that is unfair to other business.

Mr. DILL. I may say to the Senator from New Jersey that I do not think there will be more than two hours' discussion.

Mr. HEFLIN. Regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], which the clerk will read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out sections 1 and 2, on pages 4 and 5.

Mr. EDGE. I give notice that we will stay here so long as we can hold a quorum in order to try to conclude the consideration of the joint resolution to-night.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. EDGE. Let the amendment be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all of sections 1 and 2 on pages 4 and 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is in the Senate and still open to amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, are we going to run on longer to-night?

Mr. EDGE. We are going to continue in session so long as I can hold a quorum in order to try to complete the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edge	McKellar	Shortridge
Barkley	Fess	McMaster	Simmons
Bayard	Frazier	McNary	Smith
Bingham	Gerry	Moses	Smoot
Black	Glass	Neely	Steck
Blaine	Glenn	Norbeck	Steiwer
Blease	Goff	Norris	Stephens
Borah	Gould	Nye	Swanson
Bratton	Greene	Oddie	Thomas, Idaho
Brookhart	Hale	Overman	Trammell
Broussard	Harris	Phipps	Tydings
Bruce	Harrison	Pine	Tyson
Burton	Hastings	Pittman	Vandenberg
Capper	Hawes	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Hayden	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mont.
Couzens	Heflin	Robinson, Ark.	Warren
Curtis	Johnson	Robinson, Ind.	Waterman
Dale	Jones	Sackett	Watson
Deneen	Kendrick	Schall	Wheeler
Dill	King	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I desire to submit another request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent that upon the conclusion of its business to-day the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock on Monday; that at 2 o'clock p. m. on Monday next, when the unfinished business, being Senate Joint Resolution 117, is laid before the Senate, debate shall be limited to not more than two hours, and that after the hour of 4 o'clock p. m. on that day no Senator may speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes on the joint resolution or on any amendment thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON INTERNAL REVENUE TAXATION

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to ask the senior Senator from Utah a question. The revenue act of 1926 creating the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation provides that the joint committee shall report from time to time. Has the committee reported at any time recently?

Mr. SMOOT. It has reported, but not at the present session of Congress. It reported at the last session of Congress.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it going to submit a report at this session of Congress?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether or not the report of the joint committee is ready.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have been informed that the joint committee has the report ready, but that it has not been submitted to Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will call my attention to the matter on Monday morning I will see the chairman of the joint committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will do so. I thank the Senator.

COMMITTEE ON NARCOTIC TRAFFIC

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a joint resolution creating a joint congressional committee to be known as the committee on narcotic traffic was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. That committee considered the joint resolution, and instructed me to report it to the Senate and ask for its consideration.

The committee were unanimous in recommending the passage of the joint resolution. It deals with an important question. A great evil exists in our country growing out of the narcotic traffic, and it is important that data be obtained in order to determine what additional legislation by Congress is needed to destroy, if possible, this great evil which is affecting the health and, indeed, the morals of our country. It is believed that an investigation, comprehensive in character, made by a proper committee, will furnish sufficient information and adequate data to enable Congress further to legislate upon this matter, and to bring about, so far as possible, a suppression of this terrible evil.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CURTIS. I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I concur in that request.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, what is the request?

Mr. KING. To consider a joint resolution creating a joint congressional committee to be known as the committee on narcotic traffic. It is unanimously reported by the Judiciary Committee.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 209) to create a joint congressional committee to be known as the committee on narcotic traffic, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 3, line 2, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$25,000," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be known as the committee on narcotic traffic, and to be composed of two Senators appointed by the President of the Senate and three members elect of the House of Representatives for the Seventy-first Congress appointed by the present Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The committee is authorized and directed to conduct an investigation and make a study of existing laws, rules, regulations, control, and policing of the traffic in opium, narcotics, and habit-forming drugs; to ascertain the amount of habit-forming drugs and narcotics required for medical and legitimate purposes; the system of distribution of habit-forming drugs; importation, smuggling, and unlawful sale of habit-forming drugs; the source and method of unlawful importation of opium, its derivatives, and habit-forming drugs; and to report to the first session of the Seventy-first Congress, and not later than December 31, 1929, its findings and recommendations for the amendment and revision of existing laws necessary to prevent and curtail the unlawful sale, traffic, and use of habit-forming drugs.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to select a chairman and to hold such hearings while Congress is in session and during any recess or after adjournment of Congress, to sit at such times and places, to employ such clerical, stenographic, and other assistance, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to have such printing and binding done as it deems advisable.

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this resolution the sum of $25,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated. All expenses of the committee shall be paid upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the said committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 5129. An act authorizing Thomas E. Brooks, of Camp Walton, Fla., and his associates and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the mouth of Garniers Bayou, at a point where State Road No. 10, in the State of Florida, crosses the mouth of said Garniers Bayou, between Smack Point on the west and White Point on the east, in Okaloosa County, Fla.;

S. 5465. An act authorizing V. Calvin Trice, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Choptank River at a point at or near Cambridge, Md.;

S. 5630. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Carrollton, Ky.;

H. R. 4084. An act for the relief of the persons suffering loss on account of the Lawton, Okla., fire, 1917;

H. R. 5769. An act to authorize the consolidation and coordination of Government purchase, to enlarge the functions of the General Supply Committee, to authorize the erection of a public warehouse for the storage of Government supplies, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7452. An act for the erection of a tablet or marker to be placed at some suitable point between Hartwell, Ga., and Alfords Bridge, in the county of Hart, State of Georgia, on the national highway between the States of Georgia and South Carolina, to commemorate the memory of Nancy Hart;

H. R. 9168. An act for the relief of Simon A. Richardson;

H. R. 9597. An act for the relief of Fred Elias Horton;

H. R. 9659. An act for the relief of F. R. Barthold;

H. R. 10191. An act for the relief of G. J. Bell;

H. R. 10374. An act authorizing the acquisition of land and water rights for forest-tree nurseries;

H. R. 11285. An act to establish Federal prison camps;

H. R. 11385. An act for the relief of Dr. Andrew J. Baker;

H. R. 13461. An act to provide for the acquisition of land in the District of Columbia for the use of the United States;

H. R. 14153. An act to authorize an additional appropriation of $150,000 for construction of a hospital annex at Marion Branch;

H. R. 14466. An act to provide for the sale of the old post-office property at Birmingham, Ala.;

H. R. 14924. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to grant to the city of Salt Lake, Utah, a portion of the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, Utah, for street purposes;

H. R. 16568. An act to repeal that portion of the act of August 24, 1912, imposing a limit on agency salaries of the Indian Service; and

H. J. Res. 135. Joint resolution for the relief of special disbursing agents of the Alaska Railroad.

THE PROBLEM AND POLICY OF PROHIBITION

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have here an address by Mr. James M. Doran, Commissioner of Prohibition, delivered before the department of economics, sociology, and government at Yale University on February 20, 1929. It is a very careful and conservative address, dealing with the situation respecting the enforcement of the prohibition law. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

THE PROBLEM AND POLICY OF PROHIBITION

ADDRESS BY JAMES M. DORAN, COMMISSIONER OF PROHIBITION, BEFORE THE DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS, SOCIOLOGY, AND GOVERNMENT, YALE UNIVERSITY, FEBRUARY 20, 1929

Now that the shouting and tumult attending our quadrennial national election has died, the political captains and kings have departed from the public platform, and the strange bedfellows of politics have slowly repaired to their usual living quarters and bedchambers, it is well to give some earnest thought to prohibition observance and enforcement, having in mind that we are dealing with a paramount governmental question affecting all of us.

The duty of observance of the law needs no comment; it is upon us all. Education and enlightenment are essential to the building up of a spirit of law observance. It is gratifying to see that many organizations primarily interested in prohibition law enforcement are now turning a portion of their efforts toward educational work.

The question of details of enforcement by lawfully constituted authority, Federal, State, and municipal, is paramount, and its wise determination and solution is essential to the future of our Government. Believing, as I do, that the eighteenth amendment and the national prohibition act is not only good law, but offers the best method for the suppression of alcoholism, which is a curse to the modern industrial state, and earnestly wishing to bring about further improvement in enforcement conditions, I urge a calm, deliberate, and painstaking consideration of this problem by our thoughtful people.

Why is prohibition not better enforced? Why is it that liquor can be obtained in every city and town throughout the land? Why does not the Government do something about it? How is it that speakeasies remain open and do business after many complaints have been made against them? Why is prohibition enforcement in the Treasury Department, where they handle money and taxes, instead of the Department of Justice, where they prosecute criminals? Why does the Government poison alcohol to enforce prohibition? These and questions of like character come to my desk continually and they have been broadcast throughout the land. They have been discussed by hundreds of thousands of people, and about as many replies and answers have been made. The people want their Government to be effective in controlling the lawless minority. I am confident that if they know more of the working details of their Government—Federal and local—that public opinion expressed through political action will keep our affairs straight. I am going to take up some of these questions and do a little plain talking in an endeavor to show a few of the salient facts and attempt to make an analysis of the situation with respect to prohibition enforcement, that will be of some constructive benefit.

Every method of controlling so-called beverage liquor has been tried out in the United States. We have had our State dispensary, our local option, our jug laws, and our local bone dry laws. The moonshiner, the bootlegger, the speak-easy proprietor, and the tax evader are not new with us, nor have they been created by the eighteenth amendment, as some people imagine. They have always been with us to a greater or less degree since the control of intoxicating liquors was made the subject of excise or repressive legislation. With commerce moving so freely between the States under our modern transportation methods, it must be obvious that Federal authority needs to be brought to bear on the situation in order to supplement the State and local actions. This situation was apparent to Congress and the State legislatures, and the eighteenth amendment was adopted by 46 of the 48 States, the largest number of States ever ratifying any amendment to our Constitution.

There is nothing wrong with the policy of prohibition. The unfavorable symptoms are discussed by people who assume to be analysts of the situation, and these same people show a glaring ignorance of the make-up of our Government, and as a rule, are looking only at one or two small segments. Many people seem to think that the entire national policy of prohibition is centered in and relates to the suppression of the speak-easy and the local bootlegger by the Federal Government. Starting from that point, they immediately form a conclusion with respect to the entire subject and then unhesitatingly proclaim what the matter is and what ought to be done. Prohibition as a national policy is not, in my judgment, in nearly as much danger from bad people as it is from good people who are uninformed.

I. FEDERAL ENFORCEMENT

(A) THE DUTY OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

The Federal Government has certain broad and appropriate functions to perform, and I assert that it is performing them reasonably well. In the first place, it is the duty of the Federal Government to prevent smuggling of liquor. What has been done? The Coast Guard has been augmented by many vessels; rum row has been broken and scattered; treaty conventions have been entered into with many foreign nations in order better to deal with international illicit liquor traffic, and the total movement of illicit liquor internationally has been reduced to one-fourth of the quantity of three years ago. To be more specific, two years ago the total quantity of liquor moving in international traffic was 14,000,000 gallons; last year it was 5,000,000 gallons; it will be less the next year. This information is reasonably accurate, and we know whereof we speak. A substantial part of this liquor is seized, and, therefore, the amount that really goes into consumption is less in volume than the identified international movement.

The internal Federal enforcement should be primarily investigative rather than that of policing. It should aim to break up the large interstate and interdistrict conspiracies and center its efforts on the commercial operations dealing with manufacture, transportation, and distribution of commercial quantities of liquor. It should investigate collusive conditions where local officials are in conspiracy with these rings. This it is doing.

(B) WHY IT IS IN THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT

The underlying reason that prompted Congress to place the administration of the national prohibition act in the Treasury Department and create a Bureau of Prohibition to administer the national prohibition act and Revised Statutes relating to intoxicating liquor is plain enough when it is seen that the Coast Guard, the Bureau of Customs, and the Bureau of Internal Revenue, all having certain duties that relate to the suppression of illegal liquor traffic, are in the same department. As a matter of good business organization, it is essential that these activities, which are largely administrative, be coordinated as closely as possible. The Coast Guard operates on the high seas to prevent the introduction of illicit liquor into the United States. The Bureau of Customs protects the land and water borders and all ports of entry. The Bureau of Internal Revenue collects and covers into the Treasury all taxes levied on alcohol spirits and wines for other than beverage purposes. The national prohibition act is tied in, so to speak, with the Revised Statutes controlling distilled spirits and other liquors, and the tax statutes are a very effective weapon for source control. The national prohibition act would be very much weakened if it did not have the support of the Revised Statutes imposing taxes and penalties with respect to the manufacture and sale of liquor.

The Bureau of Prohibition is closely related in all its activities to these other bureaus and services in the Treasury Department. It conducts the investigative work with respect to domestic illicit liquor operations and must remain in the closest touch with the Coast Guard and Customs Services.

There has been considerable discussion about the feasibility and desirability of transferring the Prohibition Bureau to the Department of Justice. It is difficult to see how the prohibition machine could be divorced from the coordinate services already in the Treasury Department and still retain intelligent organization and centralized direction to control the illicit liquor traffic. This administrative feature alone constitutes a major question in considering Federal law enforcement. It is most gratifying to know that the President elect will cause an exhaustive inquiry to be made into these problems with a view to bringing about the most effective use of all the Federal agencies concerned.

The Bureau of Prohibition administers the permissive system created by the national prohibition act. It is essentially a scientific and technical problem. It covers the manufacture, distribution, and use of alcohol and intoxicating liquors for all scientific, medicinal, and industrial purposes. The Bureau of Prohibition likewise maintains the storekeepers and supervises the operations of the industrial alcohol plants, bonded wineries, and whisky concentration warehouses, and provides for the making of tax returns on which the Bureau of Internal Revenue collects the taxes. The taxes from nonbeverage liquors last year amounted to approximately $15,000,000, and are essential to source control of the material taxed. Few people, except those intimately concerned, have any idea of the essential importance of the business administration of the permissive system. It is not a criminal administration in any sense of the word.

If the only thing to do with respect to administering the prohibition act was the apprehension and prosecution in the United States courts of illicit liquor dealers, the problem would be comparatively simple. Unfortunately, that is only one of the many phases of the problem. The maintenance of reasonable permissive administration along cooperative lines is essential to the continued progress of science and industry in the United States. A separation of the permissive and enforcement functions might conceivably create newer and greater problems. The problem is difficult even in the same office. Only a few hundred of the 160,000 permits issued annually ever become the subject of civil or criminal litigation. In the last analysis, American science and industry can not function through the Federal grand jury, or do its daily business pursuant to court decree. We have learned one thing in this country in the last 25 years in relating government to business, and that is that only through cooperative understanding and wise direction and control can business itself function in a healthy manner and within the law.

(C) CONTROL OF ALCOHOL AND MEDICINAL SPIRITS

The Federal Government administers exclusively the so-called permissive system, namely, the supervision of the manufacture, storage, distribution, and use of all industrial alcohol and liquors for nonbeverage purposes. This is unquestionably a Federal function and is in accord with the necessary principle of securing uniform practice in commercial matters throughout the United States. All permits are issued subject to the limitations of the various State laws, and if they impose restriction greater than that imposed by the national prohibition act, the State restriction is respected accordingly. For the first few years of prohibition the administration of the permissive system was in the formative stage, and leaks from this system constituted the major problem of enforcement, both Federal and local. At the present time the permissive system is being administered in such a manner as to have reduced leakages and diversions to a minimum and has reached the point where diverted liquors are only a minor factor in law enforcement. In large sections of the country this factor is negligible.

The Bureau of Prohibition has revised the permissive regulations from time to time in order to take advantage of experience that it has acquired and has at the present time, in complete cooperation and harmony with the industrial and nonbeverage consumers of the United States, put in effect a reasonably rigid control that meets all commercial requirements and is effective, in so far as large-scale criminal operations are concerned, in preventing any breaks in the protective dikes. The Bureau of Prohibition has designated an industrial advisory council of 10 scientific and industrial leaders, who have cooperated with the bureau in working out permissive problems. This industrial advisory council has rendered invaluable aid in bringing about harmonious understanding between the bureau and the industrial users of alcohol and other nonbeverage liquors.

The Government does not poison alcohol to enforce prohibition. All countries who levy excise taxes on alcohol in a pure state have laws relieving it from tax when denatured to make it unfit for beverage or excisable use but suitable for use in sciences, art, and industries.

Industrial alcohol has assumed an importance in the scientific and industrial progress of the United States that was hardly conceived of when Congress passed the first tax-free denatured alcohol act, June 7, 1906. In the first year about 1,000,000 gallons of industrial alcohol were used in the arts and industries. Last year over 90,000,000 gallons were manufactured and distributed to thousands of individual manufactures engaged in thousands of different manufacturing activities. Without a large supply of industrial alcohol at a moderate cost, a great many of our essential industries would hardly exist, let alone prosper. Since the war the United States has had a wonderful development along chemical manufacturing lines, and to-day our industries consume more industrial alcohol than do the industries of any other country.

Industrial alcohol is a necessary solvent in the preparation of hundreds of drugs and medicinal preparations. It is the solvent used in the preparation of flavoring extracts, both household and manufacturing extracts. It is employed as a solvent as well as a component part in the manufacture of many synthetic chemical compounds used medicinally and in the arts and industries. It is employed in the manufacture and purification of many of the so-called "coal tar" medicinal compounds. It is a necessary solvent in the manufacture of dyes. It is a necessary material for the manufacture of ethyl ether, both technical and anæsthetic grade. It is a necessary solvent for all manners and kinds of varnishes, shellacs, paints, lacquers, and miscellaneous protective coverings. Industrial alcohol, as such, and ethyl acetate, which is manufactured from alcohol, are widely used in the manufacture of lacquers which employ nitrated cotton as a base. The entire automobile industry employs millions of gallons of these cotton lacquers annually. It is used as a cleaning fluid, as a sterilizing agent in hospitals, and is employed widely as an antifreezing agent in automobile radiators. One of the principal grades of artificial silk requires large quantities of alcohol and ether made from alcohol.

These few above-mentioned necessary uses of alcohol merely illustrate its wide employment in all of our industrial operations. Its manufacture is regarded by the War Department as a key industry to our national defense.

The Government, in cooperation with scientists and technologists of the industries concerned, after a great amount of research work has selected the denaturants employed for the purpose of rendering industrial alcohol unfit for beverage purposes and still provide for its industrial use under reasonable commercial conditions. The denaturants are selected on account of certain necessary technical and manufacturing considerations. Many of the denaturants add to the utility of the industrial alcohol. As science advances, the employment of specific denaturants must be given continuous study, and at the present time the Industrial Alcohol Institute maintains a research fellowship in the Mellon Institute at Pittsburgh for this particular study. The term "poison alcohol," as applied to industrial alcohol, is not only unwarranted but there can be no good reason based on fact for the application of such a term. The manipulating of denatured alcohol and the production of a partially cleaned alcohol for illicit beverage purposes will not produce any so-called "poison liquor." Dr. Reid Hunt, of the Harvard Medical School, who was formerly connected with the United States Public Health Service, has found that symptoms of wood-alcohol or methanol poisoning are not apparent until its concentration in a mixture with ordinary ethyl or grain alcohol has reached about 35 per cent. The maximum content of wood alcohol in any formula authorized for industrial purposes is 10 per cent. Before a person could ingest a fatal dose or a fatal quantity of wood alcohol from a 10 per cent mixture, he would have had to take into his system several times the fatal quantity of ordinary ethyl or grain alcohol. A number of deaths recently occurred in New York City from the drinking of wood alcohol. There was not the slightest evidence adduced at any point, so far as I am aware, that these deaths were caused by industrial alcohol, either in the form in which it was denatured under Government supervision or after it had been manipulated by criminals. The United States grand jury in the southern district of New York inquired into this matter and made a presentment to the court, which shows conclusively that these deaths, so far as the facts are known, were due to straight wood-alcohol or methanol poisoning, and were not due to ordinary illicit liquor or denatured alcohol.

The sale and distribution of wood alcohol or methanol does not come within the purview of the national prohibition act or any other Federal statute of which I am aware. It is a matter coming wholly within the jurisdiction of the State under their poison or pharmacy laws. Any move to involve the industrial alcohol system of the United States by attempting to associate it with deaths from the drinking of wood alcohol is not only unwarranted and has no basis in fact but would be destructive to the progress of industry in this country.

Starting last year, after conference with the Department of Justice, the Bureau of Prohibition put in effect a quantitative control of the primary production of industrial alcohol to provide only for production sufficient to meet known legitimate needs with reasonable commercial tolerance to obviate price manipulating. Heretofore a permit for industrial alcohol allowed the manufacturer of that commodity to make as much as he pleased, and the Federal Government controlled only the distribution and consumption by the nonbeverage user. As a result, more alcohol was continually being produced than was needed for legitimate industry, with a consequent possible diversion, through thefts and other lawless acts, of the surplus not needed by lawful commerce. It was inevitable that this condition should prevail. This control policy on primary production has been successful even in its first year, and we do not have to deal, at the present time, with large surpluses of alcohol that would inevitably find their way into illicit trade. These conditions are not now in existence.

The price of alcohol in the United States at present is governed entirely by the cost of the raw material, namely, West Indian blackstrap molasses. It must necessarily fluctuate with the fluctuation of the price of raw material, inasmuch as over 90 per cent of all industrial alcohol is manufactured from molasses. The industrial advisory council of the bureau, which is in its make-up largely composed of consumers of industrial alcohol, is prepared to advise with the bureau at any time that may be necessary, in order to prevent the bureau's control policy reacting unfavorably from the consumer's viewpoint on the price of industrial alcohol. The manufacturers of industrial alcohol have cooperated in a straightforward fashion with the Bureau of Prohibition in bringing about this desirable result. The various consuming industries are organized nationally, and the Bureau of Prohibition has cooperated closely with all of them in working out their permissive problems in a manner that will assure to all legitimate people a full supply of necessary alcohol under fair administrative conditions, and that will permit of all reasonable commercial operations and still keep the trade free from the criminal element who ostensibly engage in legitimate business to cover up their illegal liquor business.

The analyses of seized liquors throughout the United States, which last year numbered 123,000 samples, show a cross section of illicit liquor in the country. In the Chicago and Great Lakes territory less than 2 per cent of these samples show legal origin; that is, they indicate diversion from permitted alcohol or other liquors. Throughout the South the percentage is negligible, and even in the Northeastern section it is much less than 10 per cent. The country-wide average is less than 5 per cent. Therefore, when I say that the permissive system does not furnish the major problem in enforcement, I am of the opinion that these figures substantiate the statement.

I want to make mention of the various groups that are cooperating with the Bureau of Prohibition in bringing about this very desirable condition: The Industrial Alcohol Institute, the American Drug Manufacturers Association, the American Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association, the National Wholesale Druggists Association, the National Association of Retail Druggists, State retail druggists' associations, the Proprietary Association, the Paint, Oil, and Varnish Association, the American Manufacturers of Toilet Articles, the National Beauty and Barbers Supply Dealers Association, the American Medical Association, the American Chemical Society, and the Manufacturing Chemists Association. As will be readily seen, these and numerous local groups comprise the backbone of the professional and manufacturing interests of the United States that are concerned with the legitimate manufacture, distribution, and use of alcohol and medicinal liquors.

(d) Arrests, injunctions, etc.: The Bureau of Prohibition has about 2,000 field agents, including a force of special agents, which is approximately one-half of the number of persons employed. Last year this force made 75,000 arrests, seized 7,000 automobiles and trucks used in the transportation of liquors, secured evidence that resulted in the issuance of 4,268 permanent injunctions. By continuous pressure on large rings it has succeeded in lessening materially the size of the illegal traffic unit. In other words, the size of wildcat breweries and distilleries grows steadily smaller. We are taking the profit out of these large illegal operations and are steadily and inexorably breaking them and driving them out of business.

(e) The need for sympathetic prosecutors: The Department of Justice has recently received some additional funds, which were transferred by Congress from the appropriation for the Bureau of Prohibition by agreement of both departments, in order to employ additional special assistants to the Attorney General to endeavor to speed up and make more effective the administration of the law in prohibition cases in jurisdictions where that need was obvious. The Department of Justice and Bureau of Prohibition are not only in harmonious cooperation but are trying to facilitate the handling of prohibition cases in the Federal courts. Cooperation between the investigative and prosecuting branches of the Federal services is essential. When it is real the public sees the result, and that result is good. When it is lacking, it too frequently happens that the prohibition executives in the immediate locality are blamed for the state of affairs, and they justly resent that criticism when it is not well placed. During the past year the civil service has turned its microscope on the present personnel of the Bureau of Prohibition. Good will ultimately come from civil service with respect to prohibition enforcement when it is intelligently applied. I see no reason whatever why an intelligent application of the same civil-service principle and practice should not be had with respect to the staffs of the United States attorneys' offices throughout the country and scrutinize these employees with respect to character, performance, and capabilities. This would insure a corps of efficient prosecutors. The excellent work and hearty cooperation that exists between the great majority of all the United States attorneys and our field officers is noteworthy. Unfortunately, some United States attorneys and their assistants have been discharged in years past the same as prohibition executives, and underlying most of these changes in the past has been the apparent lack of this whole-hearted spirit of cooperation and sympathy with the purposes the law seeks to attain.

(f) Overburdened Federal court machinery: In some jurisdictions violators are arrested five or six times, and a trial has not yet been had on the first charge. In one jurisdiction evidence of violations has been secured against certain premises up to the eighth or ninth time, and no injunction has yet been issued to close the place. In some jurisdictions, in so far as the Federal courts are concerned, hundreds of conspiracy cases involving 5 to 30 defendants have been pending from one to three years without trial. Prompt trial is the essence of effective administration of the criminal law. Inability to try offenders, particularly offenders against the liquor laws, promptly paralyzes the law. These conditions are obviously due to some real cause, which I will discuss later. Indifferent juries, overcrowded court dockets, poorly made cases, and indifferent presentation to the courts by the Government attorneys are some of the apparent causes. Overburdening of the Federal court system with business which should be handled elsewhere is the more proximate and underlying cause.

Our cases are now so numerous that the Federal court system is unable, in large centers, to cope successfully with the business. Our problem is one of continuous selection rather than volume.

It is of great importance that the various United States attorney's offices in the metropolitan centers be augmented to handle the large volume of business placed in their hands by the prohibition machine. By the same token, there should be a commensurate increase in the United States courts, so that those two units may be able to handle the burden now imposed upon them. To accomplish successful Federal enforcement, it is of paramount importance that there be perfect coordinate action between the Treasury Department, the Department of Justice and the Federal courts. The production of the prohibition machine should be expeditiously handled by United States attorneys, who should prosecute the cases before Federal courts without delay. To give you an example of the unsatisfactory condition to which I refer, on November 1, 1928, there were pending before the Federal courts 22,602 cases.

II. NONENFORCEMENT BY LOCAL GOVERNMENTS

(a) The duty of the local government: It seems to me that the essential distinction as to the function of the Federal and local Government is entirely lost sight of in these public discussions relating to enforcement conditions. Assertions with respect to enforcement or nonenforcement of prohibition range all the way from ordinary muddy thinking to the condition of Grover Cleveland referred to as "clotted ignorance." I assert that the Federal Government, by and large, has substantially fulfilled its obligation under the concurrent clause of the eighteenth amendment in the administration of the national prohibition act and supplement statutes; that in its proper sphere of action it has brought about noteworthy accomplishments, and further, that unsatisfactory conditions still obtaining in some localities are due almost without exception to the abject failure of local authority to assume its proper obligation and to enforce the criminal law. I am impressed with the fact that public discussion devolves almost entirely on the effectiveness or ineffectiveness of the enforcement of law by the Federal Government, and the facts upon which these discussions are based relate almost entirely to local retail sales situations that are distinctly and unquestionably the province of the State or local authority to handle.

The movement on the part of some local authorities to evade and sidestep their responsibilities took form as soon as the national prohibition act became law. Various considerations entered into this equation. In some rural counties there was a consideration of saving public funds by not incurring expenses incidental to the arrest and trial of liquor offenders. In other cases it was a convenient thing for weak-hearted officials, and even "good citizens," to say that "the great Federal Government has assumed this full responsibility and we no longer need to worry." In some cities, corrupt political machines, through the police department, made an unholy alliance with the underworld, and contributed in no small degree to the building up of illicit liquor rings. I have received thousands of pieces of mail from citizens in communities up to 3,000 miles away from Washington, who want some special men, absolutely unknown to any local official, to come into the county or the city and clean up two or three retail joints which are flourishing under the eyes of the local police authority. Usually the writers of these communications do not even wish their names to be known in any manner. While this shows to a certain extent a commendable spirit in desiring to have the prohibition law enforced, it is indicative of a local weakness and lack of initiative on the part of the good people in the community to move directly in their own place to require their own elected or appointed officials to perform their duty.

Now, what is the binding force of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution on all of us? Let me quote some very plain words on this point: "That part of the prohibition amendment to the Federal Constitution which embodies the prohibition (of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes) is operative throughout the United States, binds all legislative bodies, courts, public officers, and individuals within these limits." This is not the statement of an overenthusiastic public official or a zealot. It happens to be the expression of the Supreme Court of the United States in the now famous Rhode Island and New Jersey cases, in the opinion handed down June 7, 1920. To translate this final word as to the binding and effective force of the eighteenth amendment on all of us, and at the same time make it understandable and workable I would, for practical purposes, condense it into two words, namely, cooperation and coordination. It has obviously not become a complete reality as yet. Let me point out some of the instances where lack of cooperation gives rise to bad results. It may serve to throw some light on conditions in certain parts of the country where people can justly term the situation unsatisfactory.

(b) Corrupt local officials: There is much talk about corruption in the Federal service. Let me say that at no time has the Federal Government failed to take drastic measures to maintain a clean service, and, at the present time, the Federal Bureau of Prohibition, of which I have personal knowledge through its field agents, is as clean as any body of men of like number in any service throughout the land. Recent disclosures of conditions in police departments in some of our large cities should be enlightening to the general public, as to where some of the weaknesses in enforcement lie.

I would say that in some communities we not only fail to receive cooperation from the local officials but in many instances have secured their hearty opposition. One of the prohibition administrators, whose headquarters is in a large eastern city, told me that he was of the opinion that during the past year more speak-easies were raided by the local police for failure to pay graft than for the fact that they were obviously violating the State law as well as the Federal law. Let me call attention to the great public service that is now being rendered by Judge Monaghan in the city of Philadelphia in disclosing corruption in the police force with respect to its handling of the local liquor situation in that city. Judge Monaghan is performing an outstanding public service, and there are plain signs that similar movements will come in other large cities. This fearless State's attorney, formerly on the bench, has exposed conditions that have shaken the police department of that city to the bottom. Captains and police officials, who have accumulated large bank accounts running up into the hundreds of thousands of dollars on salaries of $3,000 or $4,000 a year, have gone to jail.

Judge Swanson, the new state's attorney of Cook County, is out to break organized crime and extortion in Chicago, and my prediction is that he will do it with the help of the good citizens.

The smug merchant, who drinks his highball in complacency in his club, is beginning to see the connection between liquor lawlessness that finances criminals and extortion rackets on business. How many other cities, large and small, need a cleaning, can be left to conjecture of the respective residents.

(c) Lack of local civic responsibility: People who urge much greater quantitative efforts on the part of the Federal Government, are seeking merely to create Uncle Sam as the police officer of every large city and the constable of every small town. We must keep clearly in mind the primary functions of the general Government as compared with the State and local governments. The necessity of maintaining local responsibility and performance in its proper sphere has been pointed out by every President of the United States for the last 30 years. States' rights can not be separated from States' responsibilities under the Constitution.

III. ENFORCEMENT THROUGH COOPERATION

Having indicated some things that have been done and some of the weaknesses that seem apparent in our present situation, I should like to point out that the obvious path to a better condition of enforcement lies along the line of cooperation and coordination of all agencies of Government—Federal, State, and municipal—and in addition thereto, direct conference and cooperation with the professional, scientific, and business interests directly affected by the administration of the law. In addition, it is quite apparent that observance could be promoted by the numerous unofficial agencies who should give their prime attention to the relation of the citizen to his own Government. All of these projects are necessary, and the latter especially, as the ultimate success of our prohibition policy must, in the last analysis, be based on a spirit throughout the country that makes for the observance of the law, and which creates a wholesome respect, regard, and friendliness for the law.

Some minor palliatives with respect to the existing law might be of some benefit; for example, the penalties under the national prohibition act might be increased. It is possible that the making of a liquor purchase a specific crime would aid in reducing the demand. However, as helpful as these minor changes might be, they would not materially improve the present situation, where the crying need is not more law, but better understanding of the present law and the functions of the Federal and State Governments with respect thereto, and a better coordinating of all their activities.

Complete responsibility in specific functions, a spirit of cooperation, and a coordination of the various functions, together with hard, daily work on the part of all officers and executives, will accomplish much. In my judgment, there is no quack remedy which deals with superficial symptoms that will change the situation overnight. People who are spending their time and energy on such a quest would do well to inform themselves first on the problem, as information is the first requisite to intelligent action, and no man's opinion on a specific subject is worth any more than the amount of information he may possess on the same subject.

Intelligent cooperation, and not further concentration of power in a Federal police force, is the pathway that will lead us to a more satisfactory enforcement of the eighteenth amendment.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRATTON in the chair). Under an order of the Senate heretofore adopted, the Chair refers to the appropriate committee the nomination of Roy Dee Keehn to be major general, reserve.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 25, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate February 23 (legislative day of February 22), 1929

APPOINTMENT IN THE OFFICERS' RESERVE CORPS OF THE ARMY

GENERAL OFFICER

Maj. Gen. Roy Dee Keehn, Illinois National Guard, to be major general, reserve, from February 21, 1929.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, February 23, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of our fathers, just as we realize that Thou art an earth-walking and an earth-loving Father, we have that satisfaction which comes from the very best elements of our immortal souls; we have that sweetness that comes from a love-bearing life. Oh, the largeness of it; its fullness transcends our comprehension. Enlarge the sense of our wonderful privilege, that we may break through all barriers of infirmity, and let it give stimulus, inspiration, and aspiration to all that is great and good in the being of man. Direct us in our high mission, so noble a calling, that all our labors may be radiant in the sight of all men. Bless our homes and let heaven rest all about them. In the holy name of Jesus, our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 10304. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to erect headstones over the graves of soldiers who served in the Confederate Army and to direct him to preserve in the records of the War Department the names and places of burial of all soldiers for whom such headstones shall have been erected, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1781) entitled "An act to establish load lines for American vessels, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. JONES, Mr. MCNARY, and Mr. RANSDELL to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to a bill of the following title:

S. 3162. An act to authorize the improvement of the Oregon Caves in the Siskiyou National Forest, Oreg.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 41, 52, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, and 60 to the bill (H. R. 15712) entitled "An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes."

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

On February 14, 1929:

H. R. 56. An act to authorize the Postmaster General to issue receipts to senders for ordinary mail of any character, and to fix the fees chargeable therefor;

H. R. 58. An act to authorize the assignment of railway postal clerks and substitute railway postal clerks to temporary employment as substitute sea-post clerks;

H. R. 6865. An act to prescribe more definitely the rates of compensation payable to steamships of United States registry for transportation of foreign mails;

H. R. 10760. An act to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Hellenic Republic to the United States of America and of the differences arising out of the tripartite loan agreement of February 10, 1918;

H. R. 12415. An act to grant freedom of postage in the United States domestic service to the correspondence of the members of the diplomatic corps and consuls of the countries of the Pan American Postal Union stationed in the United States; and

H. R. 12898. An act to extend the collect-on-delivery service and limits of indemnity to sealed domestic mail on which the first class rate of postage is paid.

On February 15, 1929:

H. J. Res. 356. Joint resolution to authorize the exchange of certain public lands in the State of Utah, and for other purposes;

H. R. 5713. An act to permit certain warrant officers to count all active service rendered under temporary appointments as warrant or commissioned officers in the regular Navy, or as warrant or commissioned officers in the United States Naval Reserve Force, for the purpose of promotion to chief warrant rank;

H. R. 10015. An act authorizing the promotion on the retired list of the Navy of Herschel Paul Cook, lieutenant, junior grade;

H. R. 12607. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of Naval Post 110 of the American Legion the bell of the battleship Connecticut;

H. R. 14458. An act authorizing the Rio Grande del Norte investment Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near San Benito, Tex.;

H. R. 14479. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Maysville, Ky., and Aberdeen, Ohio;

H. R. 15005. An act authorizing the Donna Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Donna, Tex.;

H. R. 15006. An act authorizing the Los Indios Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Los Indios, Tex.;

H. R. 15069. An act authorizing the Rio Grande City-Camargo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Rio Grande City, Tex.;

H. R. 15523. An act authorizing representatives of the several States to make certain inspections and to investigate State sanitary and health regulations and school attendance on Indian reservations, Indian tribal lands, and Indian allotments;

H. R. 15968. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn.; and

H. R. 16527. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to purchase land for the Alabama and Coushatta Indians of Texas, subject to certain mineral and timber interests.

On February 16, 1929:

H. J. Res. 153. Joint resolution for the contribution of the United States in the plans of the organization of the International Society for the Exploration of the Arctic Regions by Means of the Airship;

H. J. Res. 304. Joint resolution providing for the observance and commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, and establishing a commission to be known as the United States Pulaski Sesquicentennial Commission;

H. J. Res. 398. Joint resolution to extend the period of time in which the Secretary of the Interior shall withhold his approval of the adjustment of Northern Pacific land grants, and for other purposes;

H. R. 1939. An act for the relief of James M. Thomas;

H. R. 5780. An act to provide for the further carrying out of the award of the National War Labor Board of July 31, 1918, in favor of certain employees of the Bethlehem Steel Co., Bethlehem, Pa.;

H. R. 10913. An act to compensate Talbird & Jenkins for balance due on contracts with Navy Department dated March 20 and October 9, 1919;

H. R. 12322. An act to quiet title and possession with respect to certain lands in Faulkner County, Ark.;

H. R. 12032. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved June 10, 1922, as amended;

H. R. 12347. An act granting all right, title, and interest of the United States to the piece or parcel of land known as the Cuartel lot to the city of Monterey, Calif.;

H. R. 13428. An act for the relief of Mackenzie Memorial Hospital and German-American Hospital and Lau Ye Kun, all of Tientsin, China;

H. R. 13899. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for lands held under color of title;

H. R. 15004. An act for the relief of Florence P. Hampton;

H. R. 15279. An act for the relief of the family of Wang Erh-Ko;

H. R. 15328. An act to authorize the exchange of 18 sections of Government land for an equal value of State land located in Box Elder County, Utah, for experiments in sheep growing, and for other purposes;

H. R. 16129. An act to provide for the acquisition of a site and the construction thereon and equipment of buildings and appurtenances for the Coast Guard Academy;

H. R. 967. An act for the relief of George J. Illichevsky;

H. R. 2492. An act to extend the benefits of the United States employees' compensation act of September 7, 1916, to John L. Jenifer, a former employee of the Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C.;

H. R. 3949. An act for the relief of Frank F. Moore;

H. R. 3955. An act for the relief of the C. Tisdall Co., Herbert W. Smith, Newman Bros., Thomas J. Murphy Co., formerly Edward A Brown Co., and Giles P. Dunn, jr.;

H. R. 3967. An act for the relief of the next of kin of Edgar C. Bryon;

H. R. 4258. An act to authorize credit in the disbursing accounts of certain officers of the Army of the United States and for the settlement of individual claims approved by the War Department;

H. R. 4267. An act for the relief of Ernest J. Hiscock;

H. R. 7166. An act to allow credits in the accounts of disbursing officers of the Army of the United States on account of refunds made to purchasers of surplus war supplies;

H. R. 7392. An act for the relief of John I. Fitzgerald;

H. R. 7409. An act for the relief of John J. Campbell;

H. R. 8807. An act for the relief of James O. Williams;

H. R. 8968. An act to allow credits in the accounts of William A. Schoenfeld;

H. R. 9943. An act for the relief of Sawyer Motor Co.;

H. R. 10624. An act for the relief of William J. Casey;

H. R. 11289. An act for the relief of Katherina Kautz and Fred G. Kautz, heirs of the estate of Christian F. Kautz, deceased;

H. R. 12007. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Peter J. Egan;

H. R. 12711. An act for the relief of certain members of a trail crew employed by the Forest Service;

H. R. 12714. An act for the relief of the Rocky Ford National Bank, Rocky Ford, Colo.;

H. R. 14572. An act for the relief of William D. Ghrist;

H. R. 15039. An act for the relief of Winston W. Davis; and

H. R. 15386. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

On February 18, 1929:

H. R. 4776. An act for the relief of Dr. Stanley R. Teachout;

H. R. 9716. An act for the relief of Charles H. Salley;

H. R. 11749. An act for the relief of H. A. Russell; and

H. R. 13795. An act for recognition of meritorious service performed by Lieut. Commander Edward Ellsberg, Lieut. Henry Hartley, and Boatswain Richard E. Hawes.

On February 19, 1929:

H. R. 15809. An act to authorize a preliminary survey of Mud Creek in Kentucky with a view to the control of its floods;

H. R. 16162. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River between New Orleans and Gretna, La.;

H. J. Res. 343. Joint resolution authorizing an extension of time within which suits may be instituted on behalf of the Cherokee Indians, the Seminole Indians, the Creek Indians, and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians to June 30, 1930, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10327. An act for the relief of Charles J. Hunt; and

H. R. 15092. An act to authorize an appropriation to pay half the cost of a bridge near the Soboba Indian Reservation, Calif.

On February 20, 1929:

H. R. 496. An act authorizing an appropriation for development of potash jointly by the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Commerce by improved methods of recovering potash from deposits in the United States;

H. R. 132. An act authorizing the erection of a sanitary fireproof hospital at the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Dayton, Ohio;

H. R. 5491. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes," approved July 12, 1921;

H. R. 8748. An act for the relief of James W. Bass, collector of internal revenue, Austin, Tex.;

H. R. 12520. An act for the relief of the Nez Perce Tribe of Indians;

H. R. 13449. An act to provide for the promotion of clerks and general mechanics in the motor-vehicle service;

H. R. 13450. An act to provide for the promotion of clerks, general mechanics, driver mechanics, and garagemen drivers in the motor-vehicle service;

H. R. 13451. An act to authorize the Postmaster General to hire vehicles from letter carriers for use in service;

H. R. 13565. An act to amend the act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved July 3, 1926;

H. R. 13977. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to settle claims by agreement arising under operation of Indian irrigation projects;

H. R. 16301. An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes;

H. R. 16500. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 16522. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, etc., and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 12538. An act for the benefit of Morris Fox Cherry; and

H. R. 15732. An act making an additional grant of lands for miners' hospitals for disabled miners of the States of Utah and Arizona, and for other purposes.

On February 21, 1929:

H. R. 8736. An act to provide for the commemoration of the battles of Brices Cross Roads, Miss., and Tupelo, Miss.;

H. R. 12449. An act to define the terms "child" and "children" as used in the acts of May 18, 1920, and June 10, 1922;

H. R. 15851. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Allegheny River at Kittanning, in the county of Armstrong, in the State of Pennsylvania; and

H. R. 16279. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at Augusta, Ky.

On February 23, 1929:

H. R. 9961. An act to equalize the rank of officers in positions of great responsibility in the Army and Navy; and

H. R. 13882. An act to extend the benefits of the Hatch Act and the Smith-Lever Act to the Territory of Alaska.

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution from the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania presents a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 325

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to inform the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the public interest, of the following facts:

1. Did the Federal Reserve Board confer with Mr. Montagu Norman, governor of the Bank of England, during the month of February, 1929?

2. Were such conferences, if any, solicited by Montagu Norman or by the Federal Reserve Board?

3. What was the subject matter of such conferences and what agreement, if any, was entered into by the Federal Reserve Board and Montagu Norman, and what was said at such conferences?

4. Were notes made of such conferences, and, if so, what were they?

5. Did the Federal Reserve Board confer with any individuals other than Montagu Norman prior to and concerning the public statement issued by the Federal Reserve Board on February 6, 1929, and what was said at such conferences, if any?

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I present another privileged resolution from the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 326

Resolved, That the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board be, and is hereby, directed to inform the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the public interest, of the following facts:

1. Did the Federal Reserve Board confer with Mr. Montagu Norman, governor of the Bank of England, during the month of February, 1929?

2. Were such conferences, if any, solicited by Montagu Norman or by the Federal Reserve Board?

3. What was the subject matter of such conferences and what agreement, if any, was entered into by the Federal Reserve Board and Montagu Norman, and what was said at such conferences?

4. Were notes made of such conferences, and, if so, what were they?

5. Did the Federal Reserve Board confer with any individuals other than Montagu Norman prior to and concerning the public statement issued by the Federal Reserve Board on February 6, 1929, and what was said at such conferences, if any?

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this is also a unanimous report from the committee, and I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I present another privileged resolution from the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 327

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, directed to inform the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the public interest, of the following facts:

1. Did the Federal Reserve Board confer with Mr. Montagu Norman, governor of the Bank of England, during the month of February, 1929?

2. Were such conferences, if any, solicited by Montagu Norman or by the Federal Reserve Board?

3. What was the subject matter of such conferences and what agreement, if any, was entered into by the Federal Reserve Board and Montagu Norman, and what was said at such conferences?

4. Were notes made of such conferences, and if so, what were they?

5. Did the Federal Reserve Board confer with any individuals other than Montagu Norman prior to and concerning the public statement issued by the Federal Reserve Board on February 6, 1929, and what was said at such conferences, if any?

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this is also a unanimous report of the committee, and I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MAPES. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. It occurred to me from listening to the reading by the Clerk that he only read the resolution and not the report of the committee. There has been no indication from what the Clerk has read of what the report of the committee is.

At the conclusion of the reading of each resolution the gentleman from Pennsylvania has made the statement that it was a unanimous report. As I understand it, the report of the committee has been adverse to the resolutions, but that does not appear from what the Clerk has read. What does the gentleman say as to that?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that it is an adverse report. It is very brief, and if it is in order I see no reason why the Clerk should not read the report to the House.

Mr. MAPES. If the Clerk actually read the report of the committee, I did not hear it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McFADDEN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following report (to accompany H. Res. 327):

"The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the resoultion (H. Res. 327) requesting information from the President of the United States, having considered the same, report it back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution do not pass."

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, since the report has been read——

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, a motion to lay a bill or resolution on the table is not a debatable motion. The gentleman has made the motion that this resolution be laid on the table. It is a privileged motion and is not debatable.

Mr. McFADDEN. I renew the motion——

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to ask the gentleman one question.

I understand these three resolutions were introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] and I ask the gentleman, has he apprised the gentleman from New York, who is not now in the Chamber, as to the action he is taking with reference to these matters?

Mr. McFADDEN. I would say to the gentleman these are privileged resolutions. I am directed by the committee to act and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] knows of the adverse report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. Should not the reports on the other two resolutions be formally read or printed in the RECORD to show what they are?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the reports will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary that the report on every bill or resolution that is considered in this House be read. It is really not the usual practice for the reports to be read. These resolutions have been acted upon. Of course, by unanimous consent the reports can be printed, and I have no objection to that being done; but, in my opinion, it is not required.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, my point is that there was nothing from what the Clerk read to show what the report was. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] merely sent to the Speaker's desk to be read by the Clerk the resolution itself, or, at least, that was all the Clerk read.

The SPEAKER. The reports accompanying the resolutions were not read, because it did not seem to the Chair to be necessary.

Mr. SNELL. When privileged resolutions are brought up we do not read the reports.

Mr. MAPES. Perhaps the other Members knew what was going on, but I did not.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the reports accompanying the resolutions (H. Res. 325 and H. Res. 326) will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The reports are as follows:

Mr. McFADDEN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following report to accompany H. Res. 325:

"The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 325) requesting information from the Secretary of the Treasury, having considered the same, report it back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution do not pass."

Mr. McFADDEN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following report to accompany H. Res. 326:

"The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 326) requesting information from the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, having considered the same, report it back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution do not pass."

By motion of Mr. McFADDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were laid on the table was laid on the table.

GEN. HUNTER LIGGETT AND GEN. ROBERT L. BULLARD

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 3269, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 3269, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked for. The Clerk will read the title to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3269) providing for the advancement on the retired list of the Army of Hunter Liggett and Robert L. Bullard, major generals, United States Army, retired.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, this is the bill to which the House attached the separate promotion list from the Air Service.

Mr. MORIN. This is a Senate bill. The Senate struck out all after the enacting clause and wrote another bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is there any hope of their coming to an agreement?

Mr. MORIN. I think there is.

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. There has been almost a universal desire on the part of the War and Navy Departments for a committee of investigation of the promotion list and the pay in the Army and Navy. I have understood that if that was granted there would be no more of this character of bills. If it is contemplated to start making additional promotions, I would like to have the gentleman explain.

Mr. MORIN. The promotion bill of the Senate is an amendment to a bill passed by the House.

Mr. SNELL. I understand that.

Mr. MORIN. The resolution the gentleman refers to does not include the promotion in the Army.

Mr. SNELL. Does it not include the whole subject of promotion and pay?

Mr. MORIN. It does not.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman knows that under our system promotion has nothing to do with the pay in the Army.

Mr. SNELL. If somebody knows what this matter applies to, I would like to have them explain.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if he has consulted with the ranking minority member of the committee before making this motion?

Mr. MORIN. I have just stated that I came from the committee, and it is the unanimous request of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. JAMES, Mr. FURLOW, and Mr. MCSWAIN.

CLAIMS OF THE SHOSHONE INDIANS

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report for printing under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Conference report on S. 710, conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and adjudicate and render judgment in claims which the band of Shoshone Indians may have against the United States.

The conference report was ordered printed.

AMENDING THE NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, the bill S. 2901, an act to amend the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented, has been passed by the Senate and is on the Speaker's table. H. R. 9588 has been favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee of the House. S. 2901 and H. R. 9588 were identical when reported to the Senate and to the House, respectively.

The Senate has amended S. 2901 in several particulars, so there is a very serious question as to whether or not the House bill as reported is substantially the same as the Senate bill as passed. A serious legal question is involved which the Speaker would be required to pass upon in holding the bills substantially the same. I therefore ask that S. 2901 be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. In making the request, I state that the Committee on the Judiciary instructed the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], its chairman, to call up the bill S. 2901 and to take such action as he thought advisable to bring the bill before the House for a vote. I have been requested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. GRAHAM, who is absent from the city, to appear here this morning. The question as to whether these bills are substantially the same is debatable, and in my judgment the bill should be referred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will refer the bill to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, if this matter had been brought up as a question of privilege, I intended to make the point of order against it. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, if a motion had been made to call up S. 2901, the Jones bill, I had intended to make a point of order against the motion on the ground that the motion is not privileged, my contention being that Senate bill 2901 is not "substantially the same" as House bill 9588, as required under Rule XXIV, subdivision 2, and therefore Senate bill 2901 now on the Speaker's desk should be referred to the Judiciary Committee of the House.

It is interesting to note in passing and of some weight in support of my argument that, while the rule requires that the bills be "substantially the same," the almost invariable phrase used by Members making such a motion is that the bills are "similar" or "identical." The Speaker also invariably so refers to such a situation. He says "an identical bill, or a similar bill, is on the Speaker's table." I do not know the authority for such expressions as "identical" or "similar." There may well be a marked difference among all these expressions. It can not be gainsaid, however, that the common belief and understanding in the House is that the bills must be "identical" rather than "substantially the same." Has not the use of such words as "identical" or "similar" built up a custom and a practice in this House which, by common consent, modifies and limits the possibly more comprehensive language of the rule? "Substantially the same" may be broader and less confined than "identical."

The Standard Dictionary defines "identical" as "absolutely the same; the very same; uniform," and so forth.

"Similar" is nearer "substantially the same," but there may well be a difference between them.

The Standard Dictionary defines "similar" as "bearing resemblance; like, but not completely identical; of the same scope," and so forth.

37 Cyc. 507 defines "substantially" as "really, truly, essentially, in a substantial manner," and so forth.

The only judicial definition of "substantially the same" I have been able to find is contained in the case of Adams v. Edwards (1 Fed. Cas., p. 112), where the court said:

When we say a thing is "substantially the same" we mean it is the same in all important particulars.

The only precedents I can find on the matter are as follows. In the first session of the Fifty-first Congress, a motion was made to take from the Speaker's table and pass a Senate bill, "it being identical"—mark the word—with a House bill.

Mr. Speaker Reed said, reported in IV Hinds, section 3098:

This is a Senate bill which does not require reference to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, a bill substantially like which, not necessarily identically the same, is on file and has been reported by a House committee. Such bills can be called up without unanimous consent by the committee. The three requisites are: First, that the bill shall not require reference to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; second, that it shall be similar, substantially the same, as one that has already received the approval of the committee having it in charge; and, third, that it shall be called up at the request of the committee. There are two kinds of business which can be disposed of at once from the Speaker's table. First, House bills with Senate amendments not involving consideration by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, where the amendments do not require that; and, second, this class of Senate bills.

In the Fifty-fifth Congress, on a similar motion that bills were "substantially the same" it appeared that one bill contained the phrase "reading and writing" and the other bill "reading or writing." Mr. Speaker Reed said, reported in IV Hinds, section 3099:

In this case the rule is invoked which permits a committee to call up from the Speaker's table a measure which is "substantially" the same as one already reported by the committee. The object of the restriction is that no committee shall have it in its power to bring before the House a matter of which there has not been sufficient and reasonable notice. In other words, while it was desired under the rules to facilitate legislation, it was also desired that there should be nothing in the nature of a surprise to the House.

This bill having come over from the Senate, the question arising is, therefore, whether it shall be retained on the Speaker's table as being substantially the same as one already reported to the House. In order that it may be so kept upon the table the Chair must be notified that a committee has passed upon the subject and made a report to the House and asks that the bill be retained on the table for action. The next question to be considered is whether the bill upon the Speaker's table from the Senate is "substantially" the same as the House bill which has been reported. The reason it ought to be substantially the same is that the House may be notified of the subject that is to come up, that it may have due information as to what is to be brought before it, and if it is so informed by a bill having been considered and reported by its committee that is enough.

The rule does not say that the two measures shall be absolutely the same. It only requires that they shall be "substantially" the same.

To my mind this precedent is not controlling on the matter before us to-day because it was too minor a difference as compared with the many differences between the two bills before us.

The first point I would have made, therefore, is that when we apply the phrase "substantially the same" to this question we can not use it in any broad sense. It is necessarily limited by the practice and custom of this House. There has grown up a custom of applying this rule only to "identical" bills.

Let us, therefore, examine these two bills to see if they are "substantially the same" in the sense as heretofore applied in this body.

To do that intelligently it will first be necessary to trace the history of these bills in both bodies of the Congress.

H. R. 9588 was introduced on January 18, 1928, by the gentleman from New York [Mr. STALKER] and referred to the Judiciary Committee. On March 2, 1928, that bill was reported (Rept. 822) without amendment and placed on the House Calendar. That bill provides as follows:

That whenever a penalty or penalties are prescribed by the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented, for the illegal manufacture, sale, transportation, importation, or exportation of intoxicating liquor, as defined by section 1, Title II, of the national prohibition act, the penalty imposed for each such offense shall be a fine not to exceed $10,000 or imprisonment not to exceed five years, or both.

On January 27, 1928, the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] introduced Senate bill 2901, identical in every word with H. R. 9588. On April 9, 1928, the Judiciary Committee of the Senate reported that bill with two amendments. First, after the word "prescribed," the committee inserted the words "in a criminal prosecution." Neither the Stalker bill nor the original Jones bill were limited solely to criminal prosecutions. The penalties referred to in the bills might refer to civil prosecutions in equity, for instance, as well. No such limitation ever was or is now in the Stalker bill.

The Senate committee recommended as its second amendment the addition of a section 2, to read:

This act shall not repeal nor eliminate any minimum penalty now provided by the said national prohibition act.

No such provision ever was or is now in the Stalker bill.

On March 12, 1928, Mr. STALKER introduced another bill, H. R. 12002, the first section of which was identical in every word with his H. R. 9588.

This second bill, however, contained a section 2, which reads as follows:

SEC. 2. This act shall not in any way change or eliminate the minimum penalties now provided by law for second or subsequent offenses, nor change or eliminate the civil penalties now imposed because of law violations.

This bill was introduced 10 days after the House committee had reported H. R. 9588, at which date the Senate committee had not yet reported the Jones bill with a section 2 somewhat similar to section 2 of H. R. 12002, but it should be noted that Mr. STALKER still had in mind "civil penalties" as expressed in his section 2. It might have been helpful to have heard from the gentleman from New York [Mr. STALKER] what, if anything, prompted him to introduce his second bill and add section 2 to the text of his first bill. He may have heard that the Senate committee was about to add a section 2 to the Jones bill of somewhat similar intent. But while the minds of the gentleman from New York and the Senator from Washington started out in exact unison, Mr. STALKER's mind never met with the minds of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. He never introduced a bill identical with the Jones bill as reported by the Senate committee.

He has had nearly a year in which to do it. His H. R. 12002, nearer like S. 2901, was never acted upon by the committee. If that bill, H. R. 12002, was now on the House Calendar and this motion were directed toward disposing of that bill, my point of order would carry less weight. But the bill on the House Calendar continues to be the mere skeleton upon which the measure S. 2901 as it comes to us was constructed.

It is also interesting to note that in nearly a year Mr. STALKER nor the Judiciary Committee of the House has never seen fit to report a bill with the amendments put on the Jones bill by the Senate committee, although they had knowledge of that committee's action.

Neither of the Senate committee amendments seemed to have interested Mr. STALKER. The first amendment, confining the law to criminal prosecutions, was never Mr. STALKER's intention, as gleaned from either of the two bills he introduced. Mr. STALKER would be my best witness in support of my point of order. I offer his handiwork, two bills, as evidence. And if this parliamentary question had arisen I would have asked him to explain to the House, and I know he would have done so frankly, just what attitude he took toward the Senate committee amendments. Whether he was ever willing up to a few days ago to adopt them as his wards. His mind, if one could look into its depths, would have been one source of guidance on this parliamentary question. Surely his conduct is not in accord with any claim of similarity between the bills in question. He might also have explained whether the two amendments put on in the Senate are consonant with his ideas or whether they do not in fact materially alter his intentions as expressed in either bill he introduced.

In the Senate there was added to S. 2901, as reported by the Senate committee with amendments, two additional amendments. The first one added a proviso to section 1, as follows:

That it is the intent of Congress that the court, in imposing sentence hereunder, should discriminate between casual or slight violations and habitual sales of intoxicating liquor or attempts to commercialize violations of the law.

Did Mr. STALKER ever have such a provision in mind? It would have been of no importance to this question whether he is now willing to accept these amendments. The test, rather, is whether the intent and purpose of his bill is altered or modified or changed in the Senate bill before us.

The second amendment put on in the Senate added, in section 2, after the word "penalty," the words "for the first or any subsequent offense." Was that ever Mr. STALKER's idea? He knows best.

Therefore the Senate bill is in no wise "substantially the same" as the House bill. It ceased to be "substantially the same" the moment the Senate committee added its two amendments. It grew more dissimilar and lost any claim within reason of being "substantially the same" when the Senate added its two amendments. That nonlegislative, ridiculous "proviso" is in and of itself sufficient to mark the dissimilarity. That stands out as a carbuncle, a running sore, on the face of a measure enacted in the Congress of the United States, and which, if it becomes a law, will be printed in our statute books and go into the law libraries of our country to be jeered at as unworthy of a board of aldermen. I feel confident that in spite of the fanatic approach of some people toward legislation on the subject matter involved, going so far sometimes that rule and reason and justice are brushed aside—I feel as confident of my position on this matter as I ever did in arguing any point before a court of justice that my point of order would have been sustained.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CELLER. Will the Judiciary Committee be empowered to hold public hearings on this bill, which has been referred in this manner?

The SPEAKER. That is a matter entirely for the committee itself to decide.

WORLD WAR VETERANS' ACT, 1924

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be given until Tuesday night next, at 12 o'clock, to file a minority report upon the bill H. R. 16845, to amend the World War veterans' act, 1924.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that he may have until midnight on Tuesday next to file a report upon the bill H. R. 16845. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry. It is our hope to get this bill up on Monday next. If this extension of time be granted, would that interfere with our getting the bill up for passage on Monday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. This is merely a matter of courtesy to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman's inquiry, I do not think there is any chance of getting the bill up on Monday next, but if it should come up on Monday next without a minority report, I could present the matter to the House verbally as well as by filing a written report.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Dakota knows, as the members of the committee know, that this bill is to take care of some disabled ex-service men who are totally and permanently disabled, who are not taken care of under the present law. I trust he will not object when the bill is called up on Monday.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The gentleman from South Dakota will oppose the bill, because he does not believe in it.

JOE G. DONISI

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 924) for the relief of Joe G. Donisi, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment. If the House will permit, this bill was passed by the House granting relief to a boy whose right hand was blown off five years or more ago at a citizens' military training camp. The House unanimously granted a lump sum. The Senate has amended the bill to make the payment in monthly installments, through the United States Employees' Compensation Board.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman the authority of the committee to make this request?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I have.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill and the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill and the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is not this establishing a precedent. Has this ever been done before?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. The gentleman means so far as concerning the Senate amendment is concerned?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Oh, no; so far as paying an obligation of the Government by the month instead of in its lump sum.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes; I believe it has. The policy has been largely favored in the Committee on Claims lately, and in the last year or two the Claims Committee has limited amounts and the manner of payment very largely through the process followed by the United States Employees' Compensation Board.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the votes by which the resolutions I introduced respecting certain conferences between the Federal Reserve Board and Montague Norman, reported this morning by the Committee on Banking and Currency, were tabled, be vacated. The House tabled these resolutions under a misapprehension of the situation. I had an agreement yesterday with the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] that no action would be taken on these resolutions until Tuesday of next week. I made that arrangement for his convenience. In my absence this morning I understand that he reported the resolutions and then moved to table them, and that the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] asked him if I were agreeable to that action, and that Mr. McFADDEN, the chairman of the committee, informed the House that it was all right. That is not so. I do not want to charge the chairman of the committee with bad faith, but he does not understand the situation. The agreement between Mr. McFADDEN and myself, as two gentlemen of this House, was that nothing would be done about these resolutions until Tuesday morning next. I made that agreement for his convenience. I now ask unanimous consent that the motion by which these resolutions were tabled be reconsidered.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Motions to reconsider the votes by which the resolutions were passed were agreed to and those motions have been laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the motions by which these resolutions were tabled be vacated. Is there objection?

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes on this subject.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, we can not take this matter up again now. We have important business before us. A great supply bill is pending here, and we wish to proceed with it. If the other matter shall come up at some other more opportune time, I shall not object.

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, if the leaders of the House do not want to play the game fairly with the rest of the Members on this floor——

Mr. TILSON. At some later date there will be no objection on my part.

Mr. BLACK of New York. If a gentleman's agreement does not mean anything to the leaders of the House, we should find it out right away.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I think this is the proper time to settle the question. A Member of the House has been charged with bad faith.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

SECOND DEFICIENCY BILL, 1929

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 17223, the second deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 17223, the second deficiency bill, with Mr. LEHLBACH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 17223, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17223) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for half an hour.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, this bill carries the sum of $192,625,764.46. This very large amount is made necessary by the unusual circumstances which attended the consideration of the urgent deficiency bill, which Members will recall passed the House before the holidays and was sent to the Senate. The Senate adopted an amendment providing an appropriation of $24,000,000 to be placed in the hands of the President, to be allocated among the various agencies charged with the duty of enforcing the prohibition law.

That amendment was reported with the bill as it came from the Senate back to the House. The usual request for unanimous consent was made for a conference, and objection was made to the request because there were some who felt that the promise made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] was not sufficiently positive to justify the House in believing that an opportunity would be given to vote directly upon that amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Subsequent events have justified the notion that there was not a sufficiently definite promise made.

Mr. BYRNS. Undoubtedly. But, as shown by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] on yesterday, the gentleman from Indiana did state a number of times that undoubtedly the House would have an opportunity to vote on the amendment. Therefore a rule was brought into the House and the bill sent to conference without opportunity for the House to vote directly on the amendment. There a difference arose between the majority of the House conferees and the Senate conferees with reference to that amendment. I state no secret when I say it, because it was stated on the floor of the Senate the other day by a distinguished Senator who was a member of the conference committee on the part of the Senate, that the statement was made to the House conferees that if they would bring that amendment back and permit the Members of the House to have a record vote on that amendment the whole proposition could be settled in 15 minutes.

But we are confronted with what I am sure is an unusual and unprecedented situation, and the House had been refused the right to cast a record vote upon the amendment by reason of the fact that the majority of the House conferees have declined to report the bill back to the House; and so far as I know and am advised, there is no parliamentary procedure by which the conferees can be compelled to bring that bill back. I say it is unusual and unprecedented. The House has never had an opportunity to vote upon that amendment directly. Its own conferees have denied to them that right.

Gentlemen know that frequently it occurs that where there are differences between the two bodies, the House and Senate conferees carry back to their respective bodies amendments in dispute for the purpose of getting a record vote and giving the Members the right to express themselves. Only the other day the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], who was a member of this conference committee, brought back to the House the Interior Department appropriation bill containing a Senate amendment relating to condemnation proceedings respecting private lands in the national parks. Notwithstanding the fact that not more than 10 days previous there had been a positive vote cast directly upon that amendment, the gentleman requested the House to go upon record upon it again. Yet the gentleman now occupies the inconsistent attitude with reference to this amendment in the urgent deficiency bill as one of the conferees, of refusing to permit the House to exercise its right, the right of its individual Members, to vote their convictions one way or the other upon that amendment and that, too, despite the fact that they had never been given that opportunity.

It has reached a rather startling pass when the House of Representatives, consisting of 435 Members, is to be denied their constitutional and their rightful prerogative of voting upon amendments on an appropriation bill by the action of its conferees refusing to return the bill.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Is it not a matter of fact that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] tried to exact such a promise from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes. The gentleman from Texas endeavored to get the gentleman from Indiana to promise positively to bring the bill back. He was not satisfied with the answer he received, and therefore objected to the unanimous-consent request.

Now, what steps have been taken, gentlemen, in order to avoid permitting Members to go upon record upon the Senate amendment of $24,000,000 which was proposed merely to enable the President elect, when he comes into office, to carry out the pledges that he made to the people for the enforcement of this law? What induced it? They say it was offered in the Senate for the purpose of embarrassing the President elect. I deny it. Is it embarrassing to the President elect for the Congress to vote additional appropriations when it is admitted that present appropriations are inadequate? Is it an embarrassment to offer to him the tools with which to do the job he promised in the last election he would do? What brought about that amendment?

In the hearings before the House committee on the Treasury Department bill last November the admiral of the Coast Guard stated in response to a question from me that he had been unable to wholly prevent smuggling upon the Atlantic coast and was able to do little if anything on the Pacific coast because he did not have sufficient boats and sufficient funds with which to do the work. When he was asked as to how much he needed, he stated he could not say; that he did not know. Doctor Doran, the head of the Prohibition Unit, was quoted in the newspapers as saying that he needed an immense amount in order to effectually perform the duties of his position. Mr. Camp, the head of the Customs Division of the Treasury Department, went before the Budget last fall and asked that he be allowed 379 inspectors for the purpose of border patrol, but his request was cut to 150.

The Civil Service Commission was explaining that they were unable to conduct their investigations and examinations in order to put agents in charge of prohibition law enforcement under the civil service as required by law. And it was those facts which induced the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] to offer an amendment placing $24,000,000 in the hands of the President of the United States, who is at the head of all these law-enforcement agencies, with the power in his discretion to allocate that sum as he saw fit to these various agencies and enable them to function as everyone wants them to function, whether he is wet or whether he is dry, because we all believe in the enforcement of our Constitution and its laws. But the House was never given an opportunity, as I said, to vote directly upon this amendment, and in order to prevent the House from voting upon the proposition the committee has lifted out of the urgent deficiency bill all the items carried therein, except those relating to prohibition, the tax refund amendment, and possibly two or three smaller matters, and placed them in this bill, aggregating, as I have said, over $191,000,000. And it is proposed to let the urgent deficiency bill die in the hands of the committee rather than report it back to the House.

Now, do they need the money? Does anyone deny that they need the money? Admiral Billard, of the Coast Guard, came before the deficiency committee in the hearings on this particular bill and he was reminded of the statement he made last November. He was asked whether or not he had any more information now as to the amount he needed than he had at that time, and his statement made upon February 8 was that more than two weeks before he had filed with the Secretary of the Treasury a proposal for more boats and more men to enable him to effectually discharge the duties resting upon him in preventing the smuggling of liquor from the seas. When asked to put it in the record he stated he could not do so, having already submitted it to his superior.

The record will show that the acting chairman of the subcommittee at that time was asked by me to call the Secretary, the Undersecretary, or the Assistant Secretary before the committee in order that this plan might be put in the hearings for the information of the Members of the House, but he refused to do so. No one knows, save those with whom it is filed, I presume, just what that plan was except as indicated in a general way by Admiral Billard. And what was the plan as indicated by him? He said it covered a 4-year period consisting, as he said, of the orderly building of boats and a building up of the personnel. Then he was asked the question as to whether or not he could effectually prevent the smuggling of liquor into the United States before that plan was completed, and he said he could not. Then he was confronted with the fact, and the people of the country are confronted with the fact, that it is to be four years from the time the appropriation is made—which will not be done until next December—before you can hope to have that effectual prevention of smuggling into the United States from the sea which was promised the people.

Now, as I have said, that was over two weeks before February 8. Why did not the Secretary of the Treasury send it up to Congress? Why was not that plan submitted to the Congress and to the people for their information? Why is that plan being held down there somewhere in the files of the department and kept secret from Congress? Why were we not given an opportunity to know what it was so that we might present for the consideration of the House amendments which would be sufficient to put it into operation? Why is it necessary to take four years to build the boats and to increase the personnel? Admiral Billard says it is only a question of appropriation, and that if given the money he can recondition boats within nine months from the time the money is given. Ah, gentlemen, there can be but one answer.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRISP. Did I understand the gentleman to say that Doctor Doran, when testifying before the Appropriations Committee, said he required additional funds, that he had made out a program as to how those appropriations should be used but that no recommendation was sent in by the Budget and, therefore, he could not furnish the Committee on Appropriations with a detailed statement.

Mr. BYRNS. I was referring to Admiral Billard, of the Coast Guard, rather than to Doctor Doran.

Mr. CRISP. But the statement as to Admiral Billard is correct, as I understand?

Mr. BYRNS. It is correct; but in order that there may be no doubt about it let me read to the committee just what the admiral said in response to questions. It will be found on page 221, and following pages, of the hearings, and I trust that Members on both sides of this Chamber will get a copy of these hearings and read this testimony of Admiral Billard. Admiral Billard stated:

Admiral BILLARD. I have submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury a plan covering additional resources for the Coast Guard, covering several years in the future, which, in my judgment, will meet our needs.

Mr. BYRNS. Does that plan cover the immediate needs with reference to boats needed and additional personnel?

Admiral BILLARD. It covers all the needs of the Coast Guard with respect to boats and personnel over a number of years. In other words, it covers what we think is a well-rounded plan.

Mr. BYRNS. How soon, if that plan were carried out, would you be enabled to do as effective work as might be possible in the prevention of smuggling?

Admiral BILLARD. If that plan were approved, and the necessary funds afforded, I should say in about four years.

Then he was asked questions as to whether or not he was having any difficulty or would have any difficulty in enlisting personnel, and he stated he would not.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman whether the admiral stated how much money he thought should be appropriated?

Mr. BYRNS. No; the admiral did not. He was asked repeatedly to say, and he said he was unable to state. He did not have the plan before him, but the plan he submitted and which was then in the Treasury Department showed how much money would be required for that purpose.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. Has not the Secretary of the Treasury since then asked for additional funds?

Mr. BYRNS. He has asked for about $2,700,000, and I will come to that in a few moments.

Again, on this subject, I asked him—

If the plan which I understand you have proposed to the Secretary of the Treasury should be adopted and carried out as proposed, are we to understand that it would be four years before you would be in a position to effectively enforce this law?

Admiral BILLARD. In order to completely stop the smuggling of liquor from the sea, in order to completely stop it, the Coast Guard resources would have to be increased. Now, the time that it would take to sufficiently increase the resources of the Coast Guard is dependent upon appropriations and the general methods followed. That is not for me to say.

Then he was asked:

Of course, that is not a question for you; but it is a question for you to use such appropriations as are made in the most effective and diligent manner. I want to say that I for one know that you are doing that, or, rather, that I have the fullest confidence in the fact that you are doing it. Now, if appropriations, or sufficient appropriations, were placed at your disposal to increase your personnel and to provide you with a sufficient number of boats to carry on this work, do I understand that it would be four years before we could expect that enforcement which you anticipate could be secured, if your plan should be carried out?

Admiral BILLARD. No, sir; I can not say that, because, I would like to explain. That plan that I submitted to the Secretary was predicated upon what seemed to me an orderly and regular increase in the Coast Guard forces. If there were placed at the disposal of the Coast Guard fully adequate appropriations, then the acquisition of those additional vessels would simply depend on the time it would take to build them.

Now, you gentlemen know that a majority of the boats used by the Coast Guard are patrol boats. They are comparatively small boats that can be constructed in a very short length of time. True, he has some cruising cutters used in the revenue service and also, to some extent, in this service, which he says takes 18 months to build; but the torpedo boats, and there are hundreds of them along the James River in Virginia, he says could be reconditioned in nine months.

Now, why are we not in a position to give him this money?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Right there and before the gentleman leaves that point, will he yield to state to the committee the efforts that the gentleman from Tennessee made to get placed in the record the recommendations that Admiral Billard had made to the Secretary? The gentleman will find it on page 224 of the hearings.

Mr. BYRNS. Yes. I will say in response to the question of the gentleman from Alabama that I asked him this question, Admiral Billard having stated:

I submitted it to the Assistant Secretary, who is my immediate superior, possibly two weeks ago. I do not recall exactly what day.

Mr. BYRNS. Are you at liberty to put that plan in the record or to furnish it to the committee?

Admiral BILLARD. I do not feel that I personally am at liberty to do that. If the committee desires it in the record, I hope very much they will address their request to the Secretary of the Treasury. I have no reason or right to state that my plan meets the approval of my superior officers.

And later on I asked the chairman in charge of the bill to summon the Secretary of the Treasury or the Undersecretary or the Assistant Secretary in order that he might bring that plan up and put it in the record, so that you gentlemen and the country could know just what he proposed to do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What did he do?

Mr. BYRNS. And he declined to do it, as the record shows.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I have here an article taken from the Evening Sun, of Baltimore, of yesterday, in which it is stated that in October, 1927, Dr. James M. Doran, Federal Prohibition Commissioner, made a public statement and said in part:

The national prohibition law has fully justified itself as a salutary law. Rum row no longer exists.

Then in a speech at Baltimore he said:

We are no longer bothered by large imports from overseas.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Did he not also say it would cost $300,000,000 to enforce the law?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think he said that on another occasion. Now, either Doctor Doran is wrong or Admiral Billard is wrong. Admiral Billard is asking for a very large appropriation to enforce the law, and Doctor Doran in this article says that rum row no longer exists.

Mr. BYRNS. Doctor Doran, the gentleman will recall, was quoted in the papers throughout the country not many weeks ago as stating that he would have to have $300,000,000 to enforce the law, plainly admitting he did not have the money, and the very fact that he has not sufficient money is verified by the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury now sends an estimate to Congress asking for $2,700,000 more. The question naturally arises as to why they waited seven years to make this request. Why did they wait until forced to do so by public sentiment which was aroused by the amendment of Senator HARRIS?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Why does he talk to the people that way when he knows he can not enforce the law even with $300,000,000?

Mr. BYRNS. I am not prepared to say he can not enforce it; but what I am contending, and I happen to be on different sides of the question from the gentleman from Maryland, but I am sure that he, as well as myself, wants to see this law enforced, if it can be enforced, and what I am contending is that Congress ought to make sufficient appropriations and that those in charge of the enforcement of this law ought to tell the Congress how much they need, so that we can have an honest enforcement of the law. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNELL. The gentleman can not even get his own committee to go along with him.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. GREEN. Is it not a matter of fact that all these underlings when they find that their view is in conflict with their wet Secretary of the Treasury are immediately given orders by Mr. Mellon to be still and let him see that these wet leaders here in the Congress prevent the rest of us from even expressing ourselves on it? The whole trouble is that Mr. Mellon is wet and they are all afraid of him and dare not cross him.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not know what orders have been given, but I do know some of them are mighty still.

Mr. GREEN. Look over to the right of us and the gentleman will see to whom the orders have been imparted.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNS. For a brief question.

Mr. SCHAFER. It has been stated on the floor of the House that Doctor Doran indicated that $300,000,000 was needed to properly enforce the prohibtion law. Is the gentleman willing to vote an appropriation out of the Federal Treasury at this time of $300,000,000 to comply with Doctor Doran's request?

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to the gentleman that I think I have the reputation in this House of standing for economy, but I will vote for any sum, however large, if it is necessary to inforce this law as long as it stands on the statute books. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Why does not the gentleman offer an amendment to increase the sum to $300,000,000?

Mr. BYRNS. If the gentleman will be patient an amendment will be offered. I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if he will vote for it.

Mr. SCHAFER. I will say to the gentleman that I will not vote for such a monstrosity—there are other provisions of the Constitution which are just as sacred as the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. BYRNS. There can be only one explanation of the gentleman's position, and that is that he does not believe in the enforcement of the law.

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. GILBERT. I would like to call attention to the fact that during the campaign the President elect was pictured as a genius for organization and big operations, that he had fed Europe, and so forth. Such a man would be peculiarly qualified to undertake the duties conferred upon the President by the amendment of Senator HARRIS. He could render no greater service, but those who put forth the claim now seem to be running from the opportunity to see them materialize.

Mr. BYRNS. I thank the gentleman for his statement.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Do I understand that the recommendation of the President for an extra appropriation of funds has been followed by the committee, and that one of the items is for an additional $150,000 for the Department of Justice? It seems to be notorious, and is so stated in the press, that the Department of Justice has used under-cover parties, spies, and courtesans to entrap men. I take it that the gentleman from Tennessee would not be in favor of such methods?

Mr. BYRNS. Not such methods as the gentleman describes.

Mr. CELLER. Is it not notorious that such methods are being used?

Mr. BYRNS. I am not prepared to say.

Mr. CELLER. The newspapers report that such is the situation throughout the country.

Mr. BYRNS. Let me say this: The gentleman says that the Appropriations Committee accepted this estimate. That is a mistake. These estimates were never seen by the Appropriations Committee until after the bill was prepared and sent to the Government Printing Office. Why were they not sent to the committee before the hearings were closed and some of us given the opportunity to get the facts as to how much more was really needed? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

TICKETS FOR INAUGURAL CEREMONIES

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the Members of the House that the tickets for the inaugural ceremonies will be found at the Sergeant at Arms' office on Monday morning. There will be an envelope which will contain 7 tickets for the grand stand on the east front of the Capitol, also 1 guest ticket to the Senate gallery and a ticket for the Member himself, also 2 tickets for the stand by the House Office Building. It will be absolutely necessary for each Member to have that special ticket for himself in order to be admitted to the Senate. That is done for the protection of Members, and is important for Members to keep this in mind and not leave this special ticket for himself at home.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. How about tickets for the stand on New Jersey Avenue near the House Office Building?

Mr. SNELL. There will be two of those tickets in the envelope.

Mr. GREEN. Will the parade pass the Capitol?

Mr. SNELL. The parade will go across the Capitol Plaza.

SECOND DEFICIENCY BILL, 1929

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I wish to call the attention of the committee to some of the more important items of this deficiency appropriation bill, but before doing so I shall first reply briefly to what was said here yesterday by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], with reference to the conduct of the conferees on the first deficiency appropriation bill, which has failed. The gentleman from Alabama waxed up into righteous indignation over the conduct of the majority of the conferees. Having exhausted all of his own vocabulary, he borrowed a word from another, which he could hardly pronounce, and I dare say he could not define. I do not see anything extraordinary in the conduct of the conferees with reference to this first deficiency appropriation bill.

The gentleman stated a portion of what occurred in this House, but he did not state the whole truth. All of the questions that he read from the RECORD propounded to me by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] and others were absolutely correct. He did not state, however, that all of this transpired during a colloquy upon this floor with reference to sending this deficiency appropriation bill to conference, by unanimous consent. The gentleman spoke of our act as being an unusual one, and possibly without precedent. Was not the conduct of the objectors on the Democratic side of the aisle with reference to sending that bill to conference by unanimous consent most unusual? It may have occurred before, but if so, I do not remember it. Whenever unanimous consent has been asked to send a bill of this character to conference, it has been granted. Gentlemen on the Democratic side of the aisle refused to follow the usual and ordinary custom, and that was a most unusual procedure; and in answer to what I said at that time with reference to bringing these disputed questions back to this House, had gentlemen on the Democratic side permitted the bill to go to conference under unanimous consent, it would have come back, and they would have been given an opportunity to voice their will and sentiment with reference to this particular amendment. But they elected to take another course. They elected to force this bill to conference through the rule route, another most unusual thing. When that rule was presented they claim they had no opportunity to vote directly on this question. They had two opportunities and availed themselves of one and neglected to avail themselves of the other. Mr. GARRETT, the gentleman from Tennessee, spent 10 minutes of time when that rule was being considered in explaining to the Members of this House what their vote would amount to, stating that the question would arise on the previous question, but if the previous question was sustained, it would be a vote against the $24,000,000 amendment, that if they desired that $24,000,000 amendment or any other amendment to be made, they should vote the previous question down. And now they say that there was not a direct vote upon the proposition! To the tune of 240 to 141, this House voiced its sentiment in adopting the previous question and saying that it did not want this amendment.

Again they had another opportunity. The rule provided that there should be one motion to recommit. Had they not been overwhelmed by the vote on the previous question, a motion to recommit would have been made, and I am informed that the motion was prepared; but the vote was so overwhelmingly against the proponents of this $24,000,000 appropriation that they dared not, or, at least omitted, to take advantage of their opportunity.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. Did not the Speaker, in answer to a parliamentary inquiry made by myself, rule that a motion to recommit that rule providing for the sending of this bill to conference would not be in order.

Mr. WOOD. He did not. The gentleman from Georgia was trying to get unanimous consent to obviate the rule; but the consent that he asked for was out of order, and, of course, the Chair overruled it, and the gentleman will admit that the rule itself provided for a motion to recommit.

Mr. CRISP. I did not know that the gentleman from Indiana was in here at the moment, because I know the gentleman always wants to be accurate. There was some question as to whether a motion to recommit a rule from the Committee on Rules providing for the consideration of a bill was in order; but before the debate started I propounded a parliamentary inquiry to the Speaker, and the Speaker kindly heard me on it before he ruled; and then the Speaker ruled that the motion to recommit was not in order, the Speaker basing it on the very thing the gentleman has just cited—that if the House wanted to get a vote on the matter it would vote down the previous question, and then could amend the rule, but that if the previous question was ordered, and the rule came up, a motion to recommit would not be in order.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman may be correct, but what he states now emphasizes the fact that this body was well informed of the fact that if they wanted to amend this proposal, or if they wanted to adopt this amendment, they should vote the previous question down, so that no one here can say that he did not have an opportunity to vote upon the direct question.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. I can not yield now. All that was said with reference to bringing this report back to this committee was wiped out by that direct vote. There was no necessity for it, because this body, by vote of 240 to 141, said, "We will not adopt this amendment." The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] yesterday asked whether the conferees thought gentlemen on the other side were invertebrates, that they would submit to our action here if any amendment were offered on this bill. He asked if we were silly enough to believe they would not resent it. I ask whether he thinks the conferees were silly enough not to know that this House has already voiced its sentiment with reference to the matter and that it would have been trifling with the intelligence of this House to bring it back.

The gentleman from Alabama further said that he believed in the orderly procedure in the House. I take it that if he is logical and consistent, he also believes in the orderly processes of government, applied as well to our executive departments as to the deliberations and conduct in this House?

If that be so, gentlemen ought to be supporting that consistent and orderly way of making appropriations when the estimates come here from the department, whose business it is to know and to present the facts with reference to the amounts of money they can use.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman feels that way about these large appropriations. What I do not understand is why he is not consistent with reference to all appropriations. I had a bill passed through this House twice, and it went to the Senate and was passed in the Senate, and it went to the President and was signed by him; and then an estimate came back to the committee for the amount of $372, and although it had been approved by the House and the Senate and the President the gentleman's committee refused to put it in an appropriation bill. Was that consistent?

Mr. WOOD. I will say to the gentleman that one of the purposes of the committee is to save the Treasury from some mistakes that the House sometimes makes and the Senate sometimes makes and mistakes which the President sometimes makes.

Now, then, gentlemen, we are going to give you an opportunity to say whether you are really the friends of prohibition, as you profess yourselves to be, an opportunity to see whether or not you will vote for the appropriations asked for in this bill, submitted by the constituted authorities in the regular way, will be afforded.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WOOD. No; I do not yield. I sat here with all the patience of Job yesterday and listened to the gentleman's diatribe, purposely made to deceive, without interrupting him.

Mr. BYRNS. I understand there is nothing in this bill for prohibition. I understand the gentleman is going to offer an amendment.

Mr. WOOD. That is what I say. You will be given an opportunity to voice your sentiments and determine whether or not you are going to make appropriations in an orderly way, as the gentleman from Alabama insists they should be made. On February 21, 1929, the President transmitted to Congress supplemental estimates in connection with prohibition enforcement. These estimates were forwarded and are printed in House Documents Nos. 604, 605, and 606, as follows:

House Document No. 604, Department of Justice:
Pay of special assistant attorneys	$121,600
Miscellaneous expenses of courts	28,800
Total	150,400
House Document No. 605, Civil Service Commission:
Salaries	120,000
Traveling expenses	26,500
Contingent expenses	3,500
Total	150,000
House Document No. 606, Treasury Department:
Bureau of Prohibition	1,719,654
Customs Service	707,860
Total	2,427,514

These supplemental estimates did not arrive until after the bill had been prepared by the subcommittee. Authority was given by the full Committee on Appropriations for their submission to the House as amendments to this bill when they should be transmitted. I will say to the committee that the subcommittee in considering this bill increased the sums to what we understood to be their demands. We asked them before they came to settle upon the final figure to consider well the amount they needed in order to complete the work they had on hand within the present calendar year, not in the fiscal year, and they told us that to do that, they would have to have force and money enough for traveling expenses and to make the examinations necessary to secure the right character of men.

I want to say right here that the gentleman from Tennessee stated that Admiral Billard said it was a question of ships necessary to decide this question and prevent smuggling. In my opinion ships without the right character of men are worth less than nothing, and in my opinion if this law is to be enforced, the personnel element is the one we have to look after. It is a question of men. If the appropriation already made had been properly applied and the business properly done by the right character of men, there would not be as much complaint to-day as there is.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman explain further about that? Mr. Mellon appoints them. He must select them.

Mr. WOOD. Yes. He must select them, but he can not pick out the men of the character and caliber that he would like to have. He must appoint such men as apply. There are 5,000 of them waiting now who have filed applications. All must be examined, and in order that there may be no lack on the part of the Civil Service Commission, the increased appropriation was recommended by the subcommittee and will be augmented by the recommendation that comes from the Budget.

House Document No. 606 provides for the Bureau of Prohibition $1,719,654, you will notice, and for the Customs Service $707,860, making a grand total of $2,727,914.

Amendments will be offered to the bill for the purposes I have enumerated, and in order that they may appear collectively, because the activities to which they relate are under different departments and in different places in the bill, I shall set them forth here.

Under the Civil Service Commission there are three amendments—one for salaries, one for travel expenses, and one for contingent expenses, as follows:

On page 6, line 17, strike out "$121,500" and insert "$161,000."

On page 6, line 21, strike out "$32,000" and insert "$34,500."

On page 6, line 26, strike out "$3,000" and insert "$4,500."

Under the Department of Justice, on page 46, after line 6, insert the following:

"Special assistant attorneys: For compensation and traveling expenses of assistants to the Attorney General and to United States district attorneys employed by the Attorney General to aid in special cases, including the same objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Department of Justice for the fiscal year 1929, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $121,600."

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman tell us about the relationship of the salary increases that you have incorporated in the bill?

Mr. WOOD. That item will be offered on page 46, after line 6.

The amendment for miscellaneous expenses, United States courts, will be offered on page 47, after line 3. Under the Treasury Department, on page 60, after line 6, an amendment will be offered providing for the sum of $707,860 for collecting the revenue from customs. On page 60, after line 23, an amendment will be offered which will give $1,719,654 to the Bureau of Prohibition. These amendments aggregate $2,621,414, which is $106,560 less than the sum submitted in the three estimate documents referred to. This difference is due to the fact that the $106,560, which is under the Civil Service Commission, had already been placed in the bill by the committee prior to the submission of the estimates. The bill, therefore, if amended as these amendments propose, will contain all of the money that the estimates submitted in House Documents 604, 605, and 606 ask for prohibition purposes under the Civil Service Commission, the Department of Justice, and the Treasury Department.

The bill as amended for the Civil Service Commission will carry a total of $200,000, to be used for civil-service examination of candidates for appointments under the Bureau of Prohibition. That sum, together with funds previously carried for the commission for the next fiscal year, will give an amount which the commission believes will enable them to recruit the necessary force to complete the character examinations of some 5,000 persons and make certifications to the Bureau of Prohibition, so that the task may be finished by the end of the calendar year 1929. It will also furnish what the commission believes to be the greatest amount which can be used in the shortest period of time consistent with effectively accomplishing the purposes to be sought.

The funds provided for the Department of Justice will place a special assistant to the Attorney General to furnish legal advice to the prohibition administrator in each of the 16 prohibition districts which are not now provided with such a special assistant. It will also furnish stenographic assistance to the special assistants so provided.

The appropriation for the Bureau of Prohibition will provide for 25 additional senior prohibition investigators, 75 special agents, and 270 prohibition agents, covering their salaries and travel and other incidental expenses. In addition, the amount recommended will grant $50,000 for dissemination of information in connection with appeals for law enforcement and observance, and $178,154 to cover increase of salaries incident to the classification and reorganization of the prohibition forces during the current year.

The additional appropriation for the Customs Service covers 5 additional special agents, 10 additional customs agents, 203 customs-patrol inspectors, 17 inspectors, and 36 guards, together with the necessary expenses incident to the operation of this additional force.

Now, gentlemen, this appropriation bill is divided into three parts and under three separate titles. The first title includes the items of real deficiencies and supplemental estimates. The second title includes what we will have to appropriate in order to comply with the provisions of the Welch bill. The third title includes all that was in the first deficiency bill as reported from the House, together with certain of the amendments made by the Senate, to which your conferees agreed.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. Referring to the Welch bill, does the gentleman think it was fair for the Appropriations Committee to take that bill away from the Civil Service Committee, where it had been deliberated?

Mr. WOOD. I wish to say to the gentleman that I am glad he asked that question. It was not the purpose to take it away from the Civil Service Committee, but the fact being perfectly apparent to most of the Members of this Congress that there will be no legislative bill passed at this session, the committee felt that in order to protect the Treasury of the United States and, if you please, in order to protect those who are not sufficiently provided for as against those who have been more than abundantly provided for, it was necessary to put this limitation in this bill. If, perchance, any bill should be passed before this Congress adjourns, it will take the place of that which is contained in this bill. This is simply an emergency measure, and we would have been derelict in the duty we owe to the country had we not put this provision in the bill.

Mr. CELLER. I am raising this question not so much to take exception to the giving of relief to certain employees; we all agree that should be done, but the bill which came out of the Civil Service Committee was a comprehensive bill; it was drafted after much deliberation and after a great many hearings, so it seems to me to be a pity that it should be shot to pieces in this way by the action of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. WOOD. This action, I will say to the gentleman, has nothing to do with the bill to which the gentleman refers. As I have tried to tell the gentleman this action was taken because of the apprehension and the fear that this committee had that the bill the gentleman is now talking about will not be passed at this session. I wish some bill might be passed in order that this troublesome question might be definitely settled. We all know that the Welch bill as it has been construed by the Comptroller General does not represent the intent of this Congress. We all know it was never the intent of Congress that those in the higher grades should jump not only from one grade but jump from one grade clear into the top of the next grade. [Applause.] Under that interpretation of the bill hundreds have had their salaries increased all the way from $500 to $2,000 and $2,500, while the poor devil that we were led to believe this bill was intended to help only receives a little pittance of $60 or $120 at the most. I think if there ever was a bill that passed this House under false pretenses and, if you please, without regard to the desires and designs of the Members of this House, it was this bill, for we were all led to believe it was for the purpose of helping the poorly paid employees and not for the purpose of increasing the salaries of those who were already receiving very respectable salaries.

TITLE I

The appropriations recommended under Title I (pp. 2 to 103), the items submitted for consideration in the second deficiency bill, total $78,703,339.85. This sum is $2,634,340.51 in excess of the Budget estimates submitted. This excess is due practically entirely to increases made by the committee in the Budget estimates for public buildings and will be explained in detail later under this title.

The number of items contained under the title is large, but the bulk of them is due to new laws or treaties, to cover unforeseen emergencies, to carry out the judgments of Federal courts, to provide for the payment of claims allowed by the General Accounting Office, to provide appropriations for purposes the necessity for which had not arisen in time to present in connection with the regular annual bills, and to cover deficiencies in previous appropriations. The amount due to deficiencies actually incurred is small, and represents in the main what is termed "legal deficiencies."

A few large items constitute the greater part of the total under Title I. The following are the principal items:

Army and Navy pensions	$19,000,000.00
Railway transportation of mail, due to decision of Interstate Commerce Commission in increasing rates	15,000,000.00
Carrying mail by air under contract	1,000,000.00
Rental and other allowances to fourth-class postmasters	1,250,000.00
Fees to special-delivery messengers, Postal Service	750,000.00
Ocean mail contracts (Jones-White Act)	3,400,000.00
Marine Corps, additional expenses on account of expeditionary forces in Nicaragua and China	3,705,000.00
Public buildings construction under act of May 25, 1926 (Elliott Act), as amended	11,360,500.00
Army Air Corps, to cover contracts for new planes authorized by the War Department appropriation act for the current fiscal year	3,250,000.00
Army ammunition storage under the program adopted at the last session of Congress	1,050,403.00
National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, on account of increased population and on account of increases in compensation due to the Welch Act	1,199,100.00
Support of United States prisoners, including purchase of a building in New York to serve as a United States jail	1,284,875.00
Fighting fires in the national forests, to reimburse current appropriations for expenses incurred during the past season	1,200,000.00
Customs Service, to cover increased salaries under the Bacharach Act	900,000.00
Vocational education in agriculture and home economics under a new law	595,000.00
Establishing Weather Bureau stations and strengthening existing stations to provide more frequent weather reports to aviators along airways	350,000.00
Completing the Coolidge Dam and power plant, Gila River Reservation, Ariz	325,500.00
Enlargement of Avalon Reservoir, Carlsbad reclamation project, New Mexico	650,000.00
Continuing construction, Vale reclamation project, Oregon	560,000.00
Pay of classified employees of the Naval Establishment on account of the Welch Act	442,680.00
Bureau of Engraving and Printing and public debt service on account of new paper-currency program (small-sized notes)	309,500.00
National Guard, armory drill pay	675,000.00
Judgments and audited claims	3,964,593.48

The committee has effected a number of changes in the Budget estimates either by increase or decrease. The Budget estimates for the Civil Service Commission are increased from a total of $50,000 to $156,500. The amount covers examinations of candidates for appointments in the prohibition service. The committee ascertained that with the $50,000 to supplement the increases granted in the regular annual bill the examinations for this service would be dragged out over 21 months and have the effect of losing the opportunity of securing many persons who had passed the examination but who would not wait that length of time for final certification and appointment. The committee requested the Civil Service Commission to furnish an estimate of the amount of money required to dispose of the pending cases in the shortest period of time consistent with effectiveness, and has been told that a total of $156,500 is needed in lieu of the $50,000 recommended. With the sum of $156,500 the statement is made to the committee that the pending cases can be brought to completion by end of the present calendar year. The nature of the character examination given to applicants for prohibition work is such that to hasten that kind of investigation unduly would have the effect of undoing what was sought to be accomplished by placing prohibition appointees under civil-service regulation. The great problem in disposing of prohibition cases is the securing and training of examiners competent to make the character examinations and as the commission itself must recruit and train its own personnel before it can pass upon the prohibition personnel it will be seen that the task of making some 5,000 character examinations is one that can not be completed in an ordinary routine fashion.

The sum of $560,000, not included in the Budget estimates for this bill, has been recommended for the continuation of construction on the Vale reclamation project in Oregon. This amount was included in the estimates for the regular Interior Department appropriation bill for the next fiscal year and excluded therefrom pending a better understanding of the cooperation to be expected from owners of private land to be developed under the project. The Director of Reclamation believes that conditions are now satisfactory, and in that belief the committee has restored the amount of the previous Budget estimate.

An item of $60,000, not included in the Budget estimates, is recommended for the continuation and completion of the topographic surveys of the boundaries of the proposed Great Smoky Mountains National Park in Tennessee and North Carolina. Work is progressing during the present fiscal year under a previous appropriation of $65,000 and will be halted in an uncompleted state unless further funds are provided at this session. As these topographic surveys are essential to a determination of the boundaries of the park it is essential that the surveys proceed expeditiously so that the donors of the land for the new park may know the situation and the ultimate establishment of the park itself be not delayed by this factor preliminary to its consummation.

A provision is included in the bill authorizing those members of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of the Seventieth Congress, who are Members elect to the Seventy-first Congress, or a majority of them, between the adjournment of this Congress and the convening of the next Congress, to hold hearings and gather information in connection with the preparation of legislation for farm relief. This paragraph is similar to the action taken in the first deficiency bill, and now included in this bill, with reference to the Committee on Ways and Means.

In connection with the restoration of the Lee mansion, the Budget estimate has been increased from $61,500 to $90,000. The Budget recommendation contemplated only work on the mansion and the auxiliary buildings and contemplated nothing at this time for furnishings. The increase which the committee has placed in the bill, $28,500, will permit a start to be made on the acquisition of furnishings of the period as the act contemplated. Provision is also made that gifts may be accepted and that the entire scheme of restoration and refurnishing shall be subject to the approval of the Commission of Fine Arts.

I want to say in passing that a wrong impression has gone out all over the country with reference to the purpose of this restoration. Members have received telegrams protesting against it. The impression has gone out over the country that it is for the purpose of aiding the society known as the Daughters of Confederacy to reestablish this house and that the bill was introduced for that purpose in the first place.

As a matter of fact, the bill authorizing this expenditure and authorizing this repair and this refurnishing was introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] and its main purpose was to repair and refurnish this house so that it will not be a wreck as it is fast coming to be, and at the same time perpetuate throughout time a type of colonial dwelling that is fast disappearing. The Government of the United States owns it and some sort of repair must be made there, and this is one of the lasting monuments, if you please, of an age that is gone, and in my opinion we would have been neglectful if we longer delayed the improvement which, of necessity, must be made, and I regret that there is still a prejudice in this country, even though far-fetched as this is, that would stand in the way of keeping and preserving and protecting a memorial of this character. [Applause.]

Congress at the last session adopted a comprehensive plan, after mature consideration, for the removal and storage of ammunition supplies of the Army and Navy which are located near populous centers. The Budget estimates requested $1,402,344 for a continuation of such storage under the War Department. Involved in the War Department estimate was a proposal to change the plan of last session in so far as it related to storage in the Hawaiian Islands by transferring the storage from the Fort Shafter Gulch to Salt Lake Crater. The change involves an added cost to the storage plan in Hawaii of approximately $800,000. The committee did not feel inclined, with the rather limited information it received as to the cost of storage at this new point, to adopt and approve at this time a project of such increased magnitude. Accordingly, there has been eliminated from the estimate for the bill the sum of $351,941 which represents the amount included in the estimate toward this transfer from the gulch to the crater. If the storage at the crater ultimately is provided, it will mean an item later on to include something in the neighborhood of $1,150,000.

Special attention is directed to an appropriation of $48,000, pursuant to a Budget estimate, for repairs, improvements, and maintenance of the property of the Government at Mount Weather, Va. The purpose of this sum is to recondition and make habitable, for use of the President, certain of the buildings on the reservation to the end that he may have a secluded place adjacent to Washington where he may get occasional respite from the summer heat of the city and from the press of public business. The appropriation contains authority for the transfer of the property from the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture to the Office of Public Buildings and Parks and provides for the repeal of an existing statute which authorizes the sale of the property by the Secretary of Agriculture.

In connection with the construction of public buildings under section 5 of the act of May 25, 1926 (Elliott Act), as amended, the committee has increased the Budget estimates from $9,045,500 to $11,195,500, or by the sum of $2,150,000. At the time the Treasury appropriation bill for the next fiscal year was presented to the House the committee advised the membership that supplemental appropriations would be transmitted for this deficiency bill, aggregating about $12,000,000, in order to cover projects under study at that time but not ready for submission to Congress. The $12,000,000, together with the $23,000,000 carried in the Treasury bill would have constituted the amount of $35,000,000 then approved by the Budget for public-building allotments for the next year. The estimates when transmitted for this bill aggregated only $9,045,500. The difference between the approximately $12,000,000 and the amount of these Budget estimates represented deductions and alterations effected by the Budget in the recommendations of the Joint Departmental Committee on Public Buildings. The program of buildings submitted in the Budget estimates involved 96 projects, with total limits of cost of $46,760,500. These projects may be classified as follows:

84 new projects with aggregate limit of cost	$44,327,500
8 former projects involving increases in previous limits of cost	2,613,000
3 former projects modifying previous authorization without increasing the cost
Total increase	46,940,500
1 former project involving reduction in the previous limit of cost	180,000
Total (96 projects) limit of cost	46,760,500

The Budget had eliminated entirely from the recommendations of the joint departmental committee the following four projects:

	Limit of cost	Estimate of appropriations
Cedar Rapids, Iowa, post office	$725,000	$250,000
New York assay office	3,765,000	1,500,000
Minneapolis, Minn., postal substation and office building	1,200,000	225,000
Rutland, Vt., post office, etc	330,000	50,000
Total	6,020,000	2,025,000

In addition to the foregoing eliminations there were further Budget changes in the joint committee's recommendations, either by reductions in the limits of cost of the new projects that were approved or by the elimination of increases requested in limits of cost of projects previously authorized. The following is the list of such further Budget changes:

Other Budget changes in recommendations of Joint Departmental Committee on Public Buildings

Project	Budget reductions in limits of cost of projects included in the Budget submission	Additional limits of cost of projects previously authorized eliminated from Budget submission	Reduction in appropriations for projects requested in the Budget submission
Altoona, Pa., post office, etc	$24,000
Appleton, Wis., post office, etc	10,000
Baltimore, Md., marine hospital	157,500
Boston, Mass., immigration station	10,000		$10,000
Brockton, Mass., post office	20,000
Carbondale, Ill., post office, etc	15,000		10,000
Corvallis, Oreg., post office, etc	15,000
Denver, Colo., customhouse, etc		$150,000
Dodge City, Kans., post office, etc	15,000		5,000
Framingham, Mass., post office	20,000
Kokomo, Ind., post office	15,000		10,000
La Fayette, Ind., post office, etc	15,000		10,000
Little Rock, Ark., post office, etc	135,000
Mason City, Iowa, post office, etc	35,000
New York Appraisers Stores (old)	255,000		55,000
New York Marine Hospital	85,000
New York Post Office Annex	500,000		500,000
Ogden, Utah, post office, etc	25,000
Parkersburg, W. Va., post office, etc	15,000
Peekskill, N. Y., post office	15,000
Pomona, Calif., post office, etc	5,000		15,000
Portland, Me., post office, etc		100,000
Prescott, Ariz., post office, etc	15,000
Sabine Pass, Tex., quarantine station	25,000
Sacramento, Calif., post office, etc	50,000		25,000
San Francisco, Calif., office building	50,000
Sterling, Colo., post office, etc		105,000
Urbana, Ohio, post office, etc	10,000
Waterbury, Conn., post office, etc	50,000		50,000
Total	1,586,500	355,000	690,000

The committee went very fully into the joint departmental committee's original recommendations and into the changes made therein by the Budget. It held as extensive hearings as the lateness of the submission would permit with the representatives of the two departments and with the representative of the Bureau of the Budget. After considering the evidence, the committee has restored the four projects eliminated by the Bureau of the Budget, namely, Cedar Rapids, New York Assay Office, Minneapolis, and Rutland. There has also been restored all of the foregoing cuts in appropriations and limits of cost with the following exceptions:

The additional appropriations for Carbondale, Ill., Kokomo, Ind., Dodge City, Kans., and Sacramento, Calif., are deemed not essential at this time and the Budget eliminations in those cases are followed.

The deductions from the limit of cost for the New York Marine Hospital of $85,000 and for the quarantine station at Sabine Pass, Tex., of $25,000 are also followed.

The deductions of $5,000 in the limit of cost and $15,000 in the appropriation for the building at Pomona, Calif., are concurred in, as are also the deductions of $500,000 each in the limit of cost and appropriation for the New York Post Office Annex.

The Budget elimination of $150,000 additional cost in the case of the Denver, Colo., office building is also followed so that the building may be constructed of brick with stone trim instead of a stone-faced building as the departmental committee's recommendation provided.

A number of projects transmitted with the approval of both the departmental committee and the Budget have been modified by the Committee on Appropriations. The following indicate the changes which have been made in such cases:

The increase in the limit cost of the building at Bartlesville, Okla., from $175,000 to $300,000, to provide accommodations for courts, has been eliminated in the belief that the court business is not sufficient at this time to justify the proposed enlargement in the cost.

Provision is made at Clovis, N. Mex., for acquisition of a site either by donation or purchase instead of by donation only as the recommendation of the joint committee and the Budget provided.

In the case of Hamilton, Ohio, the committee has effected a change by putting the project in the alternative and leaving to the Secretary of the Treasury the determination of the purchase of a new site and erection of a new building at $350,000, or the acquisition of more land and remodeling and extension of the present building at a cost of $200,000. The sale value of the old property is such that there is between the two proposals only a difference of $75,000. The departmental committee favors putting the project in the alternative.

In the case of Hoquiam, Wash., the limit of cost is increased from $100,000 to $135,000 so as to provide for additional space requirements of the Indian Service in accordance with additional data received from the Interior Department since the submission was made. The increase is based upon information furnished by the departmental committee and is concurred in by them.

In the case of the border-inspection station for immigration and customs at Derby Line, Vt., the committee has placed a requirement that postal facilities shall be included in the structure, if that can be done without increasing the limit of cost. Rental for postal facilities now paid is $1,500 per annum, and the station is only a short distance from the point where the inspection station must be located. It would be desirable to include the post office if it can be accomplished without adding to the cost of the inspection station.

The committee has also eliminated the proposal submitted for a change in the method of providing for additional facilities for Federal activities at Salt Lake City, Utah.

The limits of cost and appropriations recommended in the bill, after reflecting all of the changes effected by the Committee on Appropriations, are as follows:

Projects	Limit of cost	Appropriations recommended
88 new projects	$51,479,000	$11,195,000
7 projects involving increase in former limits of cost	2,693,000
2 projects modifying previous authorizations without increasing the limit of cost
Total	54,197,000	11,195,500
1 project involving reduction in previous limit of cost	180,000
Total, 98 projects	54,017,000	11,195,500

The net effect of the committee's recommendations is to increase the Budget recommendations on limits of cost from $46,760,500 to $54,017,000, or in the sum of $7,256,500, and to increase the total of the recommended appropriations by $2,150,000.

The act of May 25, 1926 (Elliott Act), as amended, authorized $200,000,000 as the limit of cost for buildings outside of the District of Columbia. Prior to this bill there had been authorized 175 projects with total limits of cost of $121,283,000. The recommendations of this bill increase the number of projects to 263 and the total limit of cost to $175,300,000. This leaves $24,700,000 remaining in the $200,000,000 for additional projects yet to be submitted for authorization. However, in this connection there should be noted that wherever sales of existing public buildings and sites are consummated in places where it is not desired to erect the new building upon the old site, any excess of such sale receipts over and above the cost of the new project is to be credited to the $200,000,000 of authorization. It is estimated by the Supervising Architect's Office that such excesses on the projects already adopted and those provided for by this bill should approach the figure of $48,000,000. The possibility, therefore, exists that in addition to the $24,700,000 of unconsumed authorization in the $200,000,000, there will become available from time to time during the life of the public building program, additional authorizations resulting from the sale of old buildings and land which may aggregate $48,000,000 by the end of the program. The total of $24,700,000 remaining in the $200,000,000, plus the accretion possible from sales, now estimated at $48,000,000, indicate that between now and the completion of the program there would be available total authorizations under which limits of cost may be fixed by Congress for new projects or for modification of projects already adopted to the extent of $72,700,000. The accuracy of the $48,000,000 is dependent upon the relationship which the appraised value of the structures to be sold bears to the actual receipts from the sale when it finally is accomplished.

TITLE II

The committee recommends in Title II (pp. 103–152) of the bill the appropriations required on account of the act of May 28, 1928 (Welch Act), amending the classification act of 1923. As Congress adjourned on the day after this act became a law, no opportunity was presented at the last session to make the additional appropriations required for the fiscal year 1929, and, indeed, if opportunity had been presented to make the appropriations at that time, the estimated amount would have been very difficult to ascertain. As the rates in the act were mandatory, commencing on July 1, 1928, the appropriations for the fiscal year 1929, already made on the basis of the classification act of 1923, were available so far as they would go to cover the rates under the new law. The Government service is therefore in a position where additional appropriations are now necessary to restore to the previous appropriations the amounts necessarily expended since July 1 last under the new rates and to provide for the payment of the new rates until the close of the present fiscal year.

The amount recommended to be appropriated for this purpose under Title II is $17,364,196, consisting of $17,299,616 of Federal funds and $64,580 of Indian moneys. The total amount is distributed over the various appropriation accounts for every bureau, office, department, and establishment of the Government in detail. The estimates for this purpose were transmitted to Congress in House Document No. 524 and the appropriations in the bill are identical therewith. The sum appropriated in the bill does not represent the actual cost of the Welch Act. There will be found in the committee hearing entitled "Compensation Under the Classification Act of 1923, as Amended," on pages 47 to 63, a statement showing both for the District of Columbia and the field the gross cost of the increases, the amount of such increases absorbed in the regular appropriations, and the amount of the supplemental appropriations required to be made. The following is a departmental summary of this detailed statement:

Total cost and supplemental estimate of appropriations required for the fiscal year 1929 to meet the provisions of the act of May 28, 1928, amending the classification act of 1923

(1) Department	Cost of increases (2) Departmental service	(3) Field service	(4) Total	(5) Amount to be absorbed by existing appropriations	(6) Supplemental appropriation required
Library of Congress	$107,205.00		$107,205.00		$107,205.00
Botanic Garden	10,023.00		10,023.00		10,023.00
Government Printing Office	26,000.00		26,000.00		26,000.00
Executive Office and independent establishments	1,751,000.00	$3,096,192.00	4,947,192.00	$1,025,337.00	3,821,855.00
Department of Agriculture	845,497.87	1,682,199.33	2,527,697.20	480,878.34	2,066,818.86
Department of Commerce	788,513.00	569,277.00	1,357,790.00	52,914.00	1,304,876.00
Department of the Interior	566,917.00	927,685.69	1,494,602.69	309,585.36	1,185,017.33
Department of Justice	120,960.00	662,254.00	783,214.00	49,820.00	733,394.00
Department of Labor	93,300.44	427,760.00	521,060.44	3,266.90	517,793.54
Navy Department	283,708.00	27,650.00	311,358.00	34,348.00	277,010.00
Post Office Department	198,363.00	62,952.40	261,315.40	2,952.40	258,363.00
State Department	107,984.00	4,447.00	112,431.00		112,431.00
Treasury Department	1,630,750.00	3,360,614.00	4,991,364.00	184,002.00	4,807,362.00
War Department, including Panama Canal	327,857.00	1,914,892.00	2,242,749.00	616,440.00	1,626,309.00
District of Columbia	550,167.00	23,322.00	573,489.00	63,749.00	509,740.00
Total	7,408,245.31	12,759,245.42	20,167,490.73	2,803,293.00	17,364,197.73

NOTE.—The above figures differ slightly from the estimates for the reason that odd cents have been omitted in the estimates.

This summary shows that the total cost of the increase is $20,167,490.73, of which $2,803,293 will be absorbed by the regular appropriations made before the act was passed, leaving the deficiency at $17,364,196. The gross of $20,167,490.73 is not the whole cost of the Welch Act, however, for there are several other services benefiting by increases which have been permitted under other statutes in conjunction with the Welch Act. The classified employees of the Naval Establishment received increases, under a general statute, sympathetically induced by the enactment of the Welch Act and the total annual cost of these amounts, approximately, to $450,000. The employees of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers have also been granted increases in this bill and under the War Department bill for the fiscal year 1930, also sympathetically induced by the Welch Act, and these have an annual cost of approximately $1,414,820. Adding these sums to the gross cost of the Welch Act heretofore stated will give a total annual increase of about $21,582,310.

The committee has included as section 2 of Title II the following provisions relative to the allocation of the positions in certain grades of the professional and scientific service and in the clerical, administrative, and fiscal service:

The Personnel Classification Board, within 30 days after the enactment of this act, shall review the allocations of all positions which, on June 30, 1928, were allocated in grades 4, 5, 6, and 7 of the professional and scientific service, and grades 11, 12, 13, and 14 of the clerical, administrative, and fiscal service, of the compensation schedules set forth in the classification act of 1923 (covering salary rates from $3,800 to $7,500) (U. S. C. pp. 65–71, secs. 661–673), and which have not been allocated, with the approval of such board, to the grades of such compensation schedules as amended by the act of May 28, 1928 (covering salary rates from $3,800 to $9,000) (45 Stat. pp. 776–785). Such allocations shall be made by the board in such a manner as to reduce the total annual rate of compensation of the whole number of positions in all of such grades by not less than $500,000. The board, immediately upon completion of the review of the allocations herein directed to be made, shall certify their allocations to the heads of the executive departments and independent establishments who, within 10 days after the receipt of such certification, shall put such allocations into effect: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall operate to reduce the rate of compensation any person was receiving on June 30, 1928: Provided further, That the heads of the executive departments and independent establishments, who, pursuant to authority to adjust the pay of certain civilian positions in the field services to correspond as nearly as may be practicable to the rates established for similar positions under the classification act of 1923, as amended by the act of May 28, 1928, have made such adjustments in the field services, shall, within 60 days after the enactment of this act, readjust the compensation of such of the field positions as may be necessary to make the compensation thereof in conformity with the allocations herein directed for the departmental service in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That any balances under appropriations or portions of appropriations, including continuing appropriations, available during the period of the remainder of the fiscal year 1929 and the entire fiscal year 1930, respectively, which result from the compensation of positions under the provisions of this section at rates lower than those permitted for such positions from July 1, 1928, to the date of the enactment of this act, shall not be expended for any other purposes but shall be reserved and allowed to lapse at the close of the respective fiscal years: Provided further, That the Personnel Classification Board shall have sole jurisdiction finally to determine the grade, or subdivision thereof, to which shall be allocated any position which is subject to the compensation schedules of the classification act of 1923, as amended, and shall have authority to ascertain the facts as to the duties and responsibilities of any such position and to review and change the allocation thereof, whenever, in its opinion, the facts warrant.

This provision is recommended by the committee under strong conviction that the section is in order under the Holman rule, which provides for the incorporation of legislation in an appropriation bill if on its face it shows a reduction in expenditures or in the numbers or compensation of the persons paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

The paragraph is recommended not merely because it is believed to be in order but because the committee believes that it is very necessary remedial legislation to correct injustices growing out of interpretations of the Welch Act by a decision of the Comptroller General which has required the allocation of positions contrary to the intent of Congress in passing the law.

The legislation is directed to those positions in the grades of the professional and scientific service and the clerical, administrative, and fiscal service where the salary ranges are $3,800 and above and where many increases in compensation ranging as high as $2,000 per annum per individual were brought about by the comptroller's decision adversely to what the committee understood to be the intent of Congress.

The committee has been furnished with information, found on pages 11 and 12 of the hearing above referred to, showing that 2,805 positions in the departmental services in the District of Columbia, with salaries ranging from $3,800 and upward, were affected by this decision. The annual cost of the salary increases under these positions is estimated to be $780,600 in excess of what the cost would have been had not the Comptroller General's decision taken from the Personnel Classification Board the right to allocate these positions under its inherent authority in the classification act of 1923. The Comptroller General justifies his right of interpretation of the jurisdiction of the board by reference to certain provisions in the Welch Act. Without expressing an opinion as to whether or not the Comptroller General had that right, the very practical result remains that his decision took from the Personnel Classification Board a duty which the law placed upon it in 1923 and which the Welch Act did not remove or modify in specific terms.

The general situation brought about by the Comptroller General's decision may be tersely set forth by the statement that under it instead of the Personnel Classification Board being the allocating body, as the classification act of 1923 provided, the allocating power by his ruling was split three ways, partly to the heads of departments, partly to the Comptroller General, and partly to the board. The confusion and harm to any system of classification by such a diffusion of authority is readily apparent.

In addition to the excess cost of $780,600 in the District of Columbia it is estimated that the projection of this same ruling to positions in the field services has added approximately $1,250,000 to the field pay in these upper grades, giving a grand total of excess cost for the District of Columbia and the field of approximately $2,000,000.

The ruling of the comptroller has resulted in practically vacating one grade in the professional and scientific service and one grade in the clerical, administrative, and fiscal service by permitting some employees to jump one grade entirely. This has created great injustice in the way of increases to many employees, for while the employee receiving the maximum rate of grade 3 of the professional and scientific service was advanced only $100, the employee who received the minimum rate of grade 4 was advanced $800, the employee who received the minimum rate of grade 5 was advanced either $400 or $1,300 within the discretion of the head of the department, and the employee who received the minimum of grade 6 was advanced either $500 or $2,000 within the discretion of the head of the department.

The appropriations as contained in this act and in the annual appropriation acts are built upon the basis of the Comptroller General's ruling. The committee has accordingly incorporated in this section a paragraph providing for the recapture and return to the Treasury of the amount of the appropriations which will be impounded as the result of the allocations which the section directs the board to make.

The committee believes this legislation to be in the best interests of classification of the Government personnel in salary grades. The classification act of 1923 was the first real attempt to provide an equalization of pay in the Government service on the basis of like work. Progress was made steadily after the enactment of that act. Naturally, as with any new system, there was much to be learned and to be desired, and there is no doubt that the pay status of employees, both as to equality and adequacy, greatly improved under the classification act of 1923 as compared with the previous unscientific and discriminatory method. However, the situation brought about under the classification act of 1923 has been hindered rather than helped, so far as equality is concerned, by administration under the Welch Act. The practical vacating of one grade in each of these two very large services has resulted in a general agitation for a moving up in the strata of employees classified immediately below. The inequalities resulting from the skipping of grades also still remains. The situation may be summarized by a quotation from the hearings of a question from Chairman ANTHONY and the answer of Mr. Moffett, representing the Personnel Classification Board:

The CHAIRMAN. What is the status of the salary situation in the Government service to-day in consideration of the Welch bill, the classification act, the comptroller's decision, the departmental action under that decision, and is the purpose originally sought by the classification act of 1923, uniform pay for the same kind of work in the different departments, nearer to realization or further from it?

Mr. MOFFETT. Of course, prior to the passage of the Welch Act, the ideal of uniform pay, so far as the departmental service in particular was concerned and to a very great extent in the field service through the administrative action of the departments themselves, was very much nearer realization than it had ever been before. But with the introduction of the Welch Act and with the action taken, the result of the interpretation placed upon the Welch Act, the situation has been very much confused, I should say, and is less satisfactory than it was before.

The committee recommends the enactment of the proposed section to correct the inequalities brought about by the Comptroller General's decision, to restore what it believes to have been the intent of Congress under the Welch Act, to relieve the Treasury of the approximately $2,000,000 of unintended cost, and to restore the balance of the entire structure of classification in so far as it has been disrupted by the decision in question.

The subject is a highly technical one and those Members of the House who may care to go into its complicated details, will find the hearings with the Personnel Classification Board, the decision of the Comptroller General, and the letters passing between the board and the Comptroller General to be of more than passing interest and importance.

TITLE III

The committee recommends for inclusion under Title III of the bill (pp. 152–189), the contents of H. R. 15848, the first deficiency bill, as it passed the House of Representatives together with such of the Senate amendments as the conference committee had been able to agree upon. The total of the Budget estimates upon which these items were based was $101,878,792.61, the amount included under Title III is $95,622,807.61, or $6,255,985 less than the Budget estimates.

Aside from the pro forma matters of judgments and audited claims placed upon the bill in the Senate and several amendments relating to the expenses of the Senate, the following are the amendments which have been incorporated and added to the items of the former bill as it passed the House:

The sum of $8,400 is recommended for maintenance of the Senate Office Building.

Toward the new House Office Building authorized by the act approved January 10, 1929, the Senate pursuant to an estimate had incorporated $8,400,000 in the bill, to cover the complete cost of the structure. The committee recommends the sum of $2,100,000 which, in the judgment of the Architect of the Capitol, will be sufficient to acquire the site, demolish existing buildings, and provide adequate funds to carry on whatever construction may be possible during the coming year.

The appropriation for expenses of the United States Supreme Court Building Commission in obtaining preliminary plans and estimates of cost is increased from $10,000 to $25,000 to permit the procurement of models.

An appropriation of $10,000 is recommended as a supplemental amount for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to facilitate the procurement of customs statistics in connection with the pending revision of the tariff.

An item of $9,000, not recommended by a Budget estimate, included in the bill by amendment from the floor of the Senate, is incorporated in this bill for the restoration of storm damages and the replacement of forage destroyed by flood at the Haskell Indian Institute at Lawrence, Kans.

The sum of $700,000 for carrying on the building program abroad for housing representatives of the Government is included in the amount of the Budget estimate.

An item of legislation is included authorizing and directing the payment of salary to H. Theodore Tate for services rendered as Treasurer of the United States while serving under recess appointment. Mr. Tate's nomination was rejected by the Senate and for the time he served, from June 1, 1928, to January 17, 1929, he has not received any compensation. While contrary to the statute, the allowance follows the precedent of the past in similar cases.

The judgments and audited claims transmitted to the Senate after the bill had passed the House are incorporated in this bill as transmitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired, all time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee on Agriculture: Those members of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives of the Seventieth Congress who are Members elect to the Seventy-first Congress, or a majority of them, after March 4, 1929, and until the meeting of the first session of the Seventy-first Congress are authorized, by subcommittee or otherwise, to hold such hearings and to sit at such times and places within the United States, to employ such expert, clerical, and stenographic services, and to gather such information, through Government agents or otherwise, as to them may seem fit in the preparation of a bill or bills for farm relief; and they are authorized to have such printing and binding done (notwithstanding any limitation in existing law as to number of copies of any document) and to incur such other expenses as may be deemed necessary; all such expenses (except for printing and binding, which shall be charged to the appropriation for printing and binding for Congress), not to exceed $2,500 to be paid out of the Contingent Fund of the House on the usual vouchers approved as now provided by law.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question relative to the authorization for the Committee on Agriculture to meet during the recess of the Congress. Is it not a new departure for the Committee on Appropriations to bring in such legislation?

Mr. WOOD. No; this is following the custom. I will state that we did the same thing in the other deficiency bill with reference to the Ways and Means Committee and without this authorization and without this provision for the necessary expenses they could not function at all.

Mr. SNELL. I agree with the gentleman that they have got to have some money if they are to function, but it is a question of the proper procedure in order to give that committee the right to sit after the adjournment of Congress. It does not seem to me this is the proper way to do it. I have no objection to the proposition, and I think they ought to have the authority.

Mr. WOOD. I will admit that this is legislation, but this is the custom that has prevailed ever since I have been here, and they tell me for 20 years before that.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, introduced a resolution for this very purpose, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WOOD. As I have said, this is just exactly like that case except that it applies to the Committee on Agriculture instead of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. SNELL. But that did not come in on an appropriation bill.

Mr. WOOD. It is in this bill.

Mr. SNELL. If that has been the way it has been done in the House in the past I have missed it. I have always thought it was done in another way, which I think would be proper instead of doing it in this way.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. SNELL. I have the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. I thought the gentleman was through.

Mr. SNELL. I will let the gentleman know when I am through.

Mr. BLANTON. All right.

Mr. SNELL. Did the gentleman say that was done this year with respect to the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. WOOD. It was in the first deficiency bill and we have transferred it to this bill.

Mr. SNELL. I do not think this is the proper way to do it, but I am not going to make a point of order against it.

Mr. WOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the only excuse for doing it in this way is that it occurs as an emergency matter toward the end of a session when there is no opportunity, perhaps, for the proper committee to consider it.

Mr. SNELL. It would not take any time to put through a resolution of this character.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I will.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Then there is no necessity of the Committee on Accounts reporting the resolution which they have before them at this time.

Mr. WOOD. No; I think not, if this paragraph in the bill is passed.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. All of us here, excepting the chairman of the Rules Committee, know that this is legislation, and that it is subject to a point of order. But the chairman of the Rules Committee, who gets a little mean sometimes when somebody interrupts, could have made the point of order, but he neglected to do so. It is the usual custom for the Committee on Appropriations to insert legislation. They do it whenever they want to. The chairman of the Rules Committee knew that, but he wanted to call attention to it. Attention has been called to it, and it is to be passed, and the Committee on Appropriations during the interim while I am gone will make appropriations and insert legislation.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. What sort of an interim is that to be? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Well, it is an interim. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING

For expense in compiling, preparing, and indexing the Congressional Directory for the first session of the Seventy-first Congress, $800, one half to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and the other half to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, after line 23, insert: "Architect of the Capitol, Capitol Building: For necessary expenditure for the Capitol Building under the jurisdiction of the Architect of the Capitol, including the same objects specified under this head in the legislative appropriation act for the fiscal year 1929, to cover the purchase of and installation of incinerators, $2,500.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I have explained the purpose of this amendment to the chairman of the committee, and I believe he is perfectly willing to accept it.

Mr. WOOD. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts state to the committee what this is designed to do?

Mr. UNDERHILL. At the request of the chairman, will state that the garbage from the House and Senate restaurants is becoming quite a problem; as we are to hold a session during the summer time, I feel it necessary that it should be taken care of in some other way than at present. At the present it sometimes remains in the basement of the Capitol adjacent to the kitchen as long as three days, a breeding place for flies. On Mondays, particularly, the garbage wagons are backed up against the Senate and the House for an hour or more. This is not only insanitary but annoying, and smelling to high heaven. This menace to health and comfort will be removed if the refuse is burned immediately rather than to have it accumulate and eventually removed, as is done now.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the gentleman think that $2,500 is enough for the incinerators and the installation?

Mr. UNDERHILL. It is thought that with money avaliable in the general appropriation it will be sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE

Executive Office, salaries: For two additional secretaries to the President, at $10,000 each per annum, from March 4 to June 30, 1929, inclusive, $6,500.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph that it is legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill. I make it against page 4, paragraph from line 11 down to 14. There is no law authorizing any additional secretaries to the President.

Mr. WOOD. This is the same item that was in the first deficiency bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but that went by and was overlooked. It was subject to a point of order, and it is subject to a point of order now.

Mr. WOOD. It was not made.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana concede that it is subject to a point of order?

Mr. WOOD. In my opinion it is subject to a point of order; but it seems to be very inconsistent where we provide for a similar service in 1930 not to make it now.

Mr. BLANTON. The present President has made such a splendid record for economy that the incoming President ought not to break it up.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Executive Mansion: For the care, maintenance, protection, and repair of the premises known as Mount Weather, in the counties of Loudoun and Clarke, in the State of Virginia, comprising approximately 84.81 acres of land, including buildings and other improvements thereon and all machinery, tools, equipment, and supplies used or for use in connection therewith, and including the alteration, refurnishing, improvement, heating, lighting, electric power and fixtures for buildings and grounds, and including traveling expenses, to be expended by contract or otherwise as the President may determine, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $48,000: Provided, That the care, custody, maintenance, and alteration of the premises are hereby transferred from the Secretary of Agriculture to the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital: Provided further, That $2,000 of the appropriation "Salaries and expenses, Weather Bureau, 1930," shall be transferred to this appropriation: Provided further, That the act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to sell the Weather Bureau station known as Mount Weather, in the counties of Loudoun and Clarke, in the State of Virginia," approved March 13, 1928 (45 Stat. 311), is hereby repealed.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph beginning on line 15, page 4, and ending with line 12, on page 5. It is legislation on an appropriation bill, and there is no authority for the appropriation. Clearly it is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana, the chairman of the committee, concede the point of order?

Mr. WOOD. I do not think there is any doubt that it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Protection of interest of the United States in matters affecting oil lands on former naval reserves: For compensation and expenses of special counsel and for all other expenses, including employment of experts and other assistants at such rates as may be authorized or approved by the President, in connection with carrying into effect the joint resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior to institute proceedings touching sections 16 and 36, township 30 south, range 23 east, Mount Diablo meridian, approved February 21, 1924, fiscal years 1929 and 1930 (43 Stat. 15), $55,000, to be expended by the President.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: After line 13, page 6, insert: "For such inquiry into the problems of enforcement of law, including national prohibition, as the President may direct, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $250,000. This sum shall be subject to the authority and direction of the President of the United States and shall be available for each and every object of expenditure connected with such purposes, notwithstanding the provisions of any other act."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that. The last part of that sounds very much like legislation.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, it is an appropriation that is not authorized by law. It is not legislation, but simply an appropriation to make a fund available for such inquiry into enforcement of law, including national prohibition, as the President may choose to direct.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

Salaries: For an additional amount for personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $121,500.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD: On page 6, line 17, strike out "$121,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$161,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I rise at this time to congratulate the Committee on Appropriations on account of its foresight in appropriating a proper sum of money for carrying out the work of the Civil Service Commission. We have suffered long with reference to the lack of civil-service requirements in the Prohibition Department. I can testify to the fact that in New York under the prohibition administrator there are at the present moment employed in that service a great many felons, plug-uglies, thieves, and men with known criminal records. Major Mills, former prohibition administrator, in an article published in Collier's Weekly not so long since gave ample testimony to this fact. Yet despite what he said, and despite the persistent, periodical comment in this House, those men are still retained in the service of the New York office. I am almost sure that that same condition prevails in many other parts of the country.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman is misinformed as to that. Over 60 of them were released only a few weeks ago. I do not believe there are any in the force now who have not qualified under the civil service.

Mr. CELLER. I am very glad to get that information, and I am pleased to stand corrected, but the fact remains that for a long time, after protests were made, these men were retained in the service. Whether they have gone, recently, out of the service matters not. My point is still tenable, that they remained in the service after it was known that they were thieves, felons, and plug-uglies.

Mr. GREEN. Of what party?

Mr. CELLER. I refuse to yield to the gentleman from Florida. We know that General Andrews testified in a senatorial investigation that 1 out of 12 of the original appointees in the Prohibition Unit were venal and were convicted for known graft, and that is only because this House and the other body failed to provide for civil-service requirements in all appointees in the Prohibition Unit, but listened rather attentively to the pleas of the Anti-Saloon League that this whole proposition of prohibition, particularly with reference to the appointing power, be a matter of political spoils, and the Republican administration during the time that it has been in office was directly responsible for those flagrancies. I am glad to call it to the attention of the committee this afternoon.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. And, furthermore, we know that in the first examination held by the Civil Service Commission it was proven that a great many of these people were nothing but ignoramuses, who were in the Prohibition Unit. Less than 25 per cent passed those examinations, and so few of those did qualify that they were compelled to conduct a second examination, and I am very glad to know now that the Appropriation Committee is appropriating a sufficient sum of money to carry out the intent of Congress in that respect. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HUDSON. Does the gentleman contend that a civil-service examination will make a man entirely honest and efficient in his work? Does not the gentleman know that we have found in the customs patrol, even though they were there under civil service, great numbers of men who had to be removed because of their lack of integrity in that office to which they were appointed?

Mr. CELLER. I will answer the gentleman by saying that it is purely relative. Education gives a finer distinction. I think the gentleman will agree with me that a man educated is more likely to be better, as far as morality is concerned, than the man who is ignorant. Let us appoint intelligent rather than ignorant men in the Prohibition Unit or the Customs Service for that reason. We want to get the best kind of men to enforce this or any other statute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Traveling expenses: For an additional amount for traveling expenses, including the same objects specified under this head in the independent offices appropriation act for the fiscal year 1929, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $32,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 6, line 21, strike out "$32,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$34,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses: For an additional amount for contingent expenses, including the same objects specified under this head in the independent offices appropriation act for the fiscal year 1929, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $3,000.

With a committee amendment as follows:

On page 6, line 26, strike out "$3,000" and insert "$4,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE

Salaries: For an additional amount for personal services in the District of Columbia, in accordance with the classification act of 1923, as amended, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $10,800.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VESTAL: Page 8, after line 11, insert:

"GEORGE ROGERS CLARK SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

"Notwithstanding the provisions of section 6 of the public resolution approved May 23, 1928 (45 Stat. 724), not to exceed $50,000 of the appropriation 'George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission, 1928–1931,' may be disbursed for expenses necessarily incurred for architectural services and traveling expenses and for such other expenses as may be necessary to be incurred in the preparation of plans and designs to be submitted for the approval of the National Commission of Fine Arts."

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, the committee has no objection to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

GENERAL EXPENSES

Board of Commissioners: For a special fund for the use of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to be available for investigations and for such other purposes as the commissioners shall determine, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $1,000: Provided, That the certificate of the commissioners shall be deemed a sufficient voucher for the sum therein expressed to have been expended.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIMMONS: Page 11, after line 2, insert: "Engineer commissioner's office: For a complete engineering investigation of the proposed Gravely Point airport site, including the employment of personal services without reference to the classification act of 1923 as amended, the preparation of preliminary plans and estimates of costs, and such other expenses as shall be deemed necessary for the purposes of this paragraph, $2,000, to continue available until June 30, 1930."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Writs of lunacy: For expenses attending the execution of writs de lunatico inquirendo and commitments thereunder in all cases of indigent insane persons committed or sought to be committed to St. Elizabeths Hospital by order of the executive authority of the District of Columbia under the provisions of existing law, and expenses of commitments to the District Training School, including personal services, fiscal year 1928, $348.75.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee why these additional sums are required for this purpose. I had no chance to examine the hearings, but I am amazed that there should be this large additional sum required for the prisons in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WOOD. We are on the item with reference to writs of lunacy. Is that what the gentleman is talking about?

Mr. SABATH. No. I understand we are in "courts and prisons." On line 12, of page 14, the bill provides for the support of convicts in the District of Columbia. Of course, the amount is only $2 for 1926, but for 1928 it is $47,655.69.

Mr. WOOD. That is the amount due to the United States Treasury from the District of Columbia for the maintenance of prisoners. It shows that they are doing a good business here.

Mr. SABATH. An extremely good business. Is that the amount due the United States from the District of Columbia?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. I thought we were appropriating this amount.

Mr. WOOD. That is in order that the District of Columbia may satisfy its debt to the Federal Government.

Mr. SABATH. I do not quite grasp it.

Mr. WOOD. A man is convicted in the District of Columbia and is sent to a Federal prison instead of Occoquan. The District of Columbia is charged so much per day for the maintenance of that prisoner while he is there. The United States pays for his keep, and then the District of Columbia has to reimburse the Treasury by that amount.

Mr. SABATH. What has been the total amount appropriated for this purpose for 1928, if the gentleman has it at hand; otherwise I do not want to delay the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOOD. Sixty-four thousand dollars plus this amount.

Mr. SABATH. That is about $112,000.

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To aid the Grand Army of the Republic Memorial Day Corporation in its Memorial Day services, May 30, 1929, and in the decoration with flags and flowers of the graves of the Union soldiers, sailors, and marines in the national cemeteries in the District of Columbia and in the Arlington National Cemetery, in Virginia, $2,000, to be paid to the treasurer of the Grand Army of the Republic Memorial Day Corporation.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the figures "$2,000" in line 23 be stricken out and the figures "$2,500" be inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 23, strike out "$2,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WEATHER BUREAU

San Juan (P. R.) Weather Bureau: For the erection of a building and approaches for use of the Weather Bureau at San Juan, Porto Rico, including the employment of architectural services under contract with a qualified person or firm selected by the Secretary of Agriculture, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $45,000.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McDUFFIE: Page 22, line 4, after the figures "$45,000," add a new paragraph, as follows:

"For fruit frost work in horticultural experiments in the Weather Bureau, $15,000."

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I presume the point of order is that it is legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. My understanding is this is not legislation for they are already engaged, under the organic law, in furnishing weather reports and in making these experiments in certain sections of the country where a great deal of citrus fruit is grown. There is especially great need of extension in that particular section of which I have personal knowledge in Mobile County, near Mobile Bay. There and in surrounding sections is grown more than a million and a half dollars' worth of Satsuma oranges annually. From November 1 until May 1 it is very difficult each year to keep the frost from hurting those orchards at certain stages of their growth, and they put heating equipment, such as smudge pots, in them. There are several Government experts now engaged in this work on the west coast of California under our general law and under this bureau. This is called by the department "Fruit Frost Work in the Horticultural Experiments." We have been unable to get bureau experts to advise or teach us on the Gulf section in such experiments.

I will say to the gentleman that I dislike to disrupt his committee's program and usually do not make such an effort on this floor. This is quite a small amount, but it will mean a great deal to that industry, and appropriations for this kind of work have not been increased for a number of years. The Weather Bureau is doing this work now in other sections, and in view of the fact that it is such a small appropriation that will mean so much to a vast section of the Gulf coast, I hope the chairman will permit this small amount to go into the bill. I was going to ask the Senate to insert it, since it was brought to my attention only this morning by those who are engaged in the citrus-fruit industry in Mobile County and too late for me to be heard before your committee. I only ask it now because it is an emergency.

Mr. WOOD. Does the Agricultural Department make this estimate?

Mr. McDUFFIE. No, sir; I am sure your committee has had no estimate. The gentleman knows bureau chiefs can not talk very much about what they do as to their estimates sent to the Budget, and I could get no information on that point from the bureau. I can read a letter from the chief of the bureau addressed to Mr. Lloyd Abbott, an extensive grower, and other gentlemen interested in this work who now have $150,000 invested in orchard-heating equipment, in which the chief states the lack of funds with which to extend his work, also the need of having this work done in the Mobile district. Doubtless, he has not made this recommendation to the gentleman's committee. I did not talk with the chief of the bureau; however, knowing the circumstances as I do, I would assume an amount was recommended to the Budget Bureau, and probably an additional $15,000 for the extension of this work. I will say to the gentleman that this Satsuma orange industry, rather the Horticultural Development Co. of Mobile County, paid the expenses of a Government man from California to south Mobile County in order to teach them to do as they are doing in California, and in order to teach us the best way to save this very important and very large industry there on the Gulf coast from frost hazards. I will say to the gentleman, if he did not understand me, that our citrus fruit industry has invested $150,000 in this heating appartus in order to protect this fruit from frost at certain times of the year, paid the expenses of one of the Government experts from California now working under the Weather Bureau clear across the country in order to have the benefit of his knowledge and experience in this work. It only came to me this morning or I would have asked to appear before the standing committee long ago and asked that this bill, or the agricultural appropriation bill, carry this small appropriation.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that if he opens up the deficiency bill to this line of procedure there will be no use of holding hearings on the regular department bill. In the first place, there is no department estimate and no survey has been made. It would seem to me, from what I know about this type of work, that you have at least twice the amount of money you ought to have for it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. May I say to the gentleman that the whole State of Florida is involved as well as Alabama, and not only Florida, but the entire Gulf section, needs the extension of the work of this bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to address an inquiry to the gentleman from Indiana. Did the Chair understand that the gentleman from Indiana made a point of order against this amendment.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the point of order for the purpose of having the gentleman from Alabama make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was not clear as to what the status was.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is subject to a point of order, but I wish to say to the gentleman and to the committee that this is the first time I have ever heard of this item. We have made all sorts of appropriations for all kinds of bugs, and if there has been a bug discovered in this country for which we have not made an appropriation either for its eradication or defeat it has not been brought to my attention.

Mr. McDUFFIE. May I interrupt the gentleman to say that if the gentleman has bugs on his mind, this is not a question of bugs at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOOD. I understand that. We have exhausted the realm of bugs and I guess now we are getting into the realm of the weather. This is so extensive and indeterminate that I think we ought to know at least something about what this item is for before we commence appropriating for it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman permit me to tell him what it is for?

Mr. WOOD. I have been listening to the gentleman and it occurs to me this matter ought to be presented to the committee by the Department of Agriculture or by somebody who knows about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. McDUFFIE. It is a very small amount and I can assure the gentlemen of the committee that it is needed, and I hope the committee will agree to it.

Mr. WOOD. I suggest to the gentleman to let the matter go over so we can investigate it further at a later time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withhold his reservation of a point of order?

Mr. WOOD. I do not think it is subject to a point of order and I withdraw it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, the point of order having been disposed of——

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was not under discussion because the gentleman reserved it for the purpose of discussing the merits of the amendment.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I beg the Chair's pardon. I did not hear the gentleman withhold it for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana withheld his point of order at the beginning in order that there might be discussion on the amendment as to its merit. Now the gentleman has withdrawn the point of order and the vote recurs on the amendment pending before the committee.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. After that has been disposed of, under the rules am I not entitled to five minutes to discuss the merits of the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not, because the point of order was not under discussion, but the merit of the amendment was under discussion, the point of order having been reserved for the specific purpose that the amendment may be discussed, and it was fully discussed, and without unanimous consent the gentleman is not entitled to proceed.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I ask unanimous consent then, Mr. Chairman, to proceed for two minutes upon the merits of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman is recognized for two additional minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I appreciate the fact that this request comes a little late. It came to me this morning, as a sort of S O S call. A vast industry not only in the part of the Satsuma orange territory I represent but the entire State of Florida is interested, also Georgia, south Texas, Mississippi, and Louisiana; in other words, the whole Gulf territory. According to a letter from the chief of the bureau there has been no addition to his funds for this type of work in many years.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes; I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Everybody knows the remedy for this, they know how to do it, and what does the gentleman want this money for—to have them go down there so that the Government can do it for them?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I will say to the gentleman, let us not get excited about this thing.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I am not excited; but there is no research work involved in this; there is nothing new about it; it is as old as the hills; and the gentleman's people know how to do it, and why do they not set out their own pots?

Mr. McDUFFIE. They do; and there is such work involved. Let me use just a little of my own time, if you please. I see the distinguished gentleman needs a little information on this particular subject which has escaped his attention heretofore.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Oh, I have had information on this a good many times.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Doubtless the gentleman did consider this bureau in his hearings, but the gentleman did not have any estimates before his committee on this subject. There is a reason for this. The Budget committee did not send you the estimate, and you had no hearings. This one company in Mobile County has $150,000 invested in smudge pots and other heating equipment with which they try to save their citrus fruit from frost between November and May. They need this money in the bureau, and this bureau, I think, would frankly say so if the gentleman made an inquiry.

Now, the gentleman knows this bureau can not present to this committee any estimate that the Bureau of the Budget, acting for the President, does not first approve. I think the bureau would state that they would need only $15,000 to extend their work and assistance to those who are engaged in this industry and who are already putting up 50 per cent of the cost of the work. You have about a dozen men on the west coast in this work, according to my information, and there are not sufficient appropriations with which to help the people on the Gulf coast to do any of this work, and I appeal to the gentleman. I realize that this is a little out of the ordinary in making such appropriations, but, after all, our deficiency bills are presented to take care of deficiencies in those things that were perhaps overlooked by or never presented to the gentleman's committee and others during their regular meetings heretofore. The gentleman will not say this matter was investigated by his committee. The gentleman can not say that this money is not needed in this section, and it covers such a vast area of the country and involves such a small amount I certainly think the gentleman ought not to object to adding this small amount to the bill.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I simply want to suggest that our committee tries to take care of every single need of agriculture so far as we know it, and we have extensive hearings and we invite in the Members of the House. There was no very serious situation down there in the citrus-fruit industry or we would have known about it before this morning, when the gentleman from Alabama raised this question.

As a matter of fact, the gentleman says these people have $150,000 invested in these pots. Do you think any organization raising citrus fruit invested $150,000 without knowing how to use the apparatus or without having some expert to tell them when they ought to light the fire and when they ought to put it out? Why, this is a silly thing, and as a matter of fact, investigations have been made on this proposition for years, and we know all about how to control them and what to do with them, and I do not see why it is necessary to come in here in this extraordinary way, when the appropriations for agriculture have been passed upon, with no emergency being shown at this time, or if one existed it was known at the time the agricultural bill was under consideration, and therefore I am opposed to having an item of this kind come in and be put in a deficiency bill.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. No; I have said all I want to say.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Just because the gentleman does not approve it, does not mean it is not necessary, even though his committee did not pass judgment on it.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McDUFFIE) there were 33 ayes and 53 noes.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wilt-resistant varieties of alfalfa: For foreign agricultural explorations with especial reference to the securing of wilt-resistant varieties of alfalfa, including personal services and other necessary expenses in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $10,000.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, after line 23, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"HORTICULTURAL CROPS AND DISEASES

"For investigating the control of diseases, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year of 1930, with special reference to the black-walnut disease in the Middle West, for the fiscal year 1930, $5,000."

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, this item was inserted in the Senate in the regular agricultural appropriation bill, but through some mistake and confusion was stricken out in conference. It is indorsed by the chairman of the Agricultural Committee and by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PATENT OFFICE

Photolithographing: For producing copies of weekly issue of drawings of patents and designs; reproduction of copies of drawings, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year 1929, $35,000.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 28, after line 14, insert the following:

"To enable the Commissioner of Patents to supply to the public library of the city of Los Angeles, Calif., at the regular rate of $50 per annum prescribed by law for public libraries in the United States, uncertified drawings and copies of patents, specifications, and drawings published during the years 1915 to 1925, inclusive, including personal services, stationery, supplies, and other incidental expenses for the fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $2,500; which sum or so much thereof as may be expended shall be reimbursed to the United States by such public library."

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, this simply means swapping dollars. The library of Los Angeles desires these copies of patents and is willing to pay the expenses of the copies being made and shipped to the library. The only way they can do it is to have the money appropriated, and then they will put the money back in the Treasury.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I do not follow the gentleman when he uses the term "swapping."

Mr. VESTAL. That is an Indiana expression. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cheyenne River School, South Dakota: For rebuilding kitchen, dining room, bakery, and domestic science building, including equipment, or to reimburse other appropriations used for such purposes, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $40,000.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, after line 19, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Rapid City Indian Industrial School: For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, for 330 pupils, $79,200; for pay of superintendent, drayage, and general repairs and improvements, miscellaneous and incidental expenses, $14,800; in all, $94,000."

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in the Interior Department appropriation bill which passed some time ago there was carried a provision for $94,600 for a "sanatorium" school at Rapid City, S. Dak. As a matter of fact, there is no such school in that city and never has been. Under the organic act passed June 10, 1896, there was established an Indian industrial school at Rapid City, S. Dak. It has remained there, and appropriations have been made for it every year since 1896. This year the Interior Department appropriation bill carries no appropriation for this school.

The appropriation was undoubtedly intended to transform this school into a sanatorium or tuberculosis hospital. I do not think the language carried in the bill can effect that kind of a change. The organic act provided for an industrial school. The Interior Department bill does not purport to change the provisions of this act, but simply appropriates for something which has no legal status or existence. I very much doubt that the Secretary of the Interior can properly expend the appropriation for the purposes which the Indian Bureau evidently had in mind when it submitted its estimates. For that reason I am offering this amendment, so that the Rapid City Indian School may have the necessary funds with which to operate. The amount carried in the amendment is what I understand the Indian Bureau would recommend for the support of the school for the next fiscal year.

In this connection I may state that the school at Rapid City is not equipped for a tubercular sanatorium. The quarters in which the pupils are housed are suitable for healthy children, but they are not fit for a sanatorium. No pupil afflicted with tuberculosis ought to be put in the present quarters. If a sanatorium school is to be provided, let that be done by a legislative committee and let the proper appropriation be made. The Interior Department appropriation bill does not carry one dollar either for improvements, for modifications of the present buildings, or for new construction, so as to make the school suitable or adequate for a sanatorium school. The school plant is especially adapted for the purposes provided for in the organic act, and the amendment which I now offer is necessary to permit it to function in the manner and for the purposes provided by law.

That a sanatorium school for Indian children is badly needed in South Dakota can not be doubted. It should be provided for, but to place children afflicted with tuberculosis in the present quarters at Rapid City seems to me utter folly. Some 300 children are quartered at the school. At night they sleep in large rooms with long rows of beds under more or less crowded conditions. For healthy children the quarters are conceded to be adequate, but they are not adequate or proper for children afflicted with tuberculosis. Before this school can possibly fulfill the evident purpose of the Indian Bureau entirely new sleeping quarters must be provided. Not a dollar is appropriated for the purpose. If the appropriation in the Interior bill amounts to anything, all it does is to permit tubercular children to be substituted for healthy children. Against this I protest. The Indian tubercular children are entitled to modern quarters. They must have it if they are to be cured. What we need is a new plant that will accommodate twice the number of children that the Rapid School can accommodate. I do not believe the Congress will deny the necessary appropriation if the matter is fully presented to the proper committee.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, there is a school plant at Rapid City that for a long time has been conducted by the Government at the expense of the Government as an Indian school. This year the Department of the Interior has asked that that school be set aside for use not as a hospital but as a school for tubercular children. There are a great many tubercular Indian children in South Dakota. This school is well located to serve them. It is in an excellent place for a tubercular school. It is an excellent plant, a mile or two outside the city of Rapid City, by itself, and the committee considering the Interior Department appropriation bill approved the suggestion of the department, and made an appropriation that contemplates the use of this plant as a school, but as a school for tubercular children, so that they may at the same time receive education and proper medical attention. I understand that in Rapid City, as in other places, there exists something of a prejudice against the location of a tubercular institution in their community. Personally I think that attitude belongs to yesterday and not to to-day, and in any event this school is a mile or two from town. These children must be taken care of, and the plant at Rapid City is very desirable. Not only did our committee approve that but this House approved that appropriation. That appropriation is in the Interior Department appropriation bill, which we hope will become a law.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the Interior Department appropriation bill. You have transferred the so-called Rapid City school from the educational branch of the bill to the conservation of health or hospital part of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The only reference to an appropriation in this bill is this one sentence: "Rapid City Sanatorium School, $94,600." I contend there is no such school and never has been as the Rapid City Sanatorium School. You are appropriating for something that does not exist and for which there is no basis in any statute to which the gentleman can point.

Mr. CRAMTON. There are being combined in a program for that plant the two ideas of health and education. The item could have been under education or under health. Possibly health is emphasized a little more than education in the case of these tubercular children, but that is not very material. The appropriation is made, has been approved, and to me it seems entirely undesirable to stop that program of health rejuvenation of these tubercular Indian children of the gentleman's State. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Does the gentleman contend that he can change the whole character and purpose of the organic act by merely attempting to change the name of the school?

Mr. CRAMTON. I contend this, that that is a school plant conducted by the Government for the benefit of the Indian children. In the wise exercise of discretion, if the administrative branch of the Government thinks it best to admit children of a certain age or class to that school, it is entirely within their authority to do so. The gentleman knows it is not desirable to have these tubercular children in the school with other children, because they can not progress as fast in their work as other children and can not have the treatment they ought to have. So the department, it seemed to us very wisely, said they wanted to bring these children together in one school.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Does the gentleman contend that the facilities—particularly the sleeping quarters—at Rapid City Indian School are at all adapted for tubercular children?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think they will be immeasurably better off there than where they are now; and, as the gentleman knows, our committee was assured that a study is being made of the situation and that a program of alterations and improvements will follow in the near future.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert as a part of my remarks the organic act of June 10, 1896. It is very brief, and I should like to have it in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to insert in his remarks a certain citation. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, does this amendment provide for the use of Federal funds?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes; Federal funds.

Mr. GREEN. Is this the identical school which is mentioned in Miss Vera Conly's article, where the Indian children are pictured out?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I do not think she knew very much about the schools that she has pictured out.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Following is the citation referred to:

RAPID CITY INDIAN SCHOOL—AUTHORIZATION AND CREATION OF SAID SCHOOL

The Rapid City Indian Industrial School was authorized by the act of June 10, 1896 (29 Stat. L. 345); the provision creating the school reads as follows:

"For the purpose of erecting, constructing, and completing suitable school buildings for an Indian industrial school at or near Rapid City, in the State of South Dakota, which buildings are to be constructed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior upon plans and specifications to be approved by him, $25,000; out of which sum the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to purchase not exceeding 160 acres of land near Rapid City, at a cost of not exceeding $3,000, to be immediately available, upon which said buildings shall be built."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Shoshone or Wind River Reservation, Wyo.: The appropriation of $50,000, contained in the act of May 29, 1928 (45 Stat. 198), for necessary surveys, classification of lands, and all other expenses in connection with the allotment of lands on the Shoshone or Wind River Reservation, Wyo., authorized by the act of May 21, 1928 (45 Stat. 617), is continued available until June 30, 1930.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amedment offered by Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON: Page 38, line 8, insert "The unexpended balance of $48,612.76 of the appropriation for the construction of a spillway and drainage ditch to lower the level of Lake Andes, S. Dak., contained in the act of September 22, 1922 (42 Stat. 1051), and covered into the surplus fund by the act of March 7, 1928 (45 Stat. 215), is hereby reappropriated for the same purposes during the fiscal year 1930: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended until the Secretary of the Interior shall have obtained from the proper authorities of the State of South Dakota satisfactory guaranties of the payment of said State of one-half of the cost of the construction of the said spillway and drainage ditch."

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, briefly I will say this is a reappropriation of an amount that was formerly appropriated for the purpose of completing the spillway at Lake Andes under a law authorizing such an appropriation. There was a delay in the construction of the spillway, in that they were unable to obtain right of way. There was no provision for condemnation of right of way for such purposes. Thereupon Congress enacted a law giving the department the right to institute condemnation proceedings and to condemn private property for this right of way. After this difficulty had been overcome, there was some further delay in determining just where best to locate the spillway and the ditch to carry the surplus water to the river.

In the meantime there was prepared and passed in Congress last spring a bill to revert to the Treasury a large number of unexpended balances, and inadvertently this item was included in that bill. Such inclusion of that item in that bill is the necessity for the reappropriation of this item at this time.

In the original authorization and appropriation the Government was to pay the entire cost of the spillway, but in the estimate submitted to this Congress by the Budget Bureau it has followed the later practice of placing it on the 50-50 basis, and the State does not especially object to that provision. It has given assurances that it will pay its one-half of the cost of the construction.

I have a letter from Mr. O. H. Johnson, director of the department of game and fish of the State of South Dakota, in which he says the State will undertake to pay one-half. I ask unanimous consent that this letter be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

SOUTH DAKOTA GAME AND FISH COMMISSION,
Pierre, February 15, 1929.

Hon. C. A. CHRISTOPHERSON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CHRISTOPHERSON: Have neglected making reply to your letter of January 25, thinking I might have something definite to write you in the matter of an appropriation by the legislature for the construction of a spillway at Lake Andes.

There is now a bill pending in the South Dakota Legislature which empowers the game commission to appropriate moneys from the fish and game fund for the purpose of cooperating with the Federal Government in this and other matters that might arise in the preservation and protection of game and fish.

The game commission will meet sometime during the month of March, at which time they will be urged to adopt a resolution appropriating a sufficient amount from the funds of this department so that the construction of this proposed spillway might be undertaken in cooperation with the Federal Government on a 50-50 basis.

Very respectfully yours,

O. H. JOHNSON,
Director Department of Game and Fish.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is this land that the gentleman mentions subject to overflow?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. It is during time of high water. The lake overflows the adjoining lands and causes damage.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is this amount in the bill sufficient to meet requirements?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. No; it is not enough, but will be sufficient with the State paying one-half of the cost. I hope the amendment will be accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHNEIDER: Page 38, line 8, insert the words "for per capita payment of $100 to members of the Menominee Tribe of Indians of Wisconsin (tribal funds), to be immediately available, $196,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Carlsbad project, New Mexico: For continuation of the enlargement of the Avalon Reservoir, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $650,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation, or of the appropriation of $250,000 for the enlargement of the Avalon Reservoir contained in the act of May 29, 1928 (45 Stat. 902), shall be available until the director of the United States Geological Survey shall have reported favorably on the foundation of the Avalon Dam and on the depth to which water may be stored in the proposed enlarged reservoir;

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Mexico offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORROW: On page 38, line 23, after the figures "$650,000," strike out the colon and insert a period, and strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. MORROW. Now, Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to make available these funds.

Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars of the funds which are now restricted were passed by the first session of this Congress. Now they are restricted, and the additional $650,000 now appropriated is restricted until a further report is made by the Geological Survey.

When this reservoir was taken over by the Government in 1905 the McMillan Dam at that time was considered by the Government to be a leaky dam and of no value except as a distributing reservoir. From that time to the present the people on the Carlsbad proposition have been trying to have the Government fulfill its obligation by completing an additional reservoir. In the charge-off proposition, which occurred in the Sixty-ninth Congress, the fact-finding committee recommended that $395,000 be charged off. The bill carried a charge-off of $375,000. The Carlsbad Water Users' Association assumed an obligation of $1,400,000, which they have reduced, and they have made their payments every year. It will now stand at about $750,000, less this charge-off of $395,000. With the charge-off their obligation to the Government at this time is only about $410,000. They have sent me a telegram in which they state that the water users have voted upon the proposition and have agreed to accept the entire liability themselves, and the Assistant Director of the Reclamation Bureau has stated to me that it is so embodied in the contract at the present time.

In 1926 there was an agreement entered into between the water users' association and the Reclamation Bureau of the Government in which they agreed to select three engineers, two by the Government and one by the water users' association, and that their judgment would be final as to the construction of a dam and the selection of a site. The engineers made a survey, selected a site, and made their report. Later on a geologist, selected from Harvard, passed upon the soil conditions. He found that after they reached a level of 3,192 feet there was a possibility of leakage, and he recommended construction to that level.

While he said there might be a leakage he recommended that they construct to 3,192 feet and let it remain for a period of one year to determine whether to construct further. However, the Reclamation Bureau said that was not feasible; that they could not let a contract under such circumstances because the expense would be too great. Then it was agreed to select another geologist, and a geologist from the Leland Stanford University was secured to pass upon the proposition. He recommended that it was feasible; that there might be some risk, but that the people were entitled to that risk. A committee further passed upon it and said it was feasible.

Now, the question arises: Why should this be held up and a further report made? These people have been waiting since 1905 to get an additional reservoir which they are willing to pay for. It has gone so far that the engineers have reported it is feasible, the geologists report, with minor exceptions, that it is feasible, and Mr. Walters, the man who has been selected to build the Boulder Dam, has passed upon the proposition and said it is feasible.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I have a great deal of sympathy with the gentleman from New Mexico in his desire to assure the construction of this dam and I can testify to the vigor and persistence with which he has fought for that project. I do not believe, however, that Congress ought to take the responsibility of eliminating this proviso. There have been a number of investigations and there seems to be every probability that this Avalon Dam, if constructed, will serve the purpose for which it is intended. But the existing reservoir, because of the geological structure, proved not capable of holding the water, so that the water comes down the stream and this reservoir is intended to catch the leakage from the reservoir above. The reports indicate that this is feasible.

The provision in the bill simply is that the Geological Survey, another branch of the Interior Department, is to make a further study and if they hold it feasible, then the money is free for use. In view of what has been said I have no fear of what their report will be, and if their report is favorable—and we were assured in the hearings that their investigations would not require more than a few weeks—the project will not have been delayed. On the other hand, if the Geological Survey certifies not only that there will be a leak but that the leak can not be corrected then I do not believe we ought to spend $1,000,000 on that dam, even if these people have contracted to pay it.

Mr. MORROW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MORROW. The people on the Carlsbad project entered into a contract with the Government to pay $1,400,000; they have paid that down to a little over $700,000 and on which they have a credit of nearly $400,000 belonging to them, leaving $410,000 due the Government, and when they have paid that amount they will have repaid the Government $1,000,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. I understand that.

Mr. MORROW. Now, they are going to build a new reservoir, on which $400,000 is their own money, not the Government's money.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not put quite the same emphasis on that the gentleman does. We wiped a certain amount off the slate.

Mr. MORROW. It is not wiped off the slate, because they have not yet taken credit for it. It is their money.

Mr. CRAMTON. It gets down to this, Mr. Chairman, if the Geological Survey says it is feasible and that the dam will hold water, their investigation will not have delayed the project at all and it goes ahead, but if they say it will not hold water I do not think we ought to spend $1,000,000, even if these people are ready to take the chance on it. Therefore I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. MORROW. Will the gentleman just yield to me for one minute further?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield.

Mr. MORROW. The Government engineers reported that the McMillan Reservoir was leaky, but they have made their payments to the Government all the time and they are making them now. They have voted unanimously, if this is a failure, to pay every dollar themselves. This is not a failure, because the Government has made its sounding, its drillings, and has said, with a slight exception, that it will be a tight reservoir.

Mr. CRAMTON. As I have said, we have every reason to expect that there will be a favorable report from the Geological Survey; and if so, there will have been no delay; but if their report is to the contrary, then I think we ought to wait.

Mr. MORROW. The point I am trying to make is this: Since 1905 those people have been promised a reservoir by the Government, but they have not yet gotten it, and they have not made a start.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, the Government can not correct geological faults, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. MORROW. But the Government has made survey after survey.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MORROW) there were—ayes 33, noes 57.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, in line 7, page 40, to correct the spelling of the word "Deaver." In the bill it appears as "Dever."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Emergency reconstruction and fighting forest fires: For an additional amount for emergency reconstruction and fighting forest fires in national parks, including the replacement of equipment destroyed by fire in Glacier National Park, fiscal year 1929, $29,000.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLTON: On page 42, line 19, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"For the necessary expenses of an examination of the areas involved in the proposed adjustment of the southeast, south, and southwest boundaries of the Yellowstone National Park by a commission to consist of five members to be appointed by the President, to be known as the Yellowstone National Park Boundary Commission, whose duty it shall be to report to the President its recommendations concerning such adjustment, so much as may be necessary of the appropriations for the Yellowstone National Park for the fiscal year 1930, is hereby made available."

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, let me say in justification of this proposed amendment that the Senate has already passed a joint resolution providing for this work. The Public Lands Committee has reported this resolution to the House and it is now on the Consent Calendar. This simply embodies the same authorization on this bill that is carried in the resolution authorized to be reported by the Public Lands Committee.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Has that resolution now on the Consent Calendar been objected to when it was reached for consideration on Consent Calendar day?

Mr. COLTON. It has not; in fact, it has not been reached, and the purpose of offering this amendment is to insure its passage in case it is not reached. It is a very important matter.

Mr. SCHAFER. Was the legislation in question reported by the legislative committee by unanimous vote of that committee?

Mr. COLTON. It was.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

FREEDMEN'S HOSPITAL

The unexpended balance on June 30, 1929, of the appropriation of $252,000, contained in the Interior Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1929 for an addition to, and remodeling of, the nurses' home, and for certain other physical improvements at Freedmen's Hospital, shall continue available for the same purposes until June 30, 1930.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, with the consent of the chairman in control of the bill, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 22, line 11, for the purpose of permitting the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MCDUFFIE] to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCDUFFIE: On page 22, at the end of line 11, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"For an additional amount for investigations, observations, and reports, forecasts, warnings, and advices for the protection of horticultural interests, including the same objects specified under this head in the agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year 1929, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $7,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Marshals, district attorneys, clerks, and other expenses of United States courts.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD: On page 46, after line 6, insert the following:

"Special assistant attorneys: For compensation and traveling expenses of assistants to the Attorney General and to United States district attorneys employed by the Attorney General to aid in special cases, including the same objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Department of Justice for the fiscal year 1929, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $121,600."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman should give the House some explanation of this amendment. We had no hearings on it and nobody knows about it. My understanding is the Department of Justice estimated $150,000. Why has the gentleman cut this estimate down?

Mr. WOOD. I will state to the gentleman that there is another amendment that follows this one.

Mr. BYRNS. I think the gentleman should certainly give the House some explanation of what this means.

Mr. WOOD. I tried to state to the committee in general debate——

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman knows that in general debate these things are not understood. I myself do not know anything about it.

Mr. WOOD. I will say to the committee that the purpose of this amendment is to carry out the estimates submitted by the Budget for the purpose of enforcing the prohibition law, and this and another amendment that will be offered immediately will comprise the amount that has been allocated by the Budget to the Department of Justice.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. What portion of this $121,000 has been expended—this is a deficiency, is it not?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. A deficiency that exists in the Department of Justice. What part of this amount has been expended by Mrs. Willebrandt and by Mr. Donovan, Assistant Attorneys General, during the last presidential campaign? Does the report show?

Mr. WOOD. I will state for the edification of the gentleman that Mrs. Willebrandt has not, up to this date, filed with me a detailed statement of her expenses and I do not know about them.

Mr. SABATH. Well, has the Attorney General? We ought to know what these moneys are for. This is an item of $121,600.

Mr. WOOD. I will say to the gentleman that Mrs. Willebrandt did not spend one dollar of the money of the United States campaigning in the last campaign.

Mr. SABATH. Is this for the traveling expenses for these assistants to the district attorney?

Mr. WOOD. This provides, among other things, for furnishing legal advice to the district attorneys in such prohibition districts as are not now provided with such special agents and stenographic service to assistants so provided.

Mr. SABATH. What is the salary of the assistant district attorneys?

Mr. WOOD. Six thousand dollars.

Mr. SABATH. Are they appointed under the civil service?

Mr. WOOD. Under the civil service.

Mr. SABATH. On account of services they rendered during the campaign.

Mr. WOOD. That may be a recommendation for them.

Mr. SCHAFER. How much of his salary did Al Smith expend in the campaign and how much did the Association Against Prohibition Amendment spend?

Mr. SABATH. I do not understand, and I do not think anybody else understands the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin. [Laughter.] I do not know how much has been spent; if any amount of money has been spent perhaps the gentleman from Wisconsin knows more about it than I do. I think we are right on this proposition, and all I desired was real information [laughter], because I happen to know that in many of these districts the district attorneys, notwithstanding the crowded dockets in the courts, were around in every section of the country making political speeches, and while thousands and thousands of cases on the dockets were pending they were away without paying any attention to them.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Let me say to the gentleman that in 1920 Mitchell Palmer, then Attorney General, went around the country making a fool of himself, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. SABATH. Well, I do not know about that. The gentleman is going back eight years and stating what one individual has done. But let me say to him that on this question of prohibition a great many other people are making fools of themselves. [Laughter.] I do not say that it is only Republicans that make these mistakes; I concede that there are lots of Democrats as well. [Laughter.] I am perfectly candid about it, but I would like to know how much money is being wasted in that way in the different departments.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana: Strike out "$121,600" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000,000."

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the recommendations for this provision have never been made public. That is, they did not come to the committee before the hearings were made up. There has been no chance for anybody to examine those who submitted these estimates. As I understand it, this is for the purpose of providing additional legal help for district attorneys in enforcing the prohibition law. If that is true, there are more than 16 assistants that are needed. There is not a docket in a Federal court in America to-day that is not crowded with these actions. There is not a district attorney that can not use from one to five assistants in undertaking to work out the cases. It is not fair, regardless of how you view prohibition, to permit a situation of that kind in the Federal courts of the United States.

If the department had sent some one to tell the committee why they needed just this amount, and permit the committee to ask them questions, it might have been developed that we did not need all of this money. We do not know what the need is because no one has had a chance to ask them about it. If they do not use this amount, it will be turned back at the end of the fiscal year. If they need it, they ought to have it provided. I do not think this meager amount of $121,000 is at all adequate.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would support the gentleman's amendment if he would accept a proviso that the money should be expended in all of the 48 States of the Union, and not in a few localities, New York among the number.

Mr. BROWNING. That would be limiting the appropriation. I am not trying to be unfair to the Department of Justice; I am trying to help them.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The law ought to be enforced all over the country.

Mr. BROWNING. I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. About two weeks ago a report came in here from a commission which was authorized to suggest additional penitentiaries. I think three were recommended. Does not the gentleman think we better wait until we have those penitentiaries before employing additional district attorneys? What is the use of having more of these men convicted until we have a place where we can put them?

Mr. BROWNING. Oh, we have plenty of jails in our part of the country that are not full.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Ours are all filled up in my part of the country.

Mr. BROWNING. If we are going to make a stagger at this, we ought to provide sufficient funds to employ the legal help to prosecute these cases. I am not offering this as a mere bit of child's play. I think it is a serious matter and that we ought to provide enough money.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the gentleman's amendment. As the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] stated, a few days ago the report was made by a commission or committee on Federal penal and reformatory institutions that this House created, and I am afraid that the membership of the House did not have time to read that report. Before we vote on this amendment, or the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], I think we ought to familiarize ourselves with this report. In part it says:

The committee found that a very serious crisis confronted those who were administering a Federal penal system, due to the lack of a proper program, and tremendous increase in the number of persons arrested, convicted, and committed for violations—the penitentiaries are overcrowded with those sentenced for more than one year.

The committee also observed in all the county and municipal jails that there was overcrowding. It also states that it has received information which leads it to believe that the same deplorable conditions exist in many of the 1,100 local jails.

The committee also found that no more prisoners should be confined in any of the institutions because of the conditions existing.

Persons convicted or held for violation of the United States statutes are committed not only to the Federal penitentiaries previously mentioned, but are also sent to the county and municipal jails, workhouses, and lockouts. A few are boarded by the Federal Government in the State institutions willing to accept them. In some non-Federal institutions, especially many county and city jails, the conditions are most deplorable. Many of these jails are congested just as badly as the Federal penitentiaries at Leavenworth and Atlanta, and in most of these jails there is no provision for employing the prisoners.

Then they go on with other suggestions and recommendations, stating that there is really no room not only in the Federal but in the State penal institutions. I do not know what the conditions are in Tennessee, but this commission says that in the 1,100 State and county institutions that they visited and investigated, in all of them the conditions are deplorable, that there is no more room for additional inmates. I do not know how and where you would take care of these prisoners if you appointed 16 or 18 or 40 or 50 additional district attorneys, and especially if you should appoint them and send them to the southern section of our country.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman refers to the southern section of the country. The gentleman comes from Chicago. Does he object to having some of them sent to Chicago?

Mr. SABATH. Why, we have not the room. We have just now completed an additional penitentiary or prison out there at a cost of $8,000,000. It is just being opened, and they already find that there is not enough room now for the waiting customers on the list. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WOOD arose.

Mr. SABATH. Oh, do not object. I shall get them later on if the gentleman objects now.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in 10 minutes.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I want two minutes.

Mr. WOOD. Then make is 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois for five minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I dislike to take the time of this House, but you know I do not do it very often. However, at this time I feel obliged to. I remember that 10 or 12 years ago, while the prohibition legislation was pending, all of the leading professional prohibitionists throughout the United States were telling the country and telling you and telling me that if we adopted prohibition, if we adopted the Volstead Act, we would eliminate all of the jails, all of the penitentiaries, and we would be able to dispose of half of our judges. They said that we would become a crimeless nation. What are the conditions? I was amazed when I read this report. Instead of crime being eliminated, this report, which is signed by Mr. COOPER of Ohio, one of the leading prohibitionists of the House, who is fighting day in and day out for prohibition, clearly demonstrates the folly of the prohibition law. I think it has proven a curse to the Nation. Instead of eliminating crime and penal institutions, crime and penal institutions have been increased, and in all of the penal institutions the conditions are deplorable, in some instances terrible, and the number of inmates is increasing annually from 10 to 20 per cent. How far will we permit these conditions to go? Do not you think it is about time that we should stop and think? It does not cost anything to think. Why can not we stop for a moment and get some real sense; legislate sanely as men should? I know you do not approve of the conditions that exist in these penal institutions. You know that you can not improve the conditions that exist in some sections of the country that are called to your attention. I say that conditions in sections of the country that are not being called to your attention, in many instances, are just as bad as they are in those large centers where the newspapers call attention to.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Crime is prevalent everywhere in every section of the United States under the prohibition law. Regardless of Bishop Cannon, regardless of professional prohibitionists, I believe that it is time that we should stop and think and legislate sanely as men and not simply because we are compelled by a certain secret force to vote as they demand and force us to do. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER. In view of the prison conditions existing as shown in the report referred to, does not the gentleman think that the House should hesitate before passing the bill recently passed by the Senate increasing the length of jail sentences for Volstead law violations until such time as we provide additional funds for additional penitentiaries?

Mr. SABATH. Why, of course. I think it will be foolish for us to act now, especially in view of the fact that the President elect has pledged himself to give the Nation a commission, which I have reason to believe and hope will be a commission that will not be controlled by the prohibition officials, but will be fair; and if he does that, I know what the commission will find. The commission will find that it is high time that we should amend the Volstead Act, and in view of that fact any legislation at this moment in that direction is unjustifiable and unwarranted. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, there is nobody in this House who knows just how much the Department of Justice needs in addition to the money already appropriated for this purpose. For some reason that I have not been able to understand, notwithstanding the fact that the newspapers of Washington for two weeks have carried the news that the Secretary of the Treasury had sent to the Committee on Appropriations increased estimates for the enforcement of prohibition, those estimates did not come to the Committee on Appropriations until the day after the subcommittee had concluded its hearings, finished its bill, and sent it down to the Government Printing Office for printing. It was then entirely too late to conduct any hearings on these estimates.

Now, gentlemen, I do not make any charges, but in view of the fact that they had several weeks in which to send these estimates to the Committee on Appropriations, it is very singular, indeed, that they were held back from the Committee on Appropriations until the day after hearings had been concluded and then sent here to be offered on the floor of the House without carrying with them a scintilla of evidence or affording opportunity for any member of the committee to examine those who were responsible for these estimates to learn not only how they intended to use the money for which they are asking but also whether or not more money is needed.

We all know that something additional is needed. There were more than 22,000 cases on the dockets of the Federal Government on October 31, 1928. Something is needed in order to dispose of those cases. Only about 7 per cent, as I recall, of the terminations of trials in the last year were by jury. All the others that were tried, amounting to something like 54,000, were on pleas of guilty, where small fines or small terms of imprisonment were inflicted. Now, we ought to have enough district attorneys and assistant district attorneys who will investigate and try these cases, so they will not hang fire in the courts of this country from term to term and year after year until witnesses disappear and it is impossible to convict.

I am pleading here and I am contending that it is not a question of whether you are wet or dry, but it is a question whether you want the law enforced. That is the only question involved here, whether you want to enforce the Constitution and the laws enacted under it. And we ought to appropriate the money necessary.

I repeat, in view of the unexplainable action of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Budget in sending up these estimates after the hearings were closed, it is impossible for anyone to know just how much money is needed and what ought to be appropriated. I say, therefore, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING] to appropriate this money, and then, if it is not necessary to be used, it will be held; but if it is necessary, then the money will be on hand to enable these officials to dispose of these cases. The cases on hand on October 31, 1928, were 26,602, and 50 per cent of them, or over 11,000, were in seven States, namely, New York, Georgia, West Virginia, Illinois, North Carolina, Florida, and New Jersey. There is a situation that ought to be corrected. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition, but I wish four of those minutes shall go to the gentleman from New York, and I shall use the remaining one minute.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. WOOD. A point of order on that, Mr. Chairman. Such an amendment, in the third degree, would not be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The original proposition was an amendment to which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING] offered an amendment. This is an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am sorry the gentleman from Indiana makes a point of order against my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee should not be agreed to, then the gentleman from New York could offer his amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If it is not agreed to, then I could offer the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, yes, I can.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was not aware of the nature of the gentleman's amendment and withholds his decision. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I shall offer to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING], and to which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] has objected, is simply this, that this money shall be prorated among the several judicial districts of the country. If we are going to have enforcement, as I have stated so many times on the floor of the House, I ask the cooperation of the gentlemen who are sponsors for these larger amounts and who are asking for the enforcement of the law to enforce the law in their own States instead of enforcement only in New York City and a few other cities. Until you get an experience of real enforcement in your own States you will not have a correct understanding of prohibition and really know whether your people at home want prohibition. As long as you have enforcement only in a few spots you play with this proposition, seek enforcement in New York City, while everything is wide open elsewhere. I shall offer this amendment at the proper time, and I shall offer a similar amendment when the increased enforcement appropriation amendment is offered.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I think it will be illuminating to know about the date of availability of these estimates. The deficiency bill was reported to the House on February 21, but went to the printer two or three days before that in order to be made ready for the committee. The Budget estimate for the items in question was dated February 21 by the President and printed after that. It is now available to any Member of the House.

Now, the proposal of the gentleman from Tennessee is to——

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not yield.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield so that I may ask him one simple question?

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not yield.

Mr. BYRNS. It was never laid before the committee.

Mr. CRAMTON. Why, certainly not; and it could not, because it did not get here until after the committee had reported the bill to the House and the bill was in print.

Now, the situation is that the gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment providing $1,000,000 for the appointment of more assistant district attorneys; but under the law the Department of Justice could not use that much money for that purpose, for they can not, under the law, appoint assistant district attorneys except on the certification of the Federal judges, and there have been none of those requests from Federal judges but have been met. So that this money could not be used for that purpose. The item proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, as is shown by the Budget estimate, printed and open to that side as well as to this side, is to be used for special assistants to the Attorney General—one in each of 16 prohibition districts. There are 24 of these districts, and 8 of them now have these men who give legal advice to the prohibition administrator of such district. The item now before you permits 16 more such special assistants to take care of the other 16 districts. That money can be used, and we recommend its appropriation; but the $1,000,000 could not be used, and it would only be a gesture, a political gesture. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BROWNING) there were—ayes 42, noes 89.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk. It is an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA to the amendment offered by Mr. WOOD: After the amendment add the following: "Provided, That said appropriations shall be prorated to each Federal judicial district."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Books for judicial officers: For the purchase of law books, including the exchange thereof, for United States judges, district attorneys, and other judicial officers, including the same objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Department of Justice for the fiscal year 1929, $58,730.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD: On page 47, after line 3, insert the following:

"Miscellaneous expenses: For such miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized or approved by the Attorney General for the United States courts and their officers, including the same objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Department of Justice for the fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $28,800."

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the committee that this item is for the purpose of providing stenographic service to the attorneys who have been provided for in the amendment which was just adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Damage claims, private property: To pay claims for damages to or losses of privately owned property adjusted and determined by the Navy Department, under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case," approved December 28, 1922 (U. S. C. 989, secs. 215–217), as fully set forth in House Documents Nos. 521 and 596, Seventieth Congress, $3,995.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday the Senate adopted an amendment to the naval bill of very considerable interest. It was in this language:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to maintain marines in Nicaragua or to transport marines to or from Nicaragua except in cases of emergency arising hereafter endangering life or property, or both, of American citizens.

That amendment was adopted after the usual debate, which occupies several pages of the RECORD. Much of the debate consisted of bitter criticism of the President's Nicaraguan policy. The amendment was adopted by a vote of 38 Senators for to only 30 against. It was supported by Senator BORAH, who presides with such distinguished ability over the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and who is reputed to have been offered the appointment as Secretary of State by the incoming administration. It was also supported by Senator JONES, the Republican whip. The adoption of the amendment constituted under all rules of interpretation a repudiation and rebuke of a President's foreign policy such as has but rarely occurred in our previous history.

It is, therefore, amazing to read in to-day's newspapers the President's speech of last evening, in which, in commenting upon our foreign relations, he says:

The domestic disorders in Central America are being adjusted with a satisfaction that is almost universal. Even the mouths of those who would rather criticize us than have us do right have been stopped.

His was a Washington day speech, and coming as it did within a few hours after the stinging rebuke from the Senate, we are irresistibly impelled to remember the incident of the cherry tree. [Laughter.]

The President is sarcastic. Now, I am not in a position to speak for "those who would rather criticize than have us do right." In fact, I believe that our singularly unimaginative President has indulged in a wide flight of fancy in implying that there is any such class. There are those who would like for him "to do right," and in that class I am very glad to be enrolled. It is true that on numerous occasions I have criticized the President for his Nicaraguan policy. I have refrained from criticizing him during the past few months, and as it seems that he misinterprets the situation, perhaps, on behalf of myself and others like me, I should give him some explanation for my silence.

The last time we heard from the President upon his Nicaraguan policy we were assured that the marines were being retained in Nicaragua solely for the purpose of helping to hold their election for President and that when the election had been held they would be promptly withdrawn. We realized that his action in that matter was unlawful and unconstitutional but some of us, feeling that further criticism at the time was futile, considered it best to wait until after he had held the election. Then we expected him to redeem his promise. Congress in the meantime was in adjournment.

The election in Nicaragua was held months ago yet the marines have not been withdrawn, and we still hear the silly patter about "Sandino, the bandit," and that everything is quiet and that all was a big success. Nevertheless, some 2,500 of our marines are yet in Nicaragua and the President's promise is unredeemed. His action shows that he regards Nicaragua as an American protectorate.

And now let me give the President an explanation for my silence, since it has become apparent he does not intend to redeem his promise to withdraw the marines. It is due, let me say to him, to the happy realization of the fact that the present head of the Government will soon pass into the shades of civil life. "Brave spirits war not with the dead." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by my friend the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

I regret the gentleman from Alabama would not yield to me. I wanted to correct him. The gentleman stated that the Senate yesterday put an amendment upon the naval appropriation bill to prevent the money there appropriated from being expended to maintain our marines in Nicaragua.

That was not done by the Senate. It was done by the Committee of the Whole over there, and in the Senate to-day the amendment referred to was stricken out. [Applause.]

I think so much of my friend from Alabama and value his services here so highly I did not want it to appear that he was making his remarks on our Nicaraguan affairs without information as to what had taken place over in the Senate to-day. [Laughter and applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE FOURTH ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL

Rural Delivery Service: For an additional amount for the Rural Delivery Service for the fiscal year 1929, including the same objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1929, $250,000.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if anything has been done with regard to increasing the salaries of the postmasters in the higher-class post offices like the post offices at New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, and the other large cities.

Mr. WOOD. I will say to the gentleman there is nothing in this bill that has anything to do with that matter.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Did they not appear before the Committee on Appropriations with reference to the matter?

Mr. WOOD. No.

Mr. O'CONNELL. The question was thoroughly discussed during the last session, and something should be done about it. I have in mind particularly the post offices in Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, New York, and Brooklyn. In New York, for instance, the postmaster handles 17,000 men at a ridiculous salary for himself, and the late distinguished Representative from Illinois, Mr. Madden, during a speech I made on this floor at the last session regarding the New York and Brooklyn and larger offices, stated that the salaries of these postmasters were utterly inadequate, were ridiculous, and that they should receive more money for the important and valuable work they are doing.

Mr. WOOD. I will say to the gentleman from New York that that is a legislative proposition, and I understand there is a measure of that character pending before the Committee on the Post Office.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Oh, it has been pending for a long, long time; but nothing has been done about it.

Mr. WOOD. We certainly could not appropriate the money until we had some authorization.

Mr. DOWELL. For the information of the gentleman from New York I will say that that bill is in the Senate now. It has not passed that body.

Mr. O'CONNELL. In the bill now before the Senate, as the gentleman contends, are the salaries of these officers being increased?

Mr. DOWELL. I think that is correct.

Mr. O'CONNELL. This bill originated in the House?

Mr. DOWELL. The bill passed the House and is now waiting action by the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNELL] has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Waterways treaty, United States and Great Britain, International Joint Commission, United States and Great Britain: For an additional amount for the waterways treaty, United States and Great Britain, International Joint Commission, United States and Great Britain, fiscal year 1929, including the same objects and purposes specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Department of State for the fiscal year 1929, and for printing and binding, $11,800.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD: On page 58, line 16, after the sum "$11,800," insert "which amount may be transferred by the Secretary of State, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to the United States Geological Survey, for direct expenditure."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SELVIG. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SELVIG: Insert after line 16, on page 58, the following:

"For an additional amount for the waterways treaty, United States and Great Britain, International Joint Commission, United States and Great Britain, fiscal year 1930, including the same objects and purposes specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Department of State for the fiscal year 1930, and for printing and binding, $15,000; these amounts may be transferred by the Secretary of State, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to the United States Geological Survey for direct expenditure."

Mr. SELVIG. Mr. Chairman, this is an additional amount to be expended in surveys on the Roseau River drainage area in Minnesota. Roseau River is an international stream. It rises in Canada, flows through Minnesota, and then flows again through Canada. Certain flood-control problems have arisen which involve both countries.

The project has been referred to the International Joint Commission, and the purpose of this amendment is to expedite the investigation by the United States Geological Survey in order that it may be completed, if possible, in the year 1930.

I may say that the International Joint Commission had a meeting regarding the Roseau River reference on yesterday and the day before, and from the representations made by the Canadian engineers I would say it is urgent that this investigation be completed at as early a date as possible, and I trust the amendment will prevail.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SELVIG. Yes.

Mr. FISH. Has this anything to do with the St. Lawrence project?

Mr. SELVIG. No; it has not. It is the Roseau River in northwestern Minnesota.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SELVIG. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. The Public Lands Committee of the House has had under discussion for the last three days the boundary waters, including Rainy Lake. Does this added amount indicate the amount required for the publication of the report that has been made on the water levels that may be brought about by the construction of dams, and so forth?

Mr. SELVIG. This does not refer to Rainy Lake nor to Lake of the Woods.

Mr. ARENTZ. I am advised by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] that this is another item.

Mr. SELVIG. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 60, after line 23, insert the following:

"Bureau of Prohibition: For an additional amount for enforcement of the narcotic and national prohibition acts, including the same objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1930, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $1,719,654, of which not exceeding $50,000 may be expended for the collection and dissemination of information and appeal for law observance and law enforcement, including cost of printing and other necessary expenses in connection therewith."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. BANKHEAD to the amendment offered by Mr. WOOD:

Strike out "$1,709,654" and insert: "For the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment to the national prohibition act and supplementary acts, the tariff acts, and all laws pertaining to the traffic in intoxicating liquor and narcotics, the sum of $24,000,000, or such portion thereof as the President may deem useful to be expended in the discretion of the President through the Department of Justice, Coast Guard, Customs Bureau, Prohibition Bureau; and he may allot a sufficient sum or amount to the Civil Service Commission for the examination and investigation of eligibles for employment in the enforcement of such laws in the various agencies above mentioned, in accordance with existing law, and to remain available until June 30, 1930."

Mr. WOOD. I reserve a point of order on the substitute.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. WOOD. Then I make the point of order. I reserved the point of order because it was impossible for me to hear the reading by the Clerk on account of confusion. My idea was that it would give me an opportunity to examine the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad for the gentleman to examine it. My purpose in demanding the regular order was that if the gentleman from Indiana really proposed to make the point of order he might make it and get the matter disposed of. But I ask unanimous consent that the substitute amendment may be reported again.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, can we not have both amendments rereported—the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana and the substitute by the gentleman from Alabama?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that can be done. The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will report first the amendment by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk again read the amendment offered by Mr. WOOD.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think it would be more regular, Mr. Chairman, if I offered my amendment as a substitute.

Mr. WOOD. I will withdraw the point of order and ask unanimous consent that all debate on this item and all amendments thereto be closed in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the Bankhead amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the Wood amendment insert:

"For the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment in the national prohibition act and supplementary acts, the tariff acts, and all laws pertaining to the traffic in intoxicating liquors and narcotics, the sum of $24,000,000, or such portion as the President may deem useful, to be expended in the discretion of the President through the Department of Justice, Coast Guard, Customs Bureau, Prohibition Bureau; and he may allot a sufficient sum or amount to the Civil Service Commission for the examination and investigation of eligibles for employment in the enforcement of such laws in the various agencies above mentioned, in accordance with existing law, and to remain available until June 30, 1930."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in 10 minutes.

Several Members objected.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. BOYLAN. This is new legislation; it is appropriating money that has not been heretofore authorized.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BOYLAN. You can not make a point of order until you hear the amendment first read.

The CHAIRMAN. This reading was the second reading. One amendment had been offered and another had been offered as a substitute for it, and debate had been had.

Mr. BOYLAN. I have not heard any debate.

The CHAIRMAN. A unanimous-consent request had been made that the two amendments be reread.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, the confusion in the House was such that nobody knew what was going on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to discuss his amendment.

Mr. BOYLAN. The gentleman from Indiana reserved the point of order until the substitute could be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdrew his point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am indeed very much pleased that we now have an opportunity in the Committee of the Whole for a clean-cut expression of opinion upon the part of the membership of the House upon the matter now in controversy, and if the result of that vote in the Committee of the Whole is not satisfactory, because it will not present a vote of record, I trust that the opportunity will arise before we conclude the consideration of the bill to have a record vote upon the proposition involved in my substitute. [Applause.] It is needless for me to undertake to explain the purposes of this amendment. For a good many days now in the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in the press of the country, and in the cloakrooms and corridors of the Capitol this proposition has been well discussed and the purpose of it is well understood. In presenting this substitute we are here offering an opportunity for the Members of this House to show by their vote whether or not the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States and of the Volstead law, which carries the provisions of that amendment into effect, shall have a full and fair and unhampered opportunity to be tried out on their merits by those charged with the duty of enforcing them, without having an excuse that they have not been supplied with adequate funds with which to carry out that duty. We need not try to deceive ourselves about this great question. As the guardians of the Treasury, as well as the guardians of the interests of the people of this country who believe in the eighteenth amendment and who believe in enforcement of the laws passed in pursuance thereto, we have the duty to see to it that an honest, diligent, persistent effort is made by those whose responsibility it is to enforce it, and the only thing involved in this amendment is to give to the incoming President of the United States, Mr. Hoover, a man who by the votes in the last election evidently has the confidence of the majority of the people of the United States, a man who went into the campaign supported by the so-called prohibition forces of the country in large measure, ample funds with which to honestly carry out an effort to enforce what he himself calls "this noble experiment in human welfare."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman now offers an amendment for an additional $24,000,000. How does it happen that he offers that now, and that a year ago was entirely content with the amount recommended by the administration, which has not been reduced?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I say to the gentleman that I have entirely lost all confidence in the present administration of the Secretary of the Treasury as having any real desire to enforce the constitutional amendment. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Let me ask the gentleman this——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I answered the gentleman's question yesterday. The gentleman chided me for my apparent indifference as a prohibitionist to the amount we were annually appropriating for enforcement. Heretofore I have been following his leadership as one of the dry leaders here in this House, particularly in view of his place upon the Committee on Appropriations, but finding that he has abandoned us in this fight, I now embrace the opportunity to act on my own initiative and present this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SABATH) there were—ayes 103, noes 72.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. WOOD and Mr. BANKHEAD to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 108, noes 73.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Alabama, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that that would be an amendment in the third degree.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to a substitute is an amendment in the second degree. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New York to the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the figures "$24,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$300,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment to the substitute.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SCHAFER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 3, noes 61.

So the amendment to the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. WOOD and Mr. BANKHEAD to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 71, noes 134.

So the Bankhead substitute was rejected.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment to the committee amendment. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FISH to the committee amendment: Strike out the figures "$1,719,654" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,919,654 (for narcotic enforcement)."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 79.

So the Fish amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no further debate on this section or the amendments thereto. The debate is exhausted.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC DEBT SERVICE

Distinctive paper for United States securities: For an amount necessary to purchase during the fiscal year 1929 not exceeding 200,000 additional pounds of distinctive paper for United States currency, national-bank currency, and Federal reserve-bank currency, including transportation of paper and other necessary expenses, and including the same objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1929, $100,000.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, by almost a strictly party vote and through strategic Republican rules you have been able, first, to refer a very important item to your committee and thus prevent the voice of the majority of the Members of your House from being heard, and then, second, through a few wet manipulators, headed by a wet dictator in the person of your wet Secretary of the Treasury, resorted to all manner of parliamentary tactics, and would not even permit us to debate an item upon which the voice of America has demanded we should be heard. You have caused your dry Republicans to vote and go through the line in opposition to this item for prohibition enforcement.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. Not now. I will later if I can get more time.

You have, my friends, denied the majority of the membership of this House the right to vote and the right to express themselves on a vital issue. [Applause.] You have by your non-record vote recently refused to put yourselves on record and also refused the Democrats the right to go on record. The wet Members of this House on the Democratic side appear willing to go on record and we Democratic drys surely are.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The gentleman is out of order. He is not discussing the question embodied in his amendment. I demand that he confine his remarks to his amendment.

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin for his question.

Mr. SCHAFER. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that almost as many Democrats voted the way he denounces as did Republicans?

Mr. GREEN. No; I think not. The wet Democrats apparently are not afraid of their position, and they vote it and speak it; and the dry Democrats are not afraid of their vote. We stand open and above board. But your party denies them the right by your autocratic rules. [Applause.] Even your leaders confer and you at once decide to close debate by enforcing your autocratic rules. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman professes to believe in majority rule. If the majority desires to close debate the gentleman should not be unduly exercised.

Mr. GREEN. A majority of this House desires prohibition enforcement, but are not by Republican House rule permitted to express themselves. I say it is a disgrace and an outrage upon the conscience of America to thus repress voice and record vote. [Applause.] I denounce rules which prohibit carrying out the will of the majority of the people. My friends, you well remember the honor roll, so called, that has been published recently in some of your Republican newspapers.

To this so-called honor roll you might as well add other nullificationists and revolters against the Federal Constitution. Why not add on that roll others of an illustrious line of those who have revolted against law, the Constitution, and constituted authority? I refuse to place on a roll of honor persons because they revolt against the Constitution's amendments. I prefer to place on a roll of honor all noble and patriotic American citizens who support the Constitution, uphold the law, and protect the heritages and moral institutions of our country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

The gentleman from Indiana moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GREEN) there were—ayes 100, noes 27.

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Customs.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD: On page 60, after line 6, insert the following:

"Collecting the revenue from customs: For an additional amount for collecting the revenue from customs and the detection and prevention of frauds upon the customs revenue, including the same objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1930, $707,860."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

The limitations upon the amounts which may be expended for rental of quarters in the District of Columbia under the appropriations "Collecting the internal revenue, 1929," and "Collecting the internal revenue, 1930," are hereby increased to $223,058 and $233,305, respectively.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation represents one of the most famous surrenders of history. There they are—Marshal Mellon, Aide-de-Camp Mills, and CRAMTON, the terrible, bending the knee to the proud conqueror McBride. Cornwallis was heroic compared to the paralyzed leaders of the administration.

No wonder Bishop Cannon can stand before the Sphinx in an attitude a la Napoleon, it looks like rain.

WILL WOOD beat a strategic retreat saving twenty-two million from the bandits and he ought to get a congressional medal. I suppose, though, when they take him into camp they will search him and find the twenty-two in his hip pocket with—the conference report on the first deficiency bill.

Of course I dislike the way CRAMTON and COOPER deserted the wets, but we will always have the consolation of their brave but transient words on the twenty-four million. Certainly they will be treated as the prodigal sons, but when they return again to us we will give them a better time.

When COOPER and CRAMTON crossed the Rubicon they knew they had return tickets. CRAMTON was only a member of Tammany for an hour, but during that hour he illustrated the story of the rabbit, the rum, and the bulldog. Maybe we will live down his desertion from our ranks.

There is nothing for the farmers in this bill, but the drys get theirs. Congress comes to the relief of fanaticism like March hares, but it moves like an asthmatic tortoise toward farm relief.

Here are the drys pressing the Jones bill that is supposed to can the bootleggers forever, and yet they need more money for enforcement.

But I suppose the world will go on—and we might as well have the same confidence in it as Doctor LONGWORTH.

The Clerk read as follows:

Coast Guard.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNS: Page 61, after line 18, insert: "For every expenditure requisite for and incident to the authorized work of the Coast Guard, including the expense of maintenance, repair, and operation of vessels forfeited to the United States and delivered to the Treasury Department under the terms of the act approved March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. 1117), as follows, including not to exceed $1,250 for purchase, exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes:

"For pay and allowances prescribed by law for commissioned officers, cadets, warrant officers, petty officers, and other enlisted men, active and retired, temporary cooks, and surfmen, substitute surfmen, and two civilian instructors, and not exceeding $6,000 for cash prizes for men for excellence in gunnery, target practice, and engineering competitions, for carrying out the provisions of the act of June 4, 1920 (U. S. C. 1143, sec. 943), rations or commutation thereof for cadets, petty officers, and other enlisted men, $1,000,000."

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BYRNS. What is the ground of the gentleman's point of order,

Mr. WOOD. I have not seen the amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the point of order has been made and the burden is on the gentleman who offered the amendment to show that there is law to substantiate the proposed appropriation, I suggest that the gentleman from Tennessee point out the law.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman from Indiana made the point of order and not the gentleman from Michigan, and I would like to have him state on what ground the point of order is made.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman from Michigan has a perfect right to make and does make the point of order that there is no legislation authorizing such an appropriation, and having done that, the gentleman from Tennessee has the burden of showing the legislation to support the proposed appropriation.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman can make that statement, but if the gentleman heard this amendment——

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not had a chance to hear it or to read it?

Mr. BYRNS. Then how does the gentleman know it is legislation?

Mr. CRAMTON. But the burden is on the gentleman to show it is not legislation.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman talks just as well without information as he does with it. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, if I were seeking information and went to the gentleman from Tennessee for it, I would know I had gone to the wrong place to get it. [Applause.] The Chair has the right to get from the gentleman the information I suggested, but now that my colleague [Mr. WOOD] has had a chance to read the amendment, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LEHLBACH). The procedure is this: It devolves upon the proponent of any amendment, in the first instance, to support it when a point of order is raised, but the person raising the point of order must state what that point is in order that the gentleman may know the defense he must make against it.

Mr. WOOD. I will say to the gentleman that there are objects named in this proposed amendment that are not authorized by law. Among these are prizes for men for excellence in gunnery, target practice, and engineering competitions for carrying out the provisions of the act of June 4, 1920.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment was taken from the Treasury appropriation bill. It is identically the same language that was passed by the House in the Treasury appropriation bill and under which an appropriation of $19,000,000 is carried. I think it is very clear, Mr. Chairman. The matter has been tested, and, as I say, was passed in the regular annual appropriation bill in identically the same language, and it simply provides for this money to be expended for all purposes requisite for and incident to the authorized work of the Coast Guard. Of course, if the Chair holds that language to be out of order I will strike it out and reoffer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee permit the Chair to direct an inquiry to him?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; I will be pleased to.

The CHAIRMAN. The mere fact that an item has previously been carried in an appropriation bill, without objection having been made thereto, is not even prima facie proof of its being based on some authority of law, because frequently items are permitted to pass without a point of order being raised against them because of their substantial merit. Now, can the gentleman from Tennessee refer to any act or statute permitting these specific expenditures or permitting the appropriation of money therefor?

Mr. BYRNS. It is my impression, Mr. Chairman, although I am not very certain about it, that the act of June 4, 1920, provides for prizes for excellence in gunnery, target practice, and engineering competition. As I say, I am not absolutely certain about it, but I think that act so provides. I have not the act before me.

Mr. WOOD. If the gentleman from Tennessee will permit, I wish to say to the gentleman that we have appropriated for all that was required by the department and all that is authorized by the law for the very purposes set out in this item, but in order to save time, I will withdraw my point of order and let the committee vote on it.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up the time of the committee, but I do want to consume just about five minutes on this amendment. I have no doubt, of course, that this amendment will meet with the opposition of the doughty leader of the wets, the gentleman from Wisconsin, but what has surprised me during the afternoon on the votes on all these propositions is that so many of these so-called earnest drys on the other side of the House have followed his leadership [laughter], and we find them lined up solidly with the gentleman from Milwaukee who boldly states upon the floor of the House that he is opposed to any appropriation for the purpose of enforcing the prohibition law.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield? [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS. If I have misquoted the gentleman; yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. I did not see the gentleman who is now speaking stand up and vote for the $300,000,000 amendment.

Mr. BYRNS. When the gentleman rose I thought he was going to contradict the statement I made and I yielded to him only for that purpose.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this morning I talked at some length with reference to the statements by Admiral Billard, of the Coast Guard. I challenge every man in this House to take the hearings on the deficiency bill and read his hearing and read particularly what he said about his inability to effectually prevent smuggling on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts because he did not have sufficient boats and sufficient money——

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I can not, I am sorry. If I could get an extension of time I would be pleased to yield.

Mr. PARKER. We have a bill on the calendar now authorizing that.

Mr. BYRNS. I am sorry I can not tell you just how much he needs——

Mr. PARKER (interposing). And he can not.

Mr. BYRNS. He sent a report to the Secretary of the Treasury, according to his statement, two weeks before February 8, in which he stated how many men and boats he needed and he so stated in his hearing on the deficiency bill; but for some reason we could not get that report in the hearings and the House is entirely in the dark as to just what is needed, although, according to Admiral Billard, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Assistant Secretary have complete information in their possession. Therefore I have offered this increased appropriation of $1,000,000, not with the idea that it is sufficient but it will at least afford an opportunity to the admiral between now and next December, when the next appropriation will be made, to start the work and to begin to enlist the Coast Guard personnel.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I am sorry I can not yield. I have only five minutes. The gentleman knows that the House is restive and I do not wish to ask an extension. If I can get an extension, I will yield to all of you gentlemen.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended three minutes.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. That is not enough. Make it five minutes.

Mr. PARKER. I simply want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact——

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BYRNS. Do not take all of my time.

Mr. PARKER. I am not going to do that. There is a bill now on the calendar authorizing the commissioned personnel. Admiral Billard, before our committee, stated that he had all the officers now that the law would allow and there is a bill on the calendar which will be brought up next week.

Mr. BYRNS. On the contrary, I will say to the gentleman that the admiral stated, and I challenge the gentleman to read the record, that he has 65 places now that are not filled.

Mr. PARKER. Not in the commissioned grade.

Mr. BYRNS. That are not filled by commissioned personnel. If the gentleman will read the hearings on the deficiency bill he will find that statement.

What good does it do to have a bill upon the calendar and never call it up and never pass it? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. PARKER. I will say to the gentleman that the bill has just been reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BYRNS) there were—ayes 56, noes 102.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Greenwood (Miss.) post office: For commencement of extension and remodeling, under an estimated total cost of $90,000.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 71, strike out lines 1, 2, and 3 and insert "Greenwood (Miss.) post office: For extension and remodeling, $90,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

San Luis (Ariz.) inspection station: For commencement of construction of a building for the accommodation of border-inspection services, $20,000, under an estimated total cost of $58,500; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to transfer to the Treasury Department as a site for an inspection station at San Luis, Ariz., part of lots 3 and 4, section 12, township 11 south, range 25 west, to be selected by the Secretary of the Treasury with the approval of the Secretary of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 80, line 19, strike out the words "the department of."

Mr. WOOD. That is merely to clarify the language.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice the appropriation for various post offices; I want to ask the gentleman what has become of the additional appropriation for the Chicago Post Office? I remember that 20 years ago I secured the first appropriation for the post office in Chicago of $1,000,000, but the post office has not been built. I know the site has been acquired at a tremendous price. I want to know if the balance of the site has been acquired and when we can expect to get relief?

Mr. WOOD. The authorization has been had and the appropriation made for acquiring the site and commencing the building. They have had a great deal of trouble in getting all the land that they desired. They had to condemn some of it, but I understand the title now has been completed.

Mr. SABATH. We are paying to-day to the Pennsylvania Railroad for lease for the substation a tremendous price. I do not know whether it is $150,000 or $170,000 a year, but it is a price that is outrageous. We feel that a post office that was authorized 20 years ago should have been completed long before this and we think that this exorbitant price that we are paying for rental ought to cease.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS] has sent an amendment to the desk. Does he offer it at this time?

Mr. SIMMONS. No, Mr. Chairman; it comes in later.

Mr. SABATH. Now, will the gentleman let me ask one further question? How late does the gentleman intend to go on to-night?

Mr. WOOD. If we do not have many more speeches, we will get through soon. We want to pass this bill to-night, and I hope the gentleman will help us.

Mr. SABATH. That is what I am trying to do. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Santa Ana (Calif.) post office, etc.: For acquisition of site and commencement of construction, $50,000, under an estimated total cost of $245,000.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, respecting an item on page 77, line 17, for Pembina, N. Dak., customhouse, there is provision for the acquisition of a site and the commencement of construction of a building for the accommodation of the Customs Service there and the Immigration Service, and the total estimated cost of it is $115,000. I am wondering what kind of a place Pembina is, and how great its importance is to the people that we should spend $115,000 there to construct a building.

Mr. WOOD. The building is for the accommodation of the customs activities and for the Immigration Service. It is one of the most important points that we have along the Canadian border.

Mr. O'CONNELL. How important is it in the matter of customs receipts?

Mr. WOOD. The customs receipts there are over $200,000 a year.

The Clerk read as follows:

West Warwick (R. I.) post office, etc.: for acquisition of site and commencement of construction, $30,000, under an estimated total cost of $140,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIMMONS: Page 80, after line 22, insert: "Scottsbluff (Nebr.) post office: The limit of cost fixed by the act of March 5, 1928 (45 Stat. 181), is hereby increased to $125,000, and the building shall be so constructed that accommodations for the courts may be added later."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] for a moment. It came to us on this side a few moments ago from what we always have been accustomed to regard as a source thoroughly reliable, that if any Member undertook to speak on any public-building project in this bill in which he might have an interest, there were sufficient votes on that side to throw the item out of the bill. That has had a very salutary effect, as the gentleman from Indiana must have observed. [Laughter.] I now rise to ask the gentleman from Indiana if we can turn that matter around, and where a project is not in the bill whether, if one will refrain from speaking on the project but will merely offer an amendment, the gentleman from Indiana will accept it? [Laughter.]

Mr. SABATH. That might help me in Chicago very much, and that is what I wanted to know. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOOD. I am fearful that if we agreed to that we would not get away from here in a week.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, under that statement, that "cruel and heartless" statement of the gentleman from Indiana, I shall not offer an amendment, and I withdraw the pro forma amendment to show my perfect good faith. [Applause and laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Operating force for public buildings: For additional amounts of such personal services as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary in connection with the care, maintenance, and repair of all public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the acts making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the following fiscal years.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD: Page 84, line 11, after the word "amounts," strike out the word "of" and insert the word "for."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, the pending deficiency bill (H. R. 17223) carries an appropriation of $25,000 for commencement of construction of the Trenton (Mo.) Federal building, under an estimated cost of $75,000. In order to justify this expenditure and show the necessity for this building I will say that Trenton is a prosperous and rapidly growing city, with an estimated population of 8,492 on June 30, 1926. It is the county seat of Grundy County, a section of rich and diversified agricultural resources. It is served by and is the division point on two great railroad systems. It is noted for its churches, schools, railroad shops, business activities, sound and well-managed banks, civic spirit, and its high type of citizenship. In few, if any, places has the community spirit been more highly, successfully, and profitably developed. The "Trenton idea" or the "Trenton plan" of comradeship, cooperation, and community of interest between the citizens of a municipality and the population of surrounding territory was conceived, incubated, developed, perfected, and first successfully applied in Trenton and vicinity, from whence it has gone triumphantly over the Nation, carrying its benefits and blessings to countless communities.

The people of Trenton and Grundy County are progressive, law-abiding, upstanding, forward-looking, sociable, hospitable, and at all times liberal in support of schools, good roads, churches, public improvements, and everything else designed to promote the public good, build up the community, and make for better government, better homes, and better citizenry. I mention these things in order that my colleagues may get a long-distance acquaintance with the people of Trenton and Grundy County, Mo., who have long been denied this public building to which they are justly entitled. If you knew these good people as I know them, and if you knew the needs of the Postal Service in that community, you would realize beyond the peradventure of a doubt that Trenton really needs, deserves, and must have this Federal building. No one familiar with the facts will deny that a Government building should have been constructed in Trenton many years ago; and voting for the pending bill will not leave a bad taste in your mouth or necessitate any apology, because the business needs of the community, the postal receipts, and the demands of the Postal Service not only justify but make it imperative that this Trenton building should be constructed.

The Federal Government has but recently adopted a new public-building program that is fully justified on business and economic grounds. Trenton is the first county seat in Missouri to get a Federal building for many years. When Congress resumed its public building construction program, in order to prevent a few large cities and States from "gobbling up" the $150,000,000 appropriation, a provision was inserted in the authorization act requiring at least two public buildings to be constructed in each State. Under a survey made in January, 1927, by the Treasury and Post Office Departments it was found that Trenton was entitled to the first Federal building to be constructed in Missouri under the provisions of this new public-buildings program. Of course, this finding pleased me immensely; and under all the facts—when population, postal receipts, and other factors were considered—Trenton was undoubtedly more entitled to a public building than any other city in the State. The award of this building to Trenton—an act of manifest justice—was based on postal receipts, city population, and population served in the city and adjoining territory.

The receipts of the Trenton post office were as follows: 1926, $25,282; 1927, $26,235; and 1928, $25,438. In 1926, according to the survey made by the Treasury and Post Office Departments, the Trenton post office served a population in and adjoining Trenton of 11,948, which number has probably materially increased since that date.

The Trenton building will be a 1-story structure with basement. It will be of fireproof construction and have a ground area of approximately 4,500 square feet—3,450 square feet for post-office purposes and 225 square feet for the internal-revenue agents. The building will be brick faced and stone trimmed.

I may add, from the survey made by the Treasury and Post Office Departments, that Sikeston is entitled to the second public building to be constructed in Missouri under the building program to which I have referred.

The Clerk read as follows:

Any unexpended balances under the appropriations "Monument, Kill Devil Hill, Kitty Hawk, N. C., 1929," and "Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania County Battle Fields Memorial, 1928 and 1929," are continued and made available during the fiscal year 1930 for the same respective purposes.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. TARVER: Amend by adding after line 18, on page 87: "Government road, Rossville, Ga., to Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park: For carrying out the provisions of the act 'An act to provide for the paving of the Government road, known as the Dry Valley Road, commencing where said road leaves the La Fayette Road in the city of Rossville, Ga., and extending to Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, constituting an approach road to said park,' approved February, 1929, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $60,000, to be subject to the terms and conditions of acceptance of title and maintenance as set forth in said act."

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the amendment is acceptable to the gentleman in charge of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Memorial at Lititz, Pa.: For every expenditure requisite for or incident to the erection of a tablet or marker at Lititz, Pa., in accordance with the provisions of the act approved May 23, 1928 (45 Stat. 718), fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $2,500.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HOCH). The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: Page 88, after line 9, insert "Battle fields of Brices Cross Roads and Tupelo, Miss.: For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of Public Law No. 792, approved February 21, 1929, to provide for the inspection of the battle fields of Brices Cross Roads, Miss., and the battle field of Tupelo or Harrisburg, Miss., $10,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Restoration of Lee mansion: For continuing the restoration of the Lee mansion, Arlington National Cemetery, Va., and the procurement, including gifts, of articles of furniture and equipment which were formerly in use in such mansion, or replicas thereof, or other furniture and equipment of the period, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved March 4, 1925 (43 Stat. 1356), $90,000, to remain available until expended. Such restoration and the articles so procured to be subject to the approval of the Commission of Fine Arts.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the reading has progressed more rapidly than I was aware. I desired to say something about the preceding item. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to extend my remarks, and in doing so I would like to insert a letter I have written and some other comments.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the item of appropriation just read will go far in carrying into effect the act of Congress of March 4, 1925, for the restoration of the Lee mansion. That resolution reads as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing the restoration of the Lee mansion in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va.

Whereas the era of internecine strife among the States having yielded to one of better understanding, of common loyalty, and of a more perfect Union; and

Whereas now honor is accorded Robert E. Lee as one of the great military leaders of history, whose exalted character, noble life, and eminent services are recognized and esteemed, and whose manly attributes of precept and example were compelling factors in cementing the American people in bonds of patriotic devotion and action against common external enemies in the war with Spain and in the World War, thus consummating the hope of a reunited country that would again swell the chorus of the Union: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, as nearly as may be practicable, to restore the Lee mansion in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va., to the condition in which it existed immediately prior to the Civil War and to procure, if possible, articles of furniture and equipment which were then in the mansion and in use by the occupants thereof. He is also authorized, in his discretion, to procure replicas of the furniture and other articles in use in the mansion during the period mentioned, with a view to restoring, as far as may be practicable, the appearance of the interior of the mansion to the condition of its occupancy by the Lee family.

I introduced the resolution in question in the Sixty-eighth Congress, and it passed both Houses unanimously. I was indebted to the gifted Clerk of the House, Mr. William Tyler Page, for the phraseology of the resolution, it being drafted by him at my request. A year ago an appropriation was made to study and investigate the problem. As a result of that study the Quartermaster General is now prepared to go ahead with the work of restoration and this appropriation will make possible great progress. It is work which needs to be done with care and thoughtfully along proper lines. Hence the item is available until expended, and the cooperation and approval of the Fine Arts Commission is provided for. When properly done, it will add much of interest to the visit of the tens of thousands who visit Arlington annually. Now the mansion is barren and a disappointment to all, the cause of constant unfavorable comment. When restored, every visitor to Arlington will view in exterior and in interior a home of the best type of the pre-Civil War period, just as Mount Vernon typifies and preserves for posterity the best type of home of the American Colonial period. Wonderfully located, it will have charm for the visitor, both without and within.

The incidental recognition to Lee is deserved and timely. My father, who served more than four years in the Union Army in forces operating in Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania in opposition to Lee's forces, is still living. It was from him that I first learned, in my boyhood, to admire Lee. When the resolution in question became law, with occasional word of criticism in some quarters, he spoke to me in approval of it, and said:

I have always regarded Lee as a great American.

The general spirit of reunion in America, sanctified as it is by mingled blood of North and South in two wars, 1898 and 1918, is remarkable, so recent was the bitter fratricidal strife. It is not strange there should be an occasional word of criticism.

Such a word came to me when this resolution became law. It came from a man in my State for whom I have high respect. I wrote him in reply, December 4, 1925, as follows:

DECEMBER 4, 1925.

MY DEAR SIR: I have your letter of November 19 with reference to the proposed restoration of the mansion at Arlington. I am sorry, indeed, to note the position of your organization with reference to this.

As the son of a veteran of the Civil War who served four years under Sheridan and Custer, and as a member of the Order of the Sons of Veterans continuously for over 30 years, I have the very highest regard for the attitude of the Grand Army of the Republic upon any question. I feel, however, that the position taken in this instance has been without full realization of the exact situation. You speak of the contemplated plan by the Daughters of the Confederacy to create the Arlington mansion into a shrine for Gen. Robert E. Lee. This is not the case.

The plan is mine. I initiated the movement for the restoration of the Arlington Mansion and I am willing to take full responsibility for it. It was never suggested to me by the Daughters of the Confederacy or by any other southern source. I have frequently visited Arlington Cemetery with friends from Michigan in the course of the 12 years or more that I have been in Washington. Anyone who has ever accompanied me there has expressed regret at the barren and uninteresting condition of the interior of the mansion, and all have indorsed my idea that the interior should be refurnished and restored as nearly as possible to its old condition when occupied as a home. If to be restored to its old condition as it was when occupied by a home, it must necessarily be the home of Gen. Robert E. Lee, for it was General Lee and his wife who occupied it last before it came into the possession of the Federal Government. Incidentally, therefore, when restored to its condition as a home of the pre-Civil War period, it does honor to General Lee. It will have very great interest to the many thousand visitors at Arlington to see there a fine type of home of the pre-Civil War period just as people enjoy seeing a home of the Colonial period at Mount Vernon. The fact that, incidentally, honor is shown to General Lee, I do not regret. I am perfectly willing to do that.

The Civil War is long over. No one to-day seeks to promote the cause for which the South fought and General Lee led in time of war. No one dreams of the return of slavery and no one longer holds that an individual State has the right to secede from the Union. Those who fought the battles of the North in the Civil War may have the satisfaction of knowing that in all the history of the world there never has been a war fought in which great issues were so definitely and finally settled as in our Civil War. The issues for which the North fought were settled in accordance with the contentions of the North. The Union was preserved and nowhere in any State, North or South, is there to-day any desire for it to be otherwise.

Furthermore, the Civil War is unique in that within the lifetime of those men who, like yourself, made possible the victory, the sectional bitterness which accompanied it has passed away, and that in two foreign wars since that time South and North have fought and sacrificed side by side. We do not glorify secession or slavery, but we may very well take pride in the high character and the great ability of Gen. Robert E. Lee, and can well afford to pay passing tribute to them.

It is not always remembered, but it should be remembered, that while Gen. Robert E. Lee led the armed forces of the Confederacy in war, he was not a leader in the movement that brought about the war and had no responsibility for the secession of his State. Furthermore, while he had led in time of war, he led also after the surrender in the movement for acceptance of the results of the war by the South, and it is due in part to such men as he in the South that the Union has again so speedily in spirit as in law become a reality. No one was in a position to exert a greater moral influence in the South after the surrender than General Lee, and every ounce of that influence was exerted in favor of acceptance of the results of the conflict and restoration of the Union. His attitude was summed up in the advice which he gave to a young student at the university of which he was the president after the war. This student had served as a soldier during the war, and in discussion at the university had given expression very strongly to disunion sentiments. Charles Francis Adams relates that later, General, then President Lee, sent for the student, and after praising the composition and delivery seriously warned him against holding or advancing such views, impressing strongly upon him the unity of the Nation, and urging him to devote himself loyally to maintain the integrity and the honor of the United States.

The Grand Army of the Republic has no occasion to have any fear for the future of the Republic. The work which they accomplished by force of arms was so thoroughly done as to have settled forever the questions involved. Soldiers of the North in the Civil War made the Union forever secure.

The accomplished era of sincere American unity was definitely recognized December 15, 1898, nearly two score years ago, when a veteran of the Union cause, Maj. William McKinley, then President of the United States, speaking before the State Legislature of Georgia, at Atlanta, in the days of common support of our flag, North and South, in the Spanish-American War, said, in part:

"And while when those graves were made we differed widely about the future of this Government, these differences were long ago settled by the arbitrament of arms—and the time has now come in the evolution of sentiment and feeling under the providence of God when, in the spirit of fraternity, we should share with you in the care of the graves of the Confederate soldiers. The cordial feeling now happily existing between the North and South prompts this gracious act, and if it needed further justification it is found in the gallant loyalty to the Union and the flag so conspicuously shown in the year just passed by the sons and grandsons of these heroic dead. What a glorious future awaits us if unitedly, wisely, and bravely we face the new problems now pressing upon us, determined to solve them for right and humanity."

We are fortunate beyond compare in having a truly united land to-day to face the new problems of right and humanity that always press upon us, and I wish very much I might have your cooperation in this effort of mine for restoration of the mansion at Arlington rather than your opposition, since it is but a continuation of the strengthening of the ties of union in this Republic, once saved by you and your comrades from disunion.

I am, yours sincerely,

LOUIS C. CRAMTON.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For "sugar standardization, Bureau of Mines, 1929," $5,067.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 114, line 7, strike out the word "Mines" and insert the word "Standards."

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LEHLBACH). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Hydrographic Office, $3,100.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD: On page 131, strike out all of line 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The Personnel Classification Board, within 30 days after the enactment of this act, shall review the allocations of all positions, which, on June 30, 1928, were allocated in grades 4, 5, 6, and 7 of the professional and scientific service, and grades 11, 12, 13, and 14 of the clerical, administrative, and fiscal service and of the compensation schedules set forth in the classification act of 1923 (covering salary rates from $3,800 to $7,500) (U. S. C. 65–71, secs. 661–673), and which have not been allocated, with the approval of such board, to the grades of such compensation schedules as amended by the act of May 28, 1928 (covering salary rates from $3,800 to $9,000) (45 Stat. 776–785). Such allocations shall be made by the board in such a manner as to reduce the total annual rate of compensation of the whole number of positions in all of such grades by not less than $500,000. The board, immediately upon completion of the review of the allocations herein directed to be made, shall certify their allocations to the heads of the executive departments and independent establishments who, within 10 days after the receipt of such certification, shall put such allocations into effect: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall operate to reduce the rate of compensation any person was receiving on June 30, 1928: Provided further, That the heads of the executive departments and independent establishments, who, pursuant to authority to adjust the pay of certain civilian positions in the field services to correspond as nearly as may be practicable to the rates established for similar positions under the classification act of 1923, as amended by the act of May 28, 1928, have made such adjustments in the field services, shall, within 60 days after the enactment of this act, readjust the compensation of such of the field positions as may be necessary to make the compensation thereof in conformity with the allocations herein directed for the departmental service in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That any balances, under appropriations or portions of appropriations, including continuing appropriations, available during the period of the remainder of the fiscal year 1929 and the entire fiscal year 1930, respectively, which result from the compensation of positions under the provisions of this section at rates lower than those permitted for such positions from July 1, 1928, to the date of the enactment of this act, shall not be expended for any other purpose but shall be reserved and allowed to lapse at the close of the respective fiscal years: Provided further, That the Personnel Classification Board shall have sole jurisdiction finally to determine the grade, or subdivision thereof, to which shall be allocated any position which is subject to the compensation schedules of the classification act of 1923, as amended, and shall have authority to ascertain the facts as to the duties and responsibilities of any such position and to review and change the allocation thereof, whenever, in its opinion, the facts warrant.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the whole of section 2 on the ground that it is new legislation and not germane to the subject matter of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] on the point of order.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a further point of order, that the language is not confined to the appropriations in this bill alone, but embraces appropriations on other bills, and is permanent legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized on the point of order.

Mr. WOOD. I would state to the Chair that it is in order so long as the matter inserted amounts to a retrenchment. That is in accordance with the Holman rule. I wish to call attention to the Holman rule.

The Committee on Appropriations is not a legislating committee, therefore any legislation to be in order upon one of the bills reported from that committee must be in order under the paragraph of the rules which provides for legislation upon an appropriation bill under certain conditions. The applicable portion of the rules is clause 2 of Rule XXI, and the pertinent portion of that clause, is as follows:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill * * *.

The requirements of the rule with reference to the legislation are therefore:

1. It must be germane to the subject matter of the bill.

2. It must retrench expenditures in one of three ways:

A. By the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States.

B. By the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

C. By the reduction of the amounts of money covered by the bill.

3. The legislative portions of the amendment must be connected up with one of the three proposals for retrenchment in such a manner as to make them essential to the accomplishment of the retrenchment.

The Committee on Appropriations in the preparation and reporting of H. R. 17223, the deficiency appropriation bill, now under consideration, has incorporated in that bill a section which it believes falls within the provisions of the rule. That is the section that has just been read, which includes detailed appropriations covering practically every department and independent establishment of the Government. (Sec. 2, Title II, p. 150.)

I. Is the section germane to the bill?

The section in question is section 2 of Title II of the bill. Title II consists of 48 pages of detailed appropriations covering practically every executive department and independent establishment subject to the classification act of 1923 as amended by the act of May 28, 1928. All of the appropriations under the title are occasioned by and are due to the enactment of May 28, 1928, amending the act of 1923. Section 2 is devoted exclusively to the salaries of positions which come under the acts for which appropriations are made in the title. The opening and descriptive paragraph of section 1 of Title II is as follows:

Supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, on account of the enactment of the act of May 28, 1928 (45 Stat. 776–785), amending the classification act of 1923 (U. S. C. 65–71, secs. 661–673), to be added to and become a part of the appropriations available during such fiscal year under the following appropriation titles, namely:

The germaneness of the section in the title is readily apparent and unquestioned.

II. Does section 2 retrench expenditures by any one of the three alternatives under the rule?

The section directs the Personnel Classification Board to reallocate all of the positions under eight of the grades of the classification act of 1923 on June 30, 1928, and which have not been allocated with the approval of the board to the grades of the act of May 28, 1928. It directs this to be done in such a manner as to reduce the total annual rate of compensation of the whole number of positions in those grades by not less than $500,000.

The section further directs the heads of departments and establishments, who were authorized to increase the pay of certain positions in the field services to make them correspond with the positions in the District of Columbia under the act of May 28, 1928, to bring those positions down to the levels which the section directs the board to make for the departmental service in Washington. No specific amount of saving is directed for the field services, but the amount of retrenchment being made mandatory at not less than $500,000 for the Washington departmental service, a direction to the heads of departments to adjust field pay down to the levels established for the District of Columbia after a reduction of not less than $500,000 is effected, will automatically cause a measure of reduction in the field that is certain but the extent of which is indefinite.

The retrenchment brought about by the section in the departmental service in a definite amount and in the field service in an indefinite amount is further strengthened by a provision requiring the impounding and lapsing of the appropriations under which are covered the positions which will be reallocated in the departmental service and those that will be readjusted in the field service.

The section then retrenches expenditures by—

First. Requiring a definite stated reduction in the compensation of persons paid out of the Treasury in the departmental service in Washington.

Second. Requiring an indefinite but certain reduction in the compensation of persons paid out of the Treasury in the field services.

Third. Requiring the impounding of a definite amount of departmental appropriations (not less than $500,000) in Washington and an indefinite amount of departmental appropriations for the field service.

III. Is the retrenchment sufficiently definite and specific to bring it within the rule?

So far as it relates to the departmental service, the departments in Washington, the section is specific in amount and mandatory in character, with definite time limits upon the Personnel Classification Board and the heads of departments. The section says the board shall review all of the positions which were formerly in these eight grades "within 30 days after the enactment of this act." The amount is specific. It directs the board to accomplish the task in such a manner as to reduce the total annual compensation of the positions by not less than $500,000. The heads of departments are directed to put the allocations into effect within 10 days after their receipt from the board. The board is directed to certify the allocations to the heads of departments before the 30-day period is up or immediately after it expires. Mandatory, specific, and inexorable are the provisions relative to the departmental service in Washington.

In the field service there is no specific sum directed to be saved as the result of the section. The field service is so inseparably linked to the departmental service that a saving, though the amount be not certain, is sure to follow. The act of May 28, 1928, increased the rates of compensation in the grades of the classification act of 1923 for the departmental service. A comparison of the grades and rates of the two acts will readily establish that. Section 2 of the Treasury and Post Office appropriation act, approved March 5, 1928, and the previous four acts for those two departments, authorized the heads of departments and establishments to keep the rates of compensation of the employees in question in the field services on a basis not in excess of the rates for comparable positions in the departmental service in the District of Columbia under the classification act of 1923. The act of May 28, 1928, increased the rates of the compensation schedules for the District of Columbia in the classification act of 1923. The act of May 28, 1928, also contained the following section relative to the field positions:

SEC. 3. The heads of the several executive departments and independent establishments are authorized to adjust the compensation of certain civilian positions in the field services, the compensation of which was adjusted by the act of December 6, 1924, to correspond, so far as may be practicable, to the rates established by this act for positions in the departmental services in the District of Columbia.

The positions in the field services, having been authorized to be adjusted to the District of Columbia rates in the classification act of 1923 and again authorized to be adjusted to the District of Columbia rates as they were increased under the act of May 28, 1928, have followed closely the departmental service. That the increases in the field positions have been made in positions from $3,800 and up (the grades affected by this section) is attested by the appropriations carried in Title II for field services. Section 2 directs the heads of departments, where they have made increases in the field to conform to the District of Columbia increases, to make readjustments to conform to the readjustments in the District of Columbia which are directed to be made by the board. The proviso is mandatory. It says the heads of departments shall do it. The time is fixed. They must do it within 60 days after the section becomes law. They must adjust these field positions to the level of the District of Columbia positions. Is the retrenchment sufficiently specific to bring it within the rule? Will the field service necessarily follow down the rates directed to be reduced for the District of Columbia?

Chairman Saunders (Virginia) in a ruling on the Holman rule made on February 9, 1912, said:

* * * * * * *

The precedents say in this connection that the amendment being in itself a complete piece of legislation, must operate ex proprio vigore to effect a reduction in expenditures. The reduction must appear as a necessary result; that is, it must be apparent to the Chair that the amendment will operate of its own force to effect a reduction. But it is not necessary for this conclusion of reduction to be established with the rigor and severity of a mathematical demonstration. It is enough if the amendment, in the opinion of the Chair, will fairly operate by its own force to retrench expenditures in one of the three ways indicated. This result must be a necessary result, not a conjectural result or a problematical result. * * *

The proviso relative to the field service, so closely linked with the District of Columbia service, falls within the remarks of Chairman Saunders. The salaries of the field service were increased to follow the increases of the departmental service. If the departmental service is brought down and the heads of departments mandated to follow the departmental service, the field rates must come down. The one follows the other and while the amount of retrenchment is not definite, the fact of retrenchment by reduction of compensation of persons paid out of the Treasury so far as the field service is concerned is indisputable. The two services, so far as pay is cencerned, are indissolubly linked together by this amendment, by the provisions of the act of May 28, 1928, and by the appropriations in this bill.

IV. Are all of the parts of the section essential to the accomplishment of the retrenchment?

Chairman CRISP in a ruling under the Holman rule made on March 14, 1916, said:

Now, the Chair is clearly of the opinion that where an amendment is offered reducing the number of salaries paid out of the Treasury, coupled with legislation, that legislation, to be in order, must be connected up with or related to or logically follow from the part of the amendment reducing the number of employees or the amounts of money covered by the bill, etc.

The linking up of the two first parts of the section, namely, the departmental service and the field service, seek to establish so far as this statement is concerned, the retrenchment which the section accomplishes and the fact that a retrenchment is accomplished. There remain two portions of the section, namely, one dealing with the impounding of appropriations and one dealing with the powers of the Personnel Classification Board.

Is the proviso relating to the impounding of appropriations an essential part of the retrenchment and is it logically a part of the whole proposal? The appropriations as contained in this bill to cover the act of May 28, 1928, are based upon the salary rates now in existence; that is, no reduction has been made in those appropriations based upon the enactment of this section. The appropriations for the next fiscal year are likewise based. Should this section be enacted without this proviso relative to the impounding and lapsing of appropriations is it definite that the retrenchments made by the section would become a fact?

It would be possible in the case of those appropriations which cover the combined purposes of salaries and other expenses to utilize for the other expenses such portions of the salary allotments as might be impounded by the operation of this section. Therefore while there would be a saving under the salary items, that would not, in fact, be a saving to the Treasury or a retrenchment necessarily in the strict sense of the term. The amount saved by the reduction of the class of salaries under the section might also be used for the employment of new personnel not contemplated by Congress when the appropriations were made. The impounding of the retrenchment in the appropriations is a binding factor in connection with the retrenchment sought. It clinches, so to speak, the retrenchment which the section effects. It is legislation essential to the full accomplishment of the retrenchment, in that it makes assurance doubly sure. The section would be in order without it; but it is, if it may be so put, "more in order" with it.

The final proviso deals with the powers and duties of the Personnel Classification Board. A reading of the paragraph raises the query, What has the proviso to do with the operation of the rest of the section? It states in different and more specific terms the powers and duties of the board as outlined in the classification act of 1923. It enlarges those powers and duties. The proviso clearly has no place in the section unless it will operate to assist in the retrenchment, and unless the retrenchment is not certain without it. The section in question directs the Personnel Classification Board to effect certain reductions in compensation and projects those reductions into the field service by imposing duties upon the heads of departments. The certainty and ultimate completeness of the retrenchment to come from the action directed to be taken by the board and heads of departments is in some measure dependent upon the conclusiveness of that action upon any other agency of the Government.

The entire section 2 results from an interpretation by the Comptroller General of the act of May 28, 1928, taking from the Personnel Classification Board certain duties imposed upon it by the classification act of 1923. Is there any certainty that if section 2 becomes the law there will not arise a further interpretation and curtailment of the board's powers and duties under this section which might have the effect of partially or wholly nullifying the contemplated retrenchment from the section? There is that possibility, and even though it be remote, the proviso would seem to be essential to prevent interference with the action directed to be taken and further to prevent the revision of that action after it shall have been taken.

V. Conclusions.

Section is submitted as in order under the bill because:

First. It is germane to Title II.

Second. It retrenches expenditures by the reduction of the compensation of persons paid out of the Treasury of the United States by a definite and certain amount of money and by an indefinite amount that is certain to follow as an addition to the definite amount.

Third. All of the parts of the section are so interrelated to each other and essential to the reduction as to constitute a harmonious whole that will function toward the accomplishment and completeness of the reduction.

The section is respectfully submitted for consideration of the Chair, and in connection therewith the attention of the Chair is directed to the paragraph in the ruling of Chairman CRISP on March 4, 1916, wherein he stated:

Now, the Chair, as before stated, believes the Holman rule is intended to have a beneficial effect upon the Treasury of the United States. If the Chair is in doubt about whether or not an amendment is in order, he believes it is his duty to resolve that doubt against the point of order, for by so doing the Chair works no hardship upon anyone but submits to the committee itself the privilege of passing upon the amendment. If the committee favor it, a majority can adopt it. If they are opposed to it, a majority can reject it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit that in considering this question all of these paragraphs must be taken together. There may be some language which, standing alone, might be subject to a point of order, but in order to accomplish the end—that is, to effect a retrenchment in expenditures—as I have indicated, that which of itself might be out of order does not affect that part which is in order, if it is simply part and parcel of the language which is to carry into effect the larger proposition, which is retrenchment. If that is so, then it is not out of order.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. I yield.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman tell the Chairman whether or not the last proviso, on page 52, comes, in his opinion, within the Holman rule.

Mr. WOOD. Absolutely. It comes within the Holman rule for the reason that it is the agency that must carry the object into effect and by reason of that agency a retrenchment may be had.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman state where in the last priviso there is anything about retrenchment?

Mr. WOOD. I tried to say to the gentleman that if there was some language which, standing alone, might be subject to a point of order but was simply part and parcel of language that was in order, and the language which was out of order was only for the purpose of aiding in the carrying out of the main proposition of retrenchment, that such language is not out of order. Now, there can not be retrenchment without some agency, and in the peculiar situation in which we find ourselves the only agency we have for this retrenchment is the Personnel Classification Board.

Mr. BACHMANN. But you can not have any retrenchment when in the same proviso you authorize increases.

Mr. WOOD. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. BACHMANN. I will read the language to the gentleman and see whether it does not authorize an increase. I will read the last proviso of the paragraph:

Provided further, That the Personnel Classification Board shall have sole jurisdiction finally to determine the grade, or subdivision thereof, to which shall be allocated any position which is subject to the compensation schedules of the classification act of 1923, as amended, and shall have authority to ascertain the facts as to the duties and responsibilities of any such position and to review and change the allocation thereof, whenever, in its opinion, the facts warrant.

Now, you are clothing the Personnel Classification Board with duties that it does not have at the present time and you are saying you have a right to reallocate those positions downward; you are saying you have the right to reallocate those positions upward, and when you give them the authority to reallocate upward you provide for increases, and, therefore, it is not a retrenchment under the Holman rule.

Mr. WOOD. There is nothing in that paragraph which says a single word about or hints at an increase, and that section must be read in connection with the other sections.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is nothing in the paragraph which specifically indicates a decrease.

Mr. WOOD. Gentlemen seem to have in their minds simply the last paragraph, but they should read all of the language together. All of the language is so interrelated that in order to get the full force of the entire proposition it must be considered together, for the reason that under the act of 1923 this authority was lodged in the Classification Board. Now, then, under the interpretation of the Comptroller of the Treasury it was taken away from them, and, as I stated a moment ago, in order that this retrenchment may be had an agency must be established. We can not submit it to the Comptroller General because in all probability he would still adhere to the interpretation he has made, and in order that this limitation may be effective this agency must be established.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. Did I understand the gentleman to say we can not trust the Comptroller General?

Mr. WOOD. I said we should not submit to him the carrying out of these provisions under the interpretation he has made.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I asked the gentleman to yield in order that I may direct his attention to what seems to me to be the serious thing in the way of the legitimacy, under parlimentary law, of the legislation which is proposed.

It is legislation. That is admitted. It comes from a committee that has not legislative authority over the subject matter. That is admitted, or, at least, it is a fact whether the gentleman admits it or not. Now, the Holman rule is a very technical rule and it is very difficult of construction, but I think there is no exception to the ruling of Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole and of the Speakers that the legislation must come from a committee that had jurisdiction of the subject matter.

The decision by Mr. Chairman Saunders, of Virginia, who was a great parliamentarian, bore upon legislation in an appropriation bill that came from the Committee on Military Affairs, which at that time had jurisdiction both of legislation and appropriations, and therefore the decision is not in point at this time.

Now, the decision of Mr. Chairman CRISP, the last one that the gentleman quoted, was upon an amendment offered by an individual from the floor and Mr. CRISP then, I believe, submitted it to the Committee of the Whole for determination.

The serious thing here—and I am not discussing the merits of the legislation—it may be the legislation is perfectly all right, I do not know. I know just as little about it now, I will say, as I knew when the bill was up before, and that is nothing at all. This proposal may be right, but the parliamentary question is also of some importance.

It seems to me this is the difficulty in the way of the committee proposal—the admission that this is legislation. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] has argued it will retrench expenditures. That is not the decisive thing. If it carries legislation, that legislation must come from the committee that has jurisdiction.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor and very courteously yielded to me.

Mr. WOOD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. The position of the gentleman from Tennessee then would be that in so far as any part of the Holman rule is concerned with retrenchment of expenditures, the Holman rule no longer exists, for the reason that the Committee on Appropriations has no authority to report legislation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, no; the Holman rule would still exist.

Mr. CRAMTON. As to any legislation that would be made in order because of retrenchment of expenditures. The gentleman's argument would repeal the Holman rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let me call the attention of the gentleman particularly to this language which is a part of the Holman rule. It was the last proviso put on the Holman rule. The Holman rule was a matter of evolution here over a long period of years. The last proviso put on was—

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House Members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

Now, if this legislation came from the committee of which the chairman of the Committee of the Whole at the moment is chairman, that question could not be raised, but it comes from the Committee on Appropriations which has not jurisdiction of the subject matter.

It is precisely on all fours with the situation that existed when, so far as I know, the first ruling was made on the Holman rule following its reintroduction into the rules of the House in 1911. The ruling was made January 16, 1912, and it happened to have been made by myself. There was a proposal that came from the Committee on Appropriations undertaking to set up, as I now remember, an incinerator plant here in the city of Washington. It showed upon its face, or seemed to show upon its face, that it would result in a reduction of expenditures, and on that line was in order, but it was admittedly legislation by the Appropriations Committee, which at that time had not jurisdiction of legislation affecting the District of Columbia, and it was held out of order because it came from the wrong committee. The point of order was made by the chairman of the legislative Committee on the District of Columbia at that time, Mr. Johnson of Kentucky.

Mr. WOOD. I wish to say in answer to the gentleman that the Holman Rule was gotten up for the purpose of making legislation that comes from the Committee on Appropriations in order under certain contingencies. It is not made to apply to any other committee.

Let me call the attention of the gentleman and of the Chair to this portion of section 2:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

It was made just to fit this character of case where it is a retrenchment and comes within the exception that it is germane to the subject matter, that it retrenches expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States and by the reduction of the compensation of officers that will be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; a reduction is in order; but the legislative part of it would have to come in.

Mr. WOOD. The rule says:

No appropriation shall be reported in a general appropriation bill.

This is legislation in a general appropriation bill and it applies to the exception.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee (reading):

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction—

And so forth.

Mr. WOOD. When reported in a general appropriation bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This is reported in a general appropriation bill.

Mr. WOOD. Yes; and that is the reason that it comes under the Holman rule, and if adopted will result in compliance with all the exceptions of that rule.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take much time of the committee at this time of night, only enough to register my protest against this legislation being attached to an appropriation bill. I am a loyal supporter of the rule that places all appropriations in the Committee on Appropriations. But it seems to me that when that committee brings out a piece of legislation such as this, so complex and intricate, it is going a long way beyond its proper function. I am for the Appropriations Committee under the rule, but I do not believe that it should be allowed to commit murder and get away with it as it will be doing if this section is allowed to remain in the bill. [Laughter.] It seems to me there are several reasons why the section is subject to a point of order. One is that it is not germane to this bill. It is germane to the legislation relating to the classification of the employees of the Government reported by the committee of which the gentleman from New Jersey, who is now presiding over the Committee of the Whole is the chairman, but it is not germane to a deficiency appropriation bill. Nor is it a limitation such as is in order on an appropriation bill. It is also subject to a point of order because it directs executive officers in the performance of their official duties.

I recall that the present occupant of the chair rendered a decision early in this session, a very able opinion, in which he held that an amendment was out of order because it attempted to direct executive officers.

The CHAIRMAN. That was to the effect that the amendment offered was not a pure limitation—the question of limitation entered into it.

Mr. MAPES. It seems to me that this goes away outside of a pure limitation. I would like to submit to the Chair that just because the Appropriations Committee has inserted a blanket declaration in this section directing the Classification Board to reduce expenditures $500,000 does not make it such a limitation as to come within the Holman rule.

Without discussing the matter in detail, I would like to call the Chair's attention to the list of authorities which will be found in the Manual, section 958, page 505:

Legislation may not be proposed under the form of a limitation.

A limitation is negative in its nature and may not include positive enactment establishing rules for executive officers.

A proposition to establish affirmative direction for an executive officer constitutes legislation and is not in order on a general appropriation bill.

Chairman Crisp ruled in 1916 limitations must not impose new duties upon an executive officer.

Another ruling provides that a limitation may be attached only to the money of the appropriation under consideration and may not be made applicable to moneys appropriated in other acts.

If there is any doubt in the mind of the Chair about it, I can cite a number of precedents to show that the limitation must be confined to the appropriation contained in the bill of which it is a part.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no doubt whatever in his mind with respect to what constitutes a limitation, but he would call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the fact that here no question of limitation is involved.

Mr. MAPES. If that is the attitude of the Chair, it seems to me that there is no question about the Chair's conclusion on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, there are plenty of questions to be solved with respect to whether this section in all its parts falls within the exceptions in the Holman rule providing for legislation on an appropriation bill; and that is the question that the Chair would like to hear discussed. The Holman rule is well known, and the question is whether section 2, against which a point of order has been raised, comes within the provisions of the Holman rule in all its provisions.

Mr. MAPES. The Holman rule provides that legislation is not in order on an appropriation bill—except—

To quote the language of the rule—

such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

I ask the Chair to turn to section 8664 of the precedents to a decision rendered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], in which he quotes with approval the argument of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to this effect:

Now, if the Chair please, my understanding of a limitation of an appropriation is as follows: In the face of the point of order Congress can only appropriate in an appropriation bill for purposes already authorized by law. The Congress can appropriate for all purposes authorized by law or appropriate for none of the purposes authorized by law. Within those limits Congress can limit an appropriation. Congress can say that no part of an appropriation shall be expended for a part of the purposes which the law authorizes. But a limitation must be absolutely negative. It must be in the nature simply of a veto. It can not direct an executive officer in the discharge of his duties under existing law. Whenever it does, it ceases to be a limitation and becomes legislation in violation of the rule.

In brief, it seems to me that this section is foreign to this deficiency appropriation bill; that it is not germane to it; that it is legislation which changes existing law and attempts to affirmatively direct the classification board in the performance of its duties. It ought to go out of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The question raised by the point of order made by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BACHMANN], is whether the legislation contained in section 2 of this deficiency appropriation bill running from line 11 on page 150 to and inclusive of line 14 on page 152, is such legislation as is authorized to be placed on an appropriation bill by the Holman rule, which is Rule XXI of the rules of the House of Representatives. That is an entirely different question and has no relevancy at all to what constitutes a limitation because the fact of the matter is, if a limitation is in fact legislation rather than the limiting of the use of the appropriation, it is not a limitation, and is not in order; but the Holman rule provides for legislation and this is the Holman rule:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

The Chair reads this because he intends to read the whole rule, but that does not have any bearing on the question under consideration. The rule then goes on to say:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

If new, permanent legislation from any source whatever, either from a Member or reported by the Appropriations Committee as an original part of the bill reported to the House, falls within those exceptions, it is in order. The rule provides that no legislation, no change of existing law, is in order, unless it fulfills one or two of the three exceptions set forth as the Chair has just read them. The Holman rule continues:

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House Members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

The history of the Holman rule is this, that legislation on appropriation bills was barred, but the rule originally read that any amendment offered or any provision originally carried in an appropriation that retrenched expenditures was in order. It was found there was too much latitude given by the simple blanket exception that it retrenched expenditures merely so that the rule was amended, and the committee of the House having jurisdiction of the subject matter of the amendment, such as the Civil Service Committee, would have jurisdiction over this amendment, could introduce any amendment provided it in any way whatsoever retrenched expenditures.

But the Committee on Appropriations, individual members, or all others not having the jurisdiction of the subject matter of the legislation can only avail themselves of it in adding legislation to an appropriation bill by showing that it retrenches expenditures in one of the three ways set forth in the earlier part of the rule.

Now, the question in the first place is, Does this section retrench expenditures by a reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States? Well, on the face of it, the first provision in the section of the bill in question says that the Personnel Classification Board, by reallocating positions of certain grades who have heretofore been allocated without review of the board, shall by such reallocation be reduced in salaries by a sum not less than $500,000. So that the first exception is clearly met by some part of this section 2.

The second exception is that it shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States; and that also is covered by this reduction of $500,000 in salaries of certain persons drawing compensation from the Treasury.

In the third place, this bill contains 48 pages of appropriations for the purpose of carrying out the classification act of 1923, amended by the Welch Act of 1928, and this provision in question directs that those appropriations, in so far as they apply to 1929, shall be reduced by $500,000, and shall not be expended for any other purpose, but shall be returned to the Treasury. So that in all the respects in which the Holman rule makes legislation in order, this section is in order.

Now, the question is that if the portions of a legislative entity such as this proposal, incorporated in section 2, are so interrelated as to make a cohesive whole, and taken as a whole, they bring about such a reduction of expenditure as is contemplated by the Holman rule, then the whole of section 2 is in order.

That proposition was determined by a gentleman whom I always like to cite, because I have respect for his parliamentary knowledge and his mental ability to apply it to legislation as it arises. I refer to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Now there was introduced an amendment by Mr. Borland, of Missouri, on the 14th of March, 1916, in the Sixty-fourth Congress, specifically requiring a reduction of 10 per cent in the number of clerks, and requiring also in the same amendment an increase in the hours of labor for the remaining clerks by the addition of an hour daily. It was argued that the amendment, in so far as it cut down the number of clerks by 10 per cent was to that extent a reduction, but the increased number of hours of those who were left would not on its face make for a retrenchment along one of the three lines specified under the Holman rule, and therefore was not in order.

After discussing the Holman rule in a general way, Chairman CRISP said:

The question arises on the point of order made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] whether or not the amendment is divisible. The gentleman from Wyoming contends that if the first part of the amendment reducing the number of clerks is in order, the last or legislative part is in no way connected with it and is not in order because it is not within one of the three methods of retrenchment provided in the Holman rule. It is entirely in order under the rules of the House to reduce employees or to reduce the number of employees under the Holman rule, and the object of the Holman rule, as the Chair understands it, is to permit germane legislation under certain conditions.

Now, the Chair is clearly of the opinion that where an amendment is offered reducing the number of salaries paid out of the Treasury, coupled with legislation, that legislation, to be in order, must be connected up with, or related to, or logically follow from the part of the amendment reducing the number of employees or the amount of money covered by the bill—

And so forth.

In other words, if the section of the bill making a specific reduction contains other legislative provisions which are not counter to the reduction contemplated by the provision, which strictly make for such retrenchment, if the rest of that legislation is connected up with, or related to, or logically follows from the part of the amendment making appropriate retrenchment, it is in order.

Now, in order to see whether section 2 is such a legislative entity which under the ruling of Chairman CRISP is necessary, if it in a particular way reduces expenditures in the manner prescribed in the Holman rule, and it is all one proposition and all fits together, and is related to, and logically follows, then the whole section is in order according to his ruling.

Now, in order to ascertain that, I must recite recent history as briefly as possible and show the object and purposes of section 2 and its various provisions.

On May 28, 1928, Congress passed and the President approved what is known as the Welch Act, which made certain changes in the rates of pay within the grades of the bill, including professional grades from 1 to 3, inclusive, and in the clerical, administrative, and fiscal service from 1 to 10, inclusive. It then provided from 4 on in the professional grades and from 11 on in the clerical, administrative, and fiscal grades, new grades with new basic qualifications, and ordered that the positions be allocated to these new grades as they fitted, in a general way, into the classification scheme. The classification act first divided the services into professional, scientific, administrative, fiscal, clerical, custodial, and so forth. The character of work was taken and divided into particular services. Then these services were divided into grades running from 1 to 6 or 7 and in some cases 8 or 9 grades. The heads of the departments were directed by the law to consult with the Personnel Classification Board and obtain regulations and guidance as to the manner of making a preliminary allocation of the employees under their supervision.

The integral plan of any reclassification is to establish a central agency running across departmental lines in order to get the same grade and the same range of pay for the same kind of work, whether it is carried on in the War Department, the Department of Agriculture, or any other department. The idea is that a coordinating agency shall have the final say over these allocations so that the standards applied to the value of a job and the basic qualifications of a grade shall be uniform throughout all departments. Without this central agency classification does not mean anything at all.

Now, it happens that on the 2d of June the Comptroller General handed down a ruling allowing the heads of departments to determine how in grades 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 in the new professional grades under the Welch Act, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 in the clerical, administrative, and fiscal grades, employees should be allocated without regard to the provision giving the final review of all new allocations to the classification board, and thus destroyed the system of uniformity as between the departments in these new allocations made in the higher grades of the professional service and the higher grades in the administrative and fiscal service.

The result was that under the interpretation of the Comptroller General the department heads had sole authority to make these allocations. There have been increases in salaries which no one in Congress ever intended and were not in the contemplation of those who had anything to do with this legislation. For that reason section 2 provides that the Personnel Classification Board shall review these allocations so made without their review and make such a reallocation in accordance with the spirit of the law of classification, as to place employees in positions where they belong rather than retain them in the positions to which they have been misallocated under the Comptroller General's decision. That will result in a reduction in the higher grades of $500,000. They are authorized to make these reallocations so that they will save the $500,000. Now, that provision is clearly within the Holman rule.

Now comes the other question:

Provided, That nothing contained herein shall operate to reduce the rate of compensation any person was receiving on June 30, 1928.

That is a necessary part of the main scheme because it is not the intention to reduce anybody below where he was in June, 1928, but merely to reduce those who were promoted to an entirely too high grade after June 30, 1928. That you can do this is shown by a precedent whereby the Army was reduced from 15 to 10 cavalry regiments and no provision for the retention of the privates and noncommissioned officers was made, but express provision was made to retain in the service, and to assign where they could be used, commissioned officers, and that was held in order. So if they can fire some outright and retain some, under the provisions of the Holman rule, provided the whole thing results in retrenchment, you can set a limitation that the application of this reduction or retrenchment shall not hurt those who are not entitled to be hurt. I do not think there is any question about that, and I do not know of anybody who would take exception to that particular proviso.

The next proviso deals with the executive department putting into effect these reallocations made by the classification board, and it provides further that any balances resulting from the reduction must be paid into the Treasury and can not be used for other purposes by the department.

Now comes the last proviso concerning which some question has been raised:

That the Personnel Classification Board shall have sole jurisdiction finally to determine the grade, or subdivision thereof, to which shall be allocated any position which is subject to the compensation schedules of the classification act of 1923 as amended.

Now, section 4 of the classification act, after providing for preliminary work to be done by the heads of the department, goes on to say that after the department heads have made a tentative allocation in accordance with the rules prescribed in section 6, such allocation shall be reviewed and may be revised by the board and shall become final upon their approval by said board.

But on June 2, by a ruling of the Comptroller General, he repealed this section of the act in making these new allocations and said that the department heads could make them without review or revision by the board. Now, in order to make this section effective, reducing by reallocation those persons that are out of line and under the direction of the act having the departments reallocate them to the positions designated by the board, without this language that the allocation shall be final as to all other department officials, what is there to prevent the situation the next day or the next week or the next month or the next year of another ruling coming out authorizing the department heads to make allocations without review by the Classification Board and putting them back where we have, by this means, attempted to dislodge them? So this portion is essential for the carrying out of the retrenchment that is contemplated by section 2.

The last part of this provision is that the board may from time to time on its own motion review and change allocations, and the purpose of this is to provide that if in this reallocation for the purpose of retrenching the salaries and reducing the appropriations for the personnel an error or a mistake is made that this can be corrected because otherwise there is no other way to correct it. If a man is initially allocated two or three grades higher than he should be allocated, there is no power on earth granted in the classification act, except in the Classification Board itself, to make the correction. This power heretofore unchallenged is only reasonable and is only in conformity with carrying out completely this policy of retrenchment in section 2, all of which provisions are correlated, interrelated, and comprising a single legislative proposal, so that there can not be any question about it.

Now, I want to cite just one other precedent. I have had a number of precedents at hand. This is a precedent made by the Speaker of the present House, Mr. LONGWORTH, when he was chairman of the Committee of the Whole, before becoming Speaker.

In the second session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, RECORD, page 3476, there was a provision carried in an appropriation bill to abolish the subtreasuries throughout the country. At that time Mr. Edmund Platt on his own responsibility as an individual, although he did happen to be chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, offered an amendment as a substitute for the provision carried in the bill for the abolishment of the subtreasuries. This amendment not only abolished the subtreasuries and abolished the position of subtreasurer, but provided what to do with the buildings, provided what to do with the moneys on deposit in the subtreasuries, allowed their deposit in Federal reserve banks and under certain circumstances allowed the real estate to be used by the Federal reserve banks and contained a complete legislative proposition as to what to do upon the abolition of the subtreasury, what to do with its resources, how to disburse them or take care of the powers that they had theretofore exercised, and the only item in the provision that retrenched expenditures was letting go of the subtreasurers and abolishing to a certain extent, possibly, the care and upkeep of the buildings which, nevertheless, would be resumed if the Federal reserve banks took possession of them.

The Chairman, Mr. LONGWORTH, ruled:

The Chair is ready to rule. It is clear that this is legislation and out of order on the bill unless it comes under the Holman rule. To come under the Holman rule it is only necessary to show that it will reduce the number of officers, retrench expenditures, and save money. * * *

The Chair does not believe that he has any right to guess as to whether in the long run this would reduce expenditures or not, but it seems absolutely clear on the face of it that if this amendment, abolishing, as it does, all the officers of the subtreasuries, merely transfers the employees to some other sphere of duty, it must necessarily save money, and, therefore, the Chair thinks it comes under the Holman rule and is in order. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

In other words, here is a complete legislative proposition which only in one instance, in the first two or three lines, complies with the Holman rule, but it has been held in order under the Holman rule by the present Speaker of the House, and the Chair now so rules and overrules the point of order.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the decision of the Chair was sustained as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I listened to the decision of the Chair with a great deal of interest, but I call attention of the Chair to what I think is an inadvertence. The Chair in ruling in the earlier part of his decision said that this came within the first exception of the Holman rule in reducing both the number and the salary.

The CHAIRMAN. In going over the decisions, and the Chair has gone over a good many of them, it is generally construed that if it reduces the number or the salary it meets the requirement.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BACHMANN moves to strike out section 2.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the question presented in section 2 is of a highly technical nature. The duties of the Personnel Classification Board in the civil service of the Government is very complicated. This section in this bill, if it is retained and becomes the law, reduces those employed in the Government service from grade 4 up in the P and S service and 11 up in what is known as the C A F service because every employee of the Government who receives a salary of more than $3,800 is subject to a reduction and reallocation by the Personnel Classification Board if he comes within those grades and this board exercises its authority.

Beginning with the assistant secretaries of departments all the way down to the $3,800 men, and that will mean that those whose salaries were increased under the Welch Act and who have been expecting that salary for the next two or three years; who have provided themselves with certain obligations in the way of homes and the necessities of life must within 30 days have it taken away from them. That is what it means. That is the principle all through the Lehlbach bill which the chairman of the committee introduced. In his bill you will find some of the same provisions that are contained in this deficiency bill. The bill is available and I wish you all had time to look at it.

I maintain that this legislation which is not thoroughly understood increases the power and functions of the Personnel Classification Board. It permits this board to reallocate and decrease overnight some of the experts, some of the professional men, some of the men highly and technically trained, in the Government service, without giving them a fair opportunity to present their case. Let us have this matter carefully considered by the House and let the House decide whether we want to reduce them or not. Let us take the responsibility and not delegate it. If the House is of opinion that certain employees should be reduced, after a thorough understanding, then let us say whose salaries we will reduce. To delegate this authority to the Personnel Classification Board will only bring about more dissatisfaction and confusion.

Much has been said about confusion and inequalities following the Welch Act. Just wait and see the confusion and inequalities that are going to follow after this deficiency bill with section 2 remaining becomes a law.

Mr. FORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACHMANN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FORT. Is it or is it not a fact that there was recently reported to the Civil Service Committee, of which I believe the gentleman is a member, officially, the statement that the employees of the Government in the higher classes of compensation receive less money than is customarily paid by industry for like occupations?

Mr. BACHMANN. I think that is true as to the men in the higher grades.

Mr. FORT. Are these the men that this bill will reduce?

Mr. BACHMANN. They are. I have not seen the statement, but am basing my answer on the statement made at the hearings of the Committee on the Civil Service by Mr. McREYNOLDS, who was in charge of the survey. I sincerely hope that the committee will determine to strike section 2 from the bill so that this kind of legislation may come before the House in the proper way.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DEMPSEY). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BACHMANN) there were—ayes 50, noes 53.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. BACHMANN and Mr. WOOD to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 54.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Porto Rican hurricane relief commission.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on Porto Rican hurricane relief.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LEHLBACH). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, under unanimous consent given me, I want to call your attention to page 156 of H. R. 17223, the second deficiency bill, "Porto Rican Hurricane Relief Commission."

You will find on that page and the following page that last Saturday we appropriated $7,130,000 for the relief and rehabilitation of Porto Rico.

Florida is asking for $6,000,000 for flood control and we feel we are entitled to it; and, in fact, I feel we should get more. I make this statement advisedly, for practically every appropriation expended by the Government for improvements in Florida has been met by the State dollar for dollar.

Mr. Speaker, we are not asking for relief, although hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of property was destroyed by the floods of 1926 and 1928, the 1928 flood being a part of the hurricane which struck Porto Rico, but are only asking for an appropriation which, when the State has met the requirements of the Government, as set forth in the bill, will prevent further floods and loss of life.

Unfortunately, this project has been a political question for years and some Republicans in my State are now trying to make it a political football. When I tell you in round numbers 4,000 lives have already been lost, I believe my colleagues will agree with me when I state politics should not be permitted to enter into the question.

Florida has suffered many setbacks and this is practically the first time we have called on the Government and I sincerely trust and urge my colleagues to pass the bill at this session, although only a few days remain, but if not, that they see that the bill is enacted into law at the next session at the earliest possible moment. If another flood comes along before Congress acts, Members of Congress can not escape the responsibility.

Unfortunately our legislature meets next April and unless Congress promptly passes this bill, thereby giving the legislature something to work on, it will not know what bills must be passed to comply with the requirements of the Government. Let me assure you, however, I am satisfied Florida, at the next session, will, as far as possible, pass every law meeting the requirements of the bill which has practically been agreed upon by the committee in order that as little delay as possible may occur.

The bill, which is now before the Flood Control Committee, only authorizes an appropriation and no appropriation can be made, even if the bill is passed at this session, until the regular session next December. The Chief of Engineers states it will take from two to four years to complete the work; therefore the appropriation of $6,000,000 will be drawn out over a long term of years.

Some may make it a political question, but I repeat what I have stated time and time again on the floor of the House and in my speeches from one end of the district to the other, my colleagues are large and broad-minded men and I have never known them to treat so serious a problem in a political way.

I am not complaining, Mr. Speaker, at the relief given the Porto Ricans, for I voted for that relief as well as for the relief of storm and flood sufferers in other States of the Union where it was requested, also foreign relief. Therefore, my record is clear and I come before my colleagues with clean hands asking that they give to Florida, a great State of the sovereign States, the relief which we must have, if we are to prevent the reoccurrence of such disastrous floods and loss of life as occurred in 1926 and 1928.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LEHLBACH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 17223) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, and June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

LOAD LINE ON SHIPS

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1781) to establish load lines for American vessels, and for other purposes, with House amendments thereto, disagreed to by the Senate, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. WHITE of Maine, Mr. LEHLBACH, Mr. FREE, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. BLAND.

REPORT OF DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RAILROADS (H. DOC. NO. 610)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered printed.

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the report of the Director General of Railroads for the calendar year 1928.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 23, 1929.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and under the rule referred as follows:

S. 1688. An act for the relief of Gabriel Roth; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2204. An act to amend section 284 of the Judicial Code of the United States;

S. 2213. An act providing against misuse of official badges; and

S. 2901. An act to amend the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 5055. An act for the relief of DeWitt & Shobe; to the Commitee on Claims.

S. 5349. An act to amend section 9 of the Federal reserve act and section 5240 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

S. 5632. An act to provide for producers and others the benefit of official tests to determine protein in wheat for use in merchandising the same to the best advantage, and for acquiring and disseminating information relative to protein in wheat, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

S. J. Res. 100. Joint resolution to provide for appropriate military records for persons who, pursuant to orders, reported for military duty, but whose induction into the service was not, through no fault of their own, formally completed on or prior to November 30, 1918; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. J. Res. 216. Joint resolution to establish a joint commission on airports; to the Committee on Rules.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 4084. An act for the relief of the persons suffering loss on account of the Lawton, Okla., fire, 1917;

H. R. 5769. An act to authorize the consolidation and coordination of Government purchases, to enlarge the functions of the General Supply Committee, to authorize the erection of a public warehouse for the storage of Government supplies, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7452. An act for the erection of a tablet or marker to be placed at some suitable point between Hartwell, Ga., and Alfords Bridge in the county of Hart, State of Georgia, on the national highway between the States of Georgia and South Carolina, to commemorate the memory of Nancy Hart;

H. R. 9168. An act for the relief of Simon A. Richardson;

H. R. 9597. An act for the relief of Fred Elias Horton;

H. R. 9659. An act for the relief of F. R. Barthold;

H. R. 10191. An act for the relief of G. J. Bell;

H. R. 10374. An act authorizing the acquisition of land and water rights for forest-tree nurseries;

H. R. 11285. An act to establish Federal prison camps;

H. R. 11385. An act for the relief of Dr. Andrew J. Baker;

H. R. 13461. An act to provide for the acquisition of land in the District of Columbia for the use of the United States;

H. R. 14153. An act to authorize an additional appropriation of $150,000 for construction of a hospital annex at Marion Branch;

H. R. 14466. An act to provide for the sale of the old post-office property at Birmingham, Ala.;

H. R. 14924. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to grant to the city of Salt Lake, Utah, a portion of the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, Utah, for street purposes;

H. R. 16422. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes;

H. R. 16568. An act to repeal that portion of the act of August 24, 1912, imposing a limit on agency salaries of the Indian Service; and

H. J. Res. 135. Joint resolution for the relief of special disbursing agents of the Alaska Railroad.

The SPEAKER anounced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 3848. An act creating the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission and defining its purposes and powers;

S. 4861. An act authorizing the Brownville Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Brownville, Neb.;

S. 5129. An act authorizing Thomas E. Brooks, of Camp Walton, Fla., and his associates and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the mouth of Garniers Bayou, at a point where State Road No. 10, in the State of Florida, crosses the mouth of said Garniers Bayou, between Smack Point on the west and White Point on the east, in Okaloosa County, Fla.;

S. 5465. An act authorizing V. Calvin Trice, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Choptank River at a point at or near Cambridge, Md.;

S. 5543. An act to establish the Grand Teton National Park in the State of Wyoming, and for other purposes; and

S. 5630. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Carrollton, Ky.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President for his approval a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 16422. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—THE SECOND DEFICIENCY BILL, 1929

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have the privilege for five legislative days of extending their own remarks in the RECORD on the deficiency bill, which has been under consideration for two days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days within which to extend their own remarks upon the deficiency bill, which is before the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the item in the bill appropriating $400,000 for acquisition of additional land and necessary expenses preliminary to commencement of construction of an addition to the post office in St. Louis is to meet an emergency. The record shows the receipts of the St. Louis post office in 1918 were $6,669,005, while in 1928 the receipts were $12,961,654, an increase of nearly 100 per cent. The plan is to enlarge the present post office by closing a city street and purchasing ground on the east of the present structure. The new building will cost about $2,000,000 and will give the city, which I have the honor to represent in part, a modern post office with sufficient facilities to handle this great volume of business.

A large amount of the increase is parcel post, bulky mail that must be moved without delay. At the present time every inch of space is used and in the rush hour, conditions exist that make the efficient handling of mail almost impossible.

The St. Louis postmaster has found it necessary in the interest of expediting the handling of mail to appeal to the business houses to deposit their mail three and four times a day instead of holding it until the closing hour. I have been informed by employees that at times even the boiler room is used for parcel-post mail.

Treasury Department officials stated to the committee that it would probably take some time to get the city of St. Louis to close the street. I am sure if the Treasury Department will officially make its wishes known to the city officials there will be no delay in getting action so far as the closing of the street is concerned. St. Louis continues to grow in population. In 1910 we had a population of 687,029 while the estimated population in 1928 was 848,100. This figure does not represent the real population of St. Louis as tens of thousands of our citizens reside in the county adjoining the city. Their business and their work is in the city but the residential section has extended in recent years to the west, and thousands of magnificent residences, the property of St. Louis business men, are now found in the county. St. Louis and Baltimore are the only two cities in the country independent of a county. We have the city of St. Louis and St. Louis County, neither having any jurisdiction in the other territory. If all the people having a business establishment or who are employed in the city of St. Louis were included in its population, St. Louis would be well above the 1,000,000 mark.

St. Louis has waited many years for this much-needed addition to the post office and the Treasury Department will find the city officials not only willing but anxious to do their part to expedite construction.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, at a session of the House, January 23, 1925, I called attention to the conditions along the Canadian border adjoining Vermont in respect to buildings for the Customs Service and the Immigration Service. The ports of entry along the border are in relatively small villages, but they have become important by reason of increasing automobile traffic. At that time I called attention to the conditions existing at one of these ports, that of Derby Line, which was typical. There the Government agents were making their inspection and doing their work on a hotel piazza or in the street, though several hundred thousand people passed the station every year.

I succeeded in interesting some public-spirited citizens in the problem, and, as a result, a building suitable for the demands of that time was purchased and rented to the Government. I also succeeded, in cooperation with Senator DALE, in securing the erection of a building at another important station, that of North Troy. So in that way the immediate needs were taken care of.

On January 10, 1928, I again called the attention of the House to the situation in respect to the border, and among other things said this:

Another thing I wish to call to your attention. The Customs Service and the Immigration Service are not well housed. At Derby Line, where 400,000 people pass every year, until two years ago the necessary examinations were made on the piazza of a country hotel. I succeeded in interesting some public-spirited citizens, who saw the shame of this great and rich country doing its business in that way, in the acquiring for the services of respectable quarters at a low rental. At North Troy, where more than 200,000 pass every year, a room 10 by 15 in one end of a railway station served as an office where five men worked in the winter and eight in the summer. It was also used for the detention of immigrants and for the storage of captured liquor. There, too, public-spirited citizens had to come to the rescue of the Government, and as a result a building has been erected for the transaction of the business of the Government. I look ahead with hope to a day when the United States will erect at the border a uniform type of a building for the Customs and the Immigration Services that will be a credit to us.

A subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee headed by Congressman SHREVE of Pennsylvania made an inspection of conditions and familiarized themselves with many of the problems confronting our Treasury Department and our Labor Department in the enforcement of the laws of the country along the international border.

Out of the agitation, the work of this committee, and the investigations of an interdepartmental committee, has come a settled policy of providing immigration and customs inspection stations that are suitable for the growing demands. As a result of this policy the last deficiency bill provided for the allocation and the building of such stations at Alburg, Highgate Springs, and Beecher Falls. The pending bill advances this building program by providing for three more of these stations, namely, at Richford, East Richford, and Derby Line. Thus actual needs are taken care of in a splendid fashion.

We are recruiting to the Immigration and Customs Services a fine body of young men. They are giving the best that is in them to the service of the Government. They are honest, faithful, and courageous in the performance of their work.

As a matter of interest at home, let me call attention to the fact that this bill provides funds for the erection of a fine public building at Rutland, in the district of my colleague [Mr. BRIGHAM], in addition to these three inspection stations just referred to. The building at Rutland is much needed and will take care of a public necessity. In behalf of the people of Vermont who are struggling with the problem of rehabilitation after the disastrous flood, I wish to thank the members of the committee for its generous consideration of our needs.

Let me say further that this bill contains more forward looking constructive provisions than have been included in any similar proposal in many years. I desire to congratulate the committee upon its splendid work. The thanks of the Congress and the people of the country are due its members.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent given me I beg the indulgence of the Members of the House. I note the pending deficiency bill carries appropriations for the construction of various Federal buildings, including post offices, and since these particular items are of vital interest to the residents of my congressional district, I feel I would be neglecting my duty to them should I fail, at this time, to present as forcibly as possible the urgent need for new post-office buildings not only in the city of Chicago but in the adjoining towns comprising my district: Oak Park, Melrose Park, Maywood, Riverside, Berwyn, Forest Park, and La Grange.

For a number of years the citizens of these immediate communities have felt the need of a larger building to accommodate the rapidly growing population and have endeavored, through petitions presented to the national constituted authorities, as well as the Congress of the United States, for relief. Their complaints have not been mere conjectures, but have been based on facts and inspired by a public spirit imbued only in a law-abiding, progressive, sociable, and forward-looking populace with the home civic spirit uppermost in their thoughts. I cite, for instance, the conditions existing in Oak Park, and I submit the other communities enumerated above can well be compared with it in every particular. The present post office in Oak Park was built some 25 years ago, when there was a population of less than 20,000. The population to-day is approximately 70,000; vast improvements have taken place, such as the completing of a civic center; public and semipublic institutions have located there; all the leading department stores in the city of Chicago have established branch stores within the corporate limits of Oak Park; churches of practically every denomination have been built; sound and well-managed banks have been established; bus and trolley lines have been installed; and, in fact, practically every convenience necessary for a peace-abiding community is in force. Yet there is one drawback to these great developments—the inadequate postal facilities afforded by the Government of the United States.

I am not complaining of the items contained in this bill; in fact, I heartily approve of them, as it has always been my pleasure to vote for legislation that would in any way be beneficial to any community; but I do feel the people of my district have been treated unfairly.

Under the new public-building program recently adopted by the Federal Government I hope to convince the proper authorities of the necessity for and fairness in the request of my constituents for new public buildings to be used for post-office purposes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CARLEY, for an indefinite period, on account of illness.

To Mr. SOMERS of New York, for two days, on account of death in family.

CONSENT CALENDAR

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next it may be in order to consider the Consent Calendar, beginning where we left off at the last call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that on Monday next it may be in order to consider the Consent Calendar, beginning at the point where the House left off on the last call. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, when is the beginning of the last six days, or how does the gentleman construe that?

Mr. TILSON. There is some uncertainty about it in view of the fact that the 3d of March is Sunday, not a legislative day. The rule provides for suspensions for the last six days of the session. Regardless of the rule, however, I ask that on Monday we may consider the Consent Calendar. This would involve no suspensions, unless the Speaker should rule that Monday is a regular suspension day under the rules of the House. I am asking for special permission for the consideration of the Consent Calendar without regard to the 6-day provision.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman expect to take up the Private Calendar with a view to considering uncontested bills during the balance of the session?

Mr. TILSON. I can not answer the gentleman definitely because there is a great deal of business on the calendar of one kind or another, and the public business might so crowd out the Private Calendar that we should not have the opportunity to consider other private bills than those that are unobjected to. I do not wish to mislead the gentleman.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Is it problematical that you will, or do you think it is probable that you will, take up the Private Calendar on uncontested bills?

Mr. TILSON. Personally my own belief is that we shall not have time to take up the Private Calendar and consider the bills there under the regular rules of the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, may we have an understanding that if the request of the gentleman from Connecticut is agreed to there will be no suspensions on Monday? Here is the reason why I make the suggestion: It is not because I have any objection to suspensions if it seems wise to have them. I am not trying to prevent recognition on the part of the Chair if the Chair, for the purpose of suspension, chooses to do it on Monday; but I am only asking it so that the Members will know whether or not there will be any suspensions on Monday. If it is desired to reserve the question, it is perfectly all right with me. But if there are not going to be any suspensions, I do not see any reason why it could not be stated now.

Mr. TILSON. If the Chair is willing to state whether it is his intention to recognize motions for suspensions of the rules——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is willing to yield to the judgment of the majority and minority leaders if a motion to suspend the rules is made.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There can arise no parliamentary questions under the rule if the suspensions begin on Tuesday. I can see where, if there was recognition on Monday, parliamentary questions might arise, and might be annoying, and delay business.

The SPEAKER. It would be necessary on Saturday, up to the 4th of March, to have a recess. There necessarily must be a recess before adjournment. Adjournment by consent would be in order. It would be in order to suspend the rules on Monday. It is perfectly proper for the majority and minority leaders to say now what they consider best.

Mr. TILSON. I think it will be better for the more orderly dispatch of business on Monday not to have suspensions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will then say he will not recognize gentlemen to make motions to suspend the rules.

Mr. CRAMTON. The Consent Calendar is a long calendar, and if gentlemen wish to have any chance for their bills being passed before the next Congress they ought to go over to the Senate and have their bills expedited. I think we should have some understanding that outside of conference reports there will be no controversial matters brought up on Monday. Of course, on appropriation bills that has to be done, but other controversial matters will not receive consideration on Monday by the Chair. In other words, we should keep Monday as closely as possible for the consideration of the Consent Calendar.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Conference reports have the right of way, whether they are on appropriation bills or otherwise.

Mr. CRAMTON. Conference reports would have the right of way, but the day should be reserved for the Consent Calendar.

Mr. TILSON. Of course, it is understood that the bill passed to-day will be the first business on Monday. Beyond that I hope that there will be no business called up except privileged matters on the Speaker's table on Monday, so as to give ample time for the consideration of the Consent Calendar.

Mr. CRAMTON. You might spend the entire day with the business on the Speaker's table. I am not sure what might be there. I was in hopes that we could have a unanimous-consent agreement that it would not be brought up.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request, and if granted, shall do what I can to comply with the gentleman's suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that Monday next, after the disposition of the matters on the Speaker's table, it may be in order to consider bill on the Consent Calendar, beginning at the point where the House left off at the last meeting on that calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, February 25, 1929, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. TILSON submitted the following tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Monday, February 25, 1929, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

(10 a. m. and 2 p. m.)

Tariff hearings: Administrative and miscellaneous.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. STOBBS: Committee on the Judiciary. S. 3117. An act for the relief of the State of Connecticut; with an amendment (Rept. No. 2677). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GRAHAM: Committee on the Judiciary. S. 2206. An act to amend section 260 of the Judicial Code, as amended; without amendment (Rept. No. 2678). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. STALKER: Committee on the District of Columbia. H. R. 17166. A bill to provide for the relocation of Michigan Avenue adjacent to the southerly boundary of the United States Soldiers' Home grounds, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 2680). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. McLEOD: Committee on the District of Columbia. S. 4085. A bill to prevent professional prize fighting and to authorize amateur boxing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 2681). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WINTER: Committee on the Public Lands. H. R. 16771. A bill granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of Wyoming and Idaho with respect to the boundary line between said States; without amendment (Rept. No. 2693). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MORIN: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 17250. A bill to regulate promotion in the Army and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 2694). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. IRWIN: Committee on Claims. H. R. 13430. A bill for the relief of Arthur E. Rump; without amendment (Rept. No. 2679). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. IRWIN: Committee on Claims. S. 382. An act for the relief of Joseph F. Thorpe; without amendment (Rept. No. 2682). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. GUYER: Committee on Claims. H. R. 8208. A bill for the relief of Lamirah F. Thomas; with amendment (Rept. No. 2683). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SPEAKS: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 9238. A bill for the relief of the widow of Ephriam E. Page; without amendment (Rept. No. 2684). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BOYLAN: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 9699. A bill for the relief of Benjamin Hagerty; without amendment (Rept. No. 2685). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 12593. A bill for the relief of Edward McOmber; with an amendment (Rept. No. 2686). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SPEAKS: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 13052. A bill to correct the military record of Malcolm Allen; with an amendment (Rept. No. 2687). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 14863. A bill for the relief of Harry Hamlin; with an amendment (Rept. No. 2688). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. GLYNN: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 15405. A bill to correct the military record of James Luther Hammon; with an amendment (Rept. No. 2689). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McSWAIN: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 15686. A bill for the relief of E. O. McGillis; with an amendment (Rept. No. 2690). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. REECE: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 15975. A bill for the relief of Nelson King; without amendment (Rept. No. 2691). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BUSHONG: Committee on Claims. H. R. 6705. A bill for the relief of Clotilda Freund; without amendment (Rept. No. 2692). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

ADVERSE REPORTS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. McFADDEN: Committee on Banking and Currency. H. Res. 325. A resolution requesting information from the Secretary of the Treasury; adverse (Rept. No. 2673). Laid on the table.

Mr. McFADDEN: Committee on Banking and Currency. H. Res. 326. A resolution requesting information from the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board; adverse (Rept. No. 2674). Laid on the table.

Mr. McFADDEN: Committee on Banking and Currency. H. Res. 327. A resolution requesting information from the President of the United States; adverse (Rept. No. 2675). Laid on the table.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 17249) equalizing annual leave of employees of the Department of Agriculture stationed outside the continental limits of the United States; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

By Mr. MORIN: A bill (H. R. 17250) to regulate promotion in the Army, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. UNDERHILL: Resolution (H. Res. 338) to employ additional clerical service for the enrolling room for the present session; to the Committee on Accounts.

Also, a resolution (H. Res. 339) authorizing the appointment of an additional clerk to the Committee on Accounts; to the Committee on Accounts.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, urging upon Congress the advisability and necessity of imposing tariff duties upon all round and square timbers, rough and dressed lumber, match blocks, shingle bolts, shingles, lath, sash, doors, moldings and millwork imported into the United States; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KORELL: Memorial of the State Legislature of Oregon, memorializing Congress to investigate the telephone service and rates; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FRENCH: Memorial of the twentieth session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, urging the advisability and necessity of imposing tariff duties upon all round and square timbers, rough and dressed lumber, match blocks, shingle bolts, shingles, lath, sash, doors, molding, and millwork imported into the United States; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CARTER: A bill (H. R. 17251), for the relief of Charles W. Langridge; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CROSSER: A bill (H. R. 17252) granting a pension to Frank Burbank; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HOGG: A bill (H. R. 17253) granting an increase of pension to Catherine O'Grady; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17254) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Seaburg; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17255) granting a pension to Ona Foster; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17256) for the relief of Darold Brundige; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MURPHY: A bill (H. R. 17257) granting an increase of pension to Jennie Lee; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'BRIEN: A bill (H. R. 17258) granting an increase of pension to Rebecca J. Free; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHREVE: A bill (H. R. 17259) for the relief of Neal W. Allen; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. TIMBERLAKE: A bill (H. R. 17260) granting a pension to Ollie E. Montgomery; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE of Colorado: A bill (H. R. 17261) granting a pension to Donald C. Collyer; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

12391. By Mr. BARBOUR: Resolution adopted by the Fresno Veterans' Council, of Fresno, Calif., indorsing and urging consideration of House bill 14676, to increase pensions of Spanish war veterans; to the Committee on Pensions.

12392. Also, resolution of Board of Supervisors of Kings County, Calif., urging the location of the proposed Army air base in the San Francisco Bay metropolitan area; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

12393. By Mr. CORNING: Petition of James G. Murray, manager Albany branch, W. L. Douglas Shoe Co., and other citizens of Albany, N. Y., protesting against any change in the present tariff on hides and leather used in the manufacture of shoes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

12394. By Mr. HUDSON: Petition of citizens of Detroit, urging that no change in the present tariff on hides and leather used in the manufacture of shoes be made; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

12395. By Mr. JENKINS: Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to distribute radio broadcasting facilities equitably in accordance with the population of the States, adopted by the Eighty-eighth General Assembly of Ohio; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

12396. By Mr. LANKFORD: Petition of 69 citizens of Chicago, Ill., urging the enactment of legislation to protect the people of the Nation's Capital in their enjoyment of Sunday as a day of rest in seven as provided in the Lankford bill (H. R. 78), or similar measures; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

12397. Also, petition of 300 members of First Church of the Brethren, of Chicago, Ill., urging the enactment of legislation to protect the people of the Nation's Capital in their enjoyment of Sunday as a day of rest in seven as provided in the Lankford bill (H. R. 78), or similar measures; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

12398. Also, petition of 525 members of the Albany Park Presbyterian Church, Chicago, Ill., urging the enactment of legislation to protect the people of the Nation's Capital in their enjoyment of Sunday as a day of rest in seven, as provided in the Lankford bill (H. R. 78), or similar measures; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

12399. Also, petition of seven citizens of Denison, Tex., urging the enactment of legislation to protect the people of the Nation's Capital in their enjoyment of Sunday as a day of rest in seven, as provided in the Lankford bill (H. R. 78), or similar measures; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

13400. Also, petition of 36 citizens of Mohnton, Pa., urging the enactment of legislation to protect the people of the Nation's Capital in their enjoyment of Sunday as a day of rest in seven, as provided in the Lankford bill (H. R. 78), or similar measures; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

13401. Also, petition of 44 citizens of Allentown, Pa., urging the enactment of legislation to protect the people of the Nation's Capital in their enjoyment of Sunday as a day of rest in seven, as provided in the Lankford bill (H. R. 78), or similar measures; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

13402. Also, petition of 21 citizens of Palmerton and Slatington, Pa., urging the enactment of legislation to protect the people of the Nation's Capital in their enjoyment of Sunday as a day of rest in seven, as provided by the Lankford bill (H. R. 78), or similar measures; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

13403. Also, petition of 28 citizens of Reading, Pa., urging the enactment of legislation to protect the people of the Nation's Capital in their enjoyment of Sunday as a day of rest in seven, as provided in the Lankford bill (H. R. 78), or similar measures; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

13404. Also, petition of 31 citizens of Berk County, State of Pennsylvania, urging the enactment of legislation to protect the people of the Nation's Capital in their enjoyment of Sunday as a day of rest in seven, as provided in the Lankford bill (H. R. 78), or similar measures; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

13405. Also, petition of Council of the Presbyterian Synod of the State of California, in session, with a membership of 87,980, approving the passage of the Lankford Sunday rest bill for the District of Columbia (H. R. 78); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

13406. Also, petition of the Wilkes-Barre Central Union, in mass meeting of Women's Christian Temperance Union members assembled, with representatives of five churches, unanimously urging the passage of House bill 78, providing one day of rest in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

13407. Also, petition of 67 citizens of Emaus, Pa., urging the enactment of legislation to protect the people of the Nation's Capital in their enjoyment of Sunday as a day of rest in seven, as provided in the Lankford bill (H. R. 78) or similar measures; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

13408. Also, petition of 100 members of the Prospect Heights Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., urging the enactment of legislation to protect the people of the Nation's Capital in their enjoyment of Sunday as a day of rest in seven, as provided in the Lankford bill (H. R. 78) or similar measures; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

13409. By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of Hon. Ed Doyle, State Assembly, New York, being a resolution petitioning Congress to hold the contemplated World's Fair in the Borough of Brooklyn, N. Y., in the year 1932; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

13410. Also, petition of 36 retail shoe dealers, citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for vote against any change in the present tariff on hides and leather used in the manufacture of shoes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

13411. Also, petition of Cabble Excelsior Wire Manufacturing Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., praying that the brief submitted by the American Manufacturers of Fourdrinier and Cylinder Wires, in relation to paragraph 318 of Schedule 3, title 1, of the tariff act of 1922, be carefully read over and that this industry be given as much assistance as possible; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

13412. By Mr. McCORMACK: Petition of James Lynch, 823 East Second Street, South Boston, Mass., protesting against any duty being imposed on lobsters because of the unreasonable prices now demanded for this commodity, and stating that Massachusetts lobster dealers are opposed to proposed tariff on lobsters; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

13413. By Mr. MEAD: Petition of Lawtons Grange, No. 1176, Lawtons, N. Y., favoring higher tariff on beans, potatoes, hay, buckwheat, eggs, dairy products, etc.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

13414. Also, petition of executive committee of New York State Grange, opposing higher tariff on lumber; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

13415. Also, petition of Common Council of the City of Buffalo, favoring higher pensions for Spanish War veterans; to the Committee on Pensions.

13416. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of the National Builders' Supply Association of the United States, favoring the Treadway bill (H. R. 13405); to the Committee on Ways and Means.

13417. Also, petition of the Institute of Margarine Manufactures, favoring the passage of the Haugen bill (H. R. 10958); to the Committee on Agriculture.

13418. Also, petition of the New York State Grange, opposing any tariff on lumber or shingles from the Dominion of Canada; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

13419. Also, petition of the Baltimore Butterine Co., Baltimore, Md., opposing the passage of the Haugen oleomargarine bill (H. R. 10958); to the Committee on Agriculture.

13420. By Mr. QUAYLE: Petition of Charles Hess Co., New York City, N. Y., opposing a tariff increase on Cuban sugar; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

13421. Also, petition of United States Casualty Co., of New York City, N. Y., favoring the passage of House bill 15769, to authorize an appropriation to reimburse various insurance companies for losses which they sustained by reason of the explosions; to the Committee on War Claims.

13422. Also, petition from the executive committee of New York State Grange, opposed to a tariff on lumber and shingles; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

13423. Also, petition of Douglas I. McKay, State department commander, American Legion, New York, favoring the passage of the American Legion hospital bill; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

13424. Also, petition of David W. Sowers, opposing House bill 14000, amending section 29 of the farm loan act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

13425. By Mr. SELVIG: Petition of seven residents of Pennington County and six residents of Clearwater County, in the ninth district, Minnesota, urging the passage of House bill 10958; to the Committee on Agriculture.

13426. Also, petition of Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Ada, Minn., urging the passage of the Jones-Stalker bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

13427. By Mr. SOMERS of New York: Petition of Sidney Levine and his brother, Joseph Levine, charging misconduct on the part of Judge Grover M. Moscowitz, district judge of the eastern district of New York; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

13428. By Mr. SWING: Petition of residents of San Diego, Calif., and vicinity, protesting against compulsory Sunday observance bill (H. R. 78); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

13429. By Mr. THATCHER: Petition of numerous adult residents of Louisville, Ky., and vicinity, protesting against the enactment of House bill 78, or any other bills proposing compulsory observance of the Sabbath; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

13430. By Mr. WATSON: Petition of the Lansdale Baptist Sunday School, with a membership of 560, urging the enactment of legislation to protect the people of the Nation's Capital in their enjoyment of Sunday as a day of rest in seven, as provided in the Lankford bill (H. R. 78), or similar measures; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

13431. By Mr. WELCH of California: Petition of United Spanish War Veterans, Department of California, requesting the enactment of House bill 14676; to the Committee on Pensions.

13432. By Mr. WHITTINGTON: Petition of board of supervisors, of Washington County, Miss., to extend the open season for shooting ducks and geese, from February 1 to February 15; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE

MONDAY, February 25, 1929

The Chaplain, Rev. Zeb Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, Thou unseen source of holiness and peace, help us to trust not in our knowledge of Thee but in Thy knowledge of us; make us sure of Thee, not because we feel our thoughts of Thee are true but just because we know Thou dost transcend them all. Be patient with our foolish doubts, for Thou hast set the questions which perplex us, and grant that we may find our unbelief to be but nascent faith fretting at its outworn form. When we are tempted to desist from moral strife, reveal the power Thy presence doth impart, and ere we tire of mental search, remind us of Thy call which stirred our souls and turn us back from voyages of thought to that which sent us forth, from wanderings without to find Thee still within. Grant this for the sake of Thine own blessed Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 1781) to establish load lines for American vessels, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. WHITE, of Maine, Mr. LEHLBACH, Mr. FREE, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. BLAND were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 924. An act for the relief of Joe D. Donisi; and

H. R. 10304. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to erect headstones over the graves of soldiers who served in the Confederate Army and to direct him to preserve in the records of the War Department the names and places of burial of all soldiers for whom such headstones shall have been erected, and for other purposes.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fess	McMaster	Simmons
Barkley	Frazier	McNary	Smith
Bayard	George	Mayfield	Smoot
Bingham	Gerry	Metcalf	Steck
Black	Glass	Moses	Steiwer
Blaine	Glenn	Neely	Stephens
Blease	Goff	Norbeck	Swanson
Borah	Gould	Norris	Thomas, Idaho
Bratton	Greene	Nye	Thomas, Okla.
Brookhart	Hale	Oddie	Trammell
Broussard	Harris	Overman	Tydings
Bruce	Harrison	Phipps	Tyson
Burton	Hastings	Pine	Vandenberg
Capper	Hawes	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Hayden	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mont.
Copeland	Heflin	Reed, Pa.	Warren
Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.	Waterman
Curtis	Jones	Robinson, Ind.	Watson
Deneen	Kendrick	Sackett	Wheeler
Dill	Keyes	Schall
Edge	King	Sheppard
Edwards	McKellar	Shortridge

Mr. TRAMMELL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is necessarily absent. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

THE CALENDAR—UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, while there is a quorum present I desire to submit a request for the following unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the proposed agreement.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, by unanimous consent, That at the conclusion of the business of the Senate to-day the Senate recess until 11 o'clock Tuesday, February 26, 1929; that on the convening of the Senate on said day it proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, beginning at Calendar No. 1713, and that the consideration of unobjected bills shall not continue for more than two hours.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I should like to consider the proposal for a little while.

Mr. CURTIS. I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. BRUCE. I know the Senator entertains a most fervent hope to that effect, but I would like to consider it a little while. I will look at it at once.

Mr. CURTIS. I will withdraw it for the moment.

Mr. CURTIS subsequently said: Mr. President, I would like to submit again the unanimous-consent request. I have talked with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] and he has no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, is the number on the calendar designated by the Senator the number where we left off before?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; it is where we left off on the last call of the calendar.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I have no intention of objecting. I simply wish to direct attention to the fact that we have a unanimous-consent agreement to proceed under the 10-minute limit with Senate Joint Resolution 117, the Nicaraguan canal measure, at 4 o'clock to-day; but I assume we shall be able to dispose of that measure before the day is ended.

Mr. CURTIS. This agreement would not interfere with the joint resolution which the Senator has in charge.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

SALES OF FOREIGN CALF LEATHER IN THE UNITED STATES (S. DOC. NO. 230)

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a response of the Tariff Commission to Senate Resolution 163, submitted by Mr. COPELAND and agreed to March 2, 1928, relative to foreign calf-leather sales in the United States, which will lie on the table and be printed as a Senate document.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES OF APPROPRIATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the President of the United States, together with accompanying letters from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, transmitting, pursuant to law, supplemental estimates of appropriations, which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

An estimate for the Department of Agriculture, amounting to $80,000, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, for carrying into effect the provisions of the migratory bird conservation act, approved February 18, 1929 (S. Doc. No. 244);

An estimate for the War Department, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, to remain available until expended, for investigations and surveys for a Nicaraguan canal and to determine the possibilities and cost of enlarging the Panama Canal, amounting to $150,000 (submitted in lieu of the estimate transmitted on May 23, 1928, which referred only to an investigation and survey for a Nicaraguan canal) (S. Doc. No. 237);

An estimate of appropriation for the Department of the Interior, Bureau of Indian Affairs, for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, and June 30, 1930, for the payment of draft assessments on restricted Indian allotments, Cleveland County, Okla., amounting to $2,729.30 (S. Doc. No. 238);

An estimate for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, amounting to $50,000, required for the extension and remodeling of the building for the Salisbury (N. C.) post office, courthouse, etc. (S. Doc. No. 239);

An estimate for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, amounting to $10,000, pertaining to the Coast Guard, for the preparation of plans, drawings, etc., for a Coast Guard Academy building and appurtenances (S. Doc. No. 240); and

An estimate for the Department of State for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1929, and June 30, 1930, amounting to $1,475 (indemnity for the death of Wang-Ehr-Ko, Chinese citizen, $875; International Society for the Exploration of the Arctic Regions by Means of the Airship, fiscal years 1929 and 1930, $300 for each fiscal year) (S. Doc. No. 241).

OKLAHOMA EXPERIMENT STATION (S. DOC. NO. 242)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying letter from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation affecting existing appropriations for the Oklahoma Experiment Station, Department of Agriculture, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered printed.

TRANSFER OF FUNDS TO CERTAIN DEPARTMENTS (S. DOC. NO. 243)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying letter from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation affecting a transfer of funds from an existing appropriation for the Department of Agriculture, Weather Bureau, to the Treasury Department, Coast Guard, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

JUDGMENTS RENDERED BY THE COURT OF CLAIMS (S. DOC. NO. 231)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with law, a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims and requiring an appropriation for their payment, as follows: Under independent offices: United States Veterans' Bureau, $13,434.90; under Department of Agriculture, $11,520.55; under the Navy Department, $51,150; and under the War Department, $111,614.72, in the total amount of $187,720.17, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM UNDER THE NAVY PENSION FUND—FLOYD A. NEWALL (S. DOC. NO. 232)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a proposed draft of legislation affecting an existing appropriated fund, the Navy pension fund, authorizing payments therefrom in the amount of $10.61 in accordance with law, providing for the disposition of effects of deceased persons in the naval service, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

JUDGMENTS BY UNITED STATES COURTS IN SPECIAL CASES (S. DOC. NO. 233)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, records of judgments rendered against the Government by the United States district courts in special cases—under the Navy Department, $700,231.38; under the War Department, $8,867.40; in the total amount of $709,098.78, which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

JUDGMENT RENDERED UNDER THE PUBLIC VESSELS ACT (S. DOC. NO. 234)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a record of a judgment rendered against the Government by the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts, under the Public Vessels Act—under the Treasury Department, $1,032.60, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE (S. DOC. NO. 235)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with law, schedules of claims amounting to $115,896.71, allowed by various divisions of the General Accounting Office, under appropriations the balances of which have been carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of law, and for the service of the several departments and independent offices, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES TO PRIVATELY OWNED PROPERTY (S. DOC. NO. 236)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting estimates of appropriations submitted by the several executive departments to pay claims for damages to privately owned property and damages by collision with naval vessels, in the sum of $4,707.51, which have been considered and adjusted under the provisions of law, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION (S. DOC. NO. 247)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Federal Board for Vocational Education, fiscal year 1930, in amount $15,000, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION OF DISABLED RESIDENTS OF THE DISTRICT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the District of Columbia, fiscal year 1930, amounting to $15,000, to carry into effect the provisions of the act of February 23, 1929, authorizing appropriations of District of Columbia funds to match equal appropriations of Federal funds, to provide for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled residents of the District of Columbia, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF FARMERS IN STRICKEN AREAS, SOUTHEASTERN UNITED STATES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Agriculture, amounting to $6,000,000, for the fiscal year 1929, to remain available until June 30, 1930, for the purpose of making advances or loans to farmers in the storm and flood stricken areas of the southeastern United States as contemplated by law, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDINGS AT MILITARY POSTS (S. DOC. NO. 250)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the War Department, fiscal year 1929, for construction of buildings, utilities and appurtenances at military posts, amounting to $1,103,000, and containing a draft of proposed legislation affecting an existing appropriation of the War Department, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MOUNT RUSHMORE NATIONAL MEMORIAL COMMISSION (S. DOC. NO. 249)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1929, in the amount of $100,000, to remain available until expended for carrying into effect the provisions of the act creating the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission, approved February 25, 1929, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

METHODS OF RECOVERING POTASH

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, supplemental estimates of appropriation for the Department of Commerce, amounting to $33,000, for the fiscal year 1929, and $25,000, for the fiscal year 1930, for the development of methods of recovering potash from deposits in the United States, total amount $58,000, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, supplemental estimates of appropriation, amounting to $17,000 for the fiscal year 1929, and $25,000 for the fiscal year 1930, for the development of methods of recovering potash from deposits in the United States, total amount $42,000, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed. (S. Doc. No. 246.)

PAVING DRY VALLEY ROAD, GA. (S. DOC. NO. 252)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the War Department, fiscal year 1929, to remain available until June 30, 1930, for paving Dry Valley Road in Georgia, $60,000, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Assembly joint resolution approved February 19, 1929

Whereas there are now pending before the Congress of the United States S. 4601, introduced by Senator ODDIE, and H. R. 14665, introduced by Representative COLTON, identical measures, having for their purpose the appropriation of $3,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929; $3,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930; and $3,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, for the construction of main roads through unappropriated or unreserved public lands, nontaxable Indian lands, or other Federal reservations; and

Whereas the passage of these measures would be but an act of justice to the public-land States wherein vast areas of nontaxable lands are owned by the Federal Government; and

Whereas it has been shown that under present appropriations it will take approximately 40 years to complete the forest highway system, while with the aid of the appropriations carried by the proposed measure important gaps within and across the public-land States, largely across the public domain and Government reserves, will be closed within a reasonable period, thus tending to complete the Federal system of highways across the country: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That our Senators and Representative be urged to use all honorable means to promote these measures before the Congress of the United States, so that the actual work of construction on important links of our highway system may proceed without further delay; and be it further

Resolved, That properly certified copies of this resolution be telegraphed to our Senators and Representative, and to the President of the United States Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the Secretary of Agriculture, and to the legislatures of the public-land States now in session.

MORLEY GRISWOLD,
President of the Senate.
V. R. MERIALDO,
Secretary of the Senate.
R. C. TURRITTIN,
Speaker of the Assembly.
V. M. HENDERSON,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
NINTH STATE LEGISLATURE, REGULAR SESSION.

House Concurrent Memorial 1

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialist, the Ninth Legislature of the State of Arizona, in regular session convened, respectfully represents:

That of the 73,000,000 acres of land comprising the State of Arizona, approximately three-fifths are reserved by the Government of the United States;

That over these reserved lands the State of Arizona exercises no supervision or jurisdiction;

That 20,000,000 acres of these lands are reserved by the Government of the United States to the use and benefit of the Indian peoples in the State of Arizona;

That the above condition exists in many States;

That these Indian reservations are so situated as to prevent a systematic development and extension of county, State, or National highways without the cooperation and assistance of the Government of the United States;

That the Congress of the United States in enacting a most beneficent national road law has wholly failed to make any provision for the construction and maintenance of highways over and upon the lands reserved by the Federal Government to the use and benefit of its Indian wards.

Whereas adequate transportation facilities are a vital factor in the prosperity and civilization of any country and are essential to the development of its agriculture and manufactories, to the working of its forests and mines, and to the spread of education and enlightenment among its citizens; and

Whereas the public roads of Arizona are for a large percentage of her citizens and especially for the 42,000 Indian wards of the Federal Government, the only avenues of transportation leading from the point of production to the point of consumption or rail shipment, and these avenues are only now in the process of their development; and

Whereas a very large portion of the State of Arizona is held in reserve by the Government of the United States to the use and benefit of its Indian wards, and these reservations are so situated as to prevent any economic or systematic road-building activities on the part of the State government as continuous highways are rendered impracticable. This is especially true on the Hopi and Navajo Indian Reservations, as practically the long and important stretch of road from Cameron to Winslow is on the reservations; and

Whereas a further inequity results from the fact that traffic in its development takes no account of reservation and State boundaries, and the State government is powerless to provide for the extension of its highway system through the adjoining and intervening reservations; and

Whereas the improvement of highways should be commensurate with their importance, and a system of highways upon the Indian reservations of Arizona would form the only avenue by which the Indian nations could transport their products to a market or over which the many thousands of tourists from all parts of the United States could pass to view the marvelous beauties of our natural and historical wonders: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of Arizona (the Senate concurring), That the development of the material resources of the Indian peoples of Arizona can best be furthered, their material prosperity best enhanced, their education and civilization more readily achieved, and that close association with civilization which has proved to be the efficient means of equipping them to share in the responsibilities of life most certainly assured, by means of highways constructed and maintained over and upon the lands reserved by the Government of the United States to their use and benefit; and be it further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, urged to enact legislation which may be necessary to provide adequate appropriation for the construction and maintenance of highways over and upon Indian reservations in Arizona joining to and in conjunction with the system of State highways; and be it

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial and these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and to Representatives of Arizona in Congress; and that our Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to do all in their power to accomplish the enactment of such legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Senate Joint Memorial 3

To the honorable Senate of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Whereas there is pending before the Senate of the United States a resolution introduced by Senator HIRAM JOHNSON, as follows:

"Resolved, That a committee of five Members of the Senate be appointed by the President thereof, and be hereby empowered and directed to inquire into and report upon—

"(1) The growth of the capital assets and capital liabilities of public-utility corporations supplying telephone communications, however such telephone communications may be accomplished and/or produced, of corporations holding the stocks of such public-utility corporations, and of non-public-utility corporations owned or controlled by or affiliated with such holding companies;

"(2) The method of issuing, the price realized or value received, the commissions or bonuses paid or received, and other pertinent facts with respect to the various security issues of all classes of corporations herein named, including the bonds and other evidences of indebtedness thereof, as well as the stocks of the same;

"(3) The extent to which holding companies or their stockholders control or are financially interested in financial, engineering, construction, and/or management corporations, and the relations, one to the other, of the classes of corporations last named, the holding companies, and the public-utility corporations;

"(4) The services furnished to public-utility corporations by holding companies and/or their associated, affiliated, and/or subsidiary companies, the fees, commissions, bonuses, or other charges made therefor, and the earnings and expenses of such holding companies and their associated, affiliated and/or subsidiary companies; and

"(5) The value or detriment to the public of holding companies owning the stock otherwise controlling such public corporations immediately or remotely, with the extent of such ownership or control, and particularly what legislation, if any, should be enacted by Congress to correct any abuses that may exist in the organization or operation of such holding companies.

"(6) The committee is further empowered and directed to inquire and report whether, and to what extent, such corporations or any of the officers thereof or anyone in their behalf or in behalf of any organization of which any such corporation may be a member, through the expenditures of money or through the control of the avenues of publicity, have made any and what effort to influence or control public opinion on account of municipal or public ownership of the means by which telephone communication is accomplished and/or produced, or to influence or control elections.

"(7) That the said committee is hereby authorized to sit and perform its duties at such times and places as it deems necessary or proper, and to require the attendance of witnesses by subpœnas or otherwise; to require the production of books, papers, and documents; and to employ counsel, experts, and other assistants, and stenographers, at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page.

"(8) The chairman of the committee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses and sign subpœnas for witnesses; and every person duly summoned before said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, who refuses or fails to obey the process of said committee, or appears and refuses to answer questions pertinent to said investigation, shall be punished as prescribed by law.

"(9) The expense of said investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers of the committee or subcommittee, signed by the chairman and approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

"(10) The committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized to sit during the sessions or the recesses of the Senate and until otherwise ordered by the Senate": Be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oregon (the House of Representatives jointly concurring therein), That we most earnestly petition and memorialize the Senate of the United States, in the name of the State of Oregon, to adopt said resolution hereinbefore set forth and to conduct the investigation in accordance with the terms thereof, and that the Hon. CHARLES L. MCNARY and the Hon. FREDERICK STEIWER, United States Senators from Oregon, be, and they hereby are, urged to give their active and earnest support to secure the adoption of said resolution; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Oregon be instructed to forward a copy of this memorial to Senators CHARLES L. MCNARY and FREDERICK STEIWER, and to each of the members of the Oregon congressional delegation, and a copy to the Senate of the United States.

Adopted by the senate February 5, 1929.

A. W. NORBLAD,
President of the Senate.

Concurred in by the house February 16, 1929.

R. S. HAMILTON,
Speaker of the House.

(Indorsed: Senate Joint Memorial No. 3, introduced by Senator Joe E. Dunne. Jno. P. Hunt, chief clerk. Filed, February 19, 1929, Hal E. Hoss, secretary of state.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Senate Joint Memorial 5, memoralizing Congress for the passage of necessary legislation providing for an increase of the tariff on plumbago, graphite, and graphite ores

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas during the period of the World War great strides were made in the development of graphite and graphite ores, and it appearing that the following features of the graphite industry commended it to tariff consideration, to wit:

1. Importance of the industry from the standpoint of military preparedness;

2. Desirability of the domestic supplies to insure commercial self-sufficiency;

3. Abundant natural resources of ore reserves:

4. Possibilities of developing larger supplies of high-grade ores;

5. Definite progress made by virtue of moderate tariff protection during the past six years;

6. Assurance that adequate tariff would enable substantial proportion and perhaps all of domestic requirements to be obtained from domestic mines; and

Whereas it appears that increased tariff protection is necessary to protect and further the development of mineral lands producing graphite and graphite ores; and it further appearing that during the past few years under tariff protection many processes have been discovered and developed to a commercial stage for the treating, refining, and preparation of said ores; and

Whereas large sums of capital are necessary to the development of the graphite industry in general and further tariff protection appearing absolutely essential and vital to the further development of said industry; and with adequate protection definitely assured the necessary money appears available; and

Whereas it appearing that the graphite industry needs tariff protection in order to survive, and it can not develop untouched resources unless such protection is substantial; it appearing from submitted facts that Ceylon plumbago and Madascar flake graphite imports do and will jeopardize and possibly destroy American production of graphite; and further that the present tariff rate upon such minerals is wholly inadequate to afford proper protection and encourage future development and research: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, That we do hereby petition the Congress of the United States for the passage of necessary legislation, enacting a tariff schedule upon graphite of all kinds according to the schedule hereinafter set forth as a minimum; and that paragraph 213 of the present law now in force and effect, known as the Fordney-McCumber Act, be amended to read as follows:

"Graphite or plumbago, crude or refined; amorphous, one-half cent per pound; crystalline graphite or plumbago, lump, chip, or dust, 4 cents per pound; crystalline flake, 3 cents per pound. As used in this paragraph the term "crystalline flake" means graphite or plumbago, which occurs disseminated as a relatively thin flake throughout its containing rock, decomposed or not, and which may be or has been separated therefrom by ordinary crushing, pulverizing, screening, or mechanical concentration process, such flakes being made up of a number of parallel laminæ, which may be separated by mechanical means";

and that such schedule be and become immediately effective and operative upon enactment and approval; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to both Houses of the National Congress and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Montana, also to the Ways and Means Committee of the National Congress and to the Tariff Commission thereof, with the request that they, and each of them, exert every effort within their power to bring about the enactment of such tariff legislation.

Approved by—

J. E. ERICKSON, Governor.

FEBRUARY 19, 1929.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I present a resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas, relating to the bill (S. 4689) introduced by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] entitled "A bill to provide for the making of loans to drainage or levee districts, and for other purposes." I ask, in accordance with the custom of the Senate, that the resolution be printed in the RECORD. The measure is one of very great importance and will probably receive the consideration of the Senate at some time during the extra session. It appears probable that it will not be reached during the present session.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, and is as follows:

Senate Resolution 3

Be it resolved by the Senate of the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas (the House of Representatives concurring)—

First. That we heartily approve and indorse Senate bill No. 4689, pending in the Senate of the United States, entitled "A bill to provide for the making of loans to drainage or levee districts, and for other purposes," which would furnish the relief that is imperatively demanded by the lands located in levee and drainage districts in this State.

Second. We urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to do everything in their power to secure the speedy passage and approval of this bill.

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded at once to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

CERTIFICATE OF SECRETARY

I, E. L. Farris, secretary of the senate, General Assembly of the State of Arkansas, 1929, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of Senate Resolution 3, read and adopted January 21, 1929, and on February 11, 1929, duly signed by the governor.

Witness my hand as such secretary, this the 18th day of February, 1929.

E. L. FARRIS.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas also presented a resolution adopted by the congregation of the First Congregational Church of Gentry, Ark., suggesting that unnaturalized aliens be not enumerated in the reapportionment of congressional districts, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I desire to present to the Senate a matter of highest privilege at this time, and I hope without interruption. I think I shall be able to conclude what I have to say in a very short time, unless Senators may desire to ask questions. If there are any resolutions or reports of committees or bill to be presented without debate, I will give way now for that purpose.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. NYE, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 316) to investigate the advisability of establishing certain additional national parks and the proposed changes in, boundary revisions of, and matters relating to, other national parks, reported it without amendment, submitted a report (No. 1902) thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, which was agreed to.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12106) to erect a national monument at Cowpens Battle Ground, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1903) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8987) for the relief of John R. Butler, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1904) thereon.

Mr. BROOKHART, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4956) to remove the charge of desertion and grant an honorable discharge to Marion M. Clark, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1905) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD (for Mr. FLETCHER), from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4237) for the relief of Antoine Laporte, alias Frank Lear, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1906) thereon.

He also (for Mr. FLETCHER), from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 4825) for the relief of August R. Lundstrom, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1907) thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3737) for the relief of John T. O'Neil, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1908) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 4356) for the relief of Howard P. Cornick, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 5679) for the relief of Charles N. Neal, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1914) thereon.

Mr. BLAINE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 4215) for the relief of Frank L. Merrifield (Rept. No. 1915); and

A bill (H. R. 8598) for the relief of James J. Dower (Rept. No. 1916).

Mr. McMASTER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4907) for the relief of August Mohr, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1909) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 119) for the relief of C. C. Moore & Co., engineers, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1910) thereon.

Mr. STEIWER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5399) for the relief of George Heitkamp, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1911) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 5860) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to dispose of the marine biological station at Key West, Fla., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1913) thereon.

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 5365) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Oregon and the Haynes Slough Drainage District to construct, maintain, and operate a dam and dike to prevent the flow of tidal waters into Haynes Slough, Coos Bay, Coos County, Oreg., reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1917) thereon.

Mr. WALSH of Montana, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 368) providing more economical and improved methods for the publication and distribution of the Code of Laws of the United States and of the District of Columbia, and supplements, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1919) thereon.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 5870) to amend an act regulating the height of buildings in the District of Columbia, approved June 1, 1910, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1920) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. GREENE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that to-day that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 5129. An act authorizing Thomas E. Brooks, of Camp Walton, Fla., and his associates and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the mouth of Garniers Bayou, at a point where State Road No. 10, in the State of Florida, crosses the mouth of said Garniers Bayou, between Smack Point on the west and White Point on the east, in Okaloosa County, Fla.;

S. 5465. An act authorizing V. Calvin Trice, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Choptank River at a point at or near Cambridge, Md.; and

S. 5630. An act authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Carrollton, Ky.

OSAGE INDIAN LANDS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, I report back favorably with an amendment the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2360) to amend section 1 of the act of Congress of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1249) entitled "An act to amend section 3 of the act of Congress of June 28, 1906, entitled 'An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes.'"

The bill passed the Senate on a former occasion and went to the House and was there amended. The Senate Committee on Indian Affairs recommend that the Senate concur in the House amendment with an amendment. The House amendment is approved by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, did the Senator state that the House approved the Senate amendment?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The bill went to the House and they sent it back with a 10-page amendment relating almost entirely to administrative matters. The Senate Committee on Indian Affairs have considered and approved the House amendment with an amendment. The Bureau of Indian Affairs and all concerned now agree to those amendments as perfected. It affects the Osage Indians and is an administrative matter. It gives the Secretary a little more latitude in the matter of making certain leases.

Mr. SMOOT. It has to go back to the House, of course?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Oh, yes. I request that the amendment of the House be read; and then that the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs to the amendment of the House be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of the House, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That section 1 of the act of Congress of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1249), relating to the Osage Indians of Oklahoma, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'That all that part of the act of June 28, 1906 (34 Stat. L. 539), entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes," which reserves to the Osage Tribe the oil, gas, coal, or other minerals, covered by the lands for the selection and division of which provision is made in that act is hereby amended so that the oil, gas, coal, or other minerals, covered by said lands are reserved to the Osage Tribe, until the 8th day of April, 1958, unless otherwise provided by Act of Congress, and all royalties and bonuses arising therefrom shall belong to the Osage Tribe of Indians, and shall be disbursed to members of the Osage Tribe or their heirs or assigns as now provided by law, after reserving such amounts as are now or may hereafter be authorized by Congress for specific purposes.

"'The lands, moneys, and other properties now or hereafter held in trust or under the supervision of the United States for the Osage Tribe of Indians, the members thereof, or their heirs and assigns shall continue subject to such trust and supervision until January 1, 1959, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress.

"'The Secretary of the Interior and the Osage tribal council are hereby authorized and directed to offer for lease for oil, gas, and other mining purposes any unleased portion of said land in such quantities and at such times as may be deemed for the best interest of the Osage Tribe of Indians: Provided, That not less than 25,000 acres shall be offered for lease for oil and gas mining purposes during any one year: Provided further, That as to all lands hereafter leased, the regulations governing same and the leases issued thereon shall contain appropriate provisions for the conservation of the natural gas for its economic use, to the end that the highest percentage of ultimate recovery of both oil and gas may be secured: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as affecting any valid existing lease for oil or gas or other minerals, but all such leases shall continue as long as gas, oil, or other minerals are found in paying quantities.

"'Homestead allotments shall remain exempt from taxation while the title remains in the original allottee of one-half or more of Osage Indian blood and in his unallotted heirs or devisees of one-half or more of Osage Indian blood until January 1, 1959: Provided, That the tax-exempt land of any such Indian allottee, heir, or devisee shall not at any time exceed 160 acres.'

"SEC. 2. That section 2 of the act of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1249), entitled 'An act to amend section 3 of the act of Congress of June 28, 1906, entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'The bona fide owner or lessee of the surface of the land shall be compensated, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior in connection with oil and gas mining operations, for any damage that shall accrue after the passage of this act as a result of the use of such land for oil or gas mining purposes, or out of damages to the land or crops thereon, occasioned thereby, but nothing herein contained shall be construed to deny to the surface owner or lessee the right to appeal to the courts, without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, in the event he is dissatisfied with the amount of damages awarded him. All claims for damages arising under this section shall be settled by arbitration under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; but either party shall have the right to appeal to the courts without consent of the Secretary of the Interior in the event he is dissatisfied with the award to or against him. The appeal herein authorized shall consist of filing an original action in any court of competent jurisdiction sitting at the county seat of Osage County, to enlarge, modify or set aside the award, and in any such action, upon demand of either party, the issues, both of law and of fact shall be tried de novo. Arbitration, or a bona fide offer in writing to arbitrate, shall constitute conditions precedent to the right to sue for such damages: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall preclude the institution of any such suit in a Federal court having jurisdiction thereof, or the removal to said court of any such suit brought in the State court, which under Federal law may be removed to the Federal court.'

"SEC. 3. That section 1 of the act of Congress of February 27, 1925 (43 Stat. L. 1008), is hereby amended by ading thereto the following:

"'The Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, upon application of any member of the Osage Tribe of Indians not having a certificate of competency, to pay all or any part of the funds held in trust for such Indian: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to interfere in any way with the removal by the Secretary of the Interior of restrictions from and against any Osage Indian at any time.'

"SEC. 4. That section 2 of the act of Congress approved February 27, 1925 (43 Stat. L. 1011), being an act to amend the act of Congress of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1249), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'Upon the death of an Osage Indian of one-half or more Indian blood who does not have a certificate of competency, his or her moneys and funds and other property accrued and accruing to his or her credit and which have heretofore been subject to supervision as provided by law may be paid to the administrator or executor of the estate of such deceased Indian or direct to his heirs or devisees, or may be retained by the Secretary of the Interior in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, under regulations to be promulgated by him: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall pay to administrators and executors of the estates of such deceased Osage Indians a sufficient amount of money out of such estates to pay all lawful indebtedness and costs and expenses of administration when approved by him; and, out of the shares belonging to heirs or devisees, above referred to, he shall pay the costs and expenses of such heirs or devisees, including attorney fees, when approved by him, in the determination of heirs or contest of wills. Upon the death of any Osage Indian of less than one-half of Osage Indian blood or upon the death of an Osage Indian who has a certificate of competency, his moneys and funds and other property accrued and accruing to his credit shall be paid and delivered to the administrator or executor of his estate to be administered upon according to the laws of the State of Oklahoma: Provided, That upon the settlement of such estate any funds or property subject to the control or supervision of the Secretary of the Interior on the date of the approval of this act, which have been inherited by or devised to any adult or minor heir or devisee of one-half or more Osage Indian blood who does not have a certificate of competency, and which have been paid or delivered by the Secretary of the Interior to the administrator or executor shall be paid or delivered by such administrator or executor to the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of such Indian and shall be subject to the supervision of the Secretary as provided by law.'

"SEC. 5. The restrictions concerning lands and funds of allotted Osage Indians, as provided in this act and all prior acts now in force, shall apply to unallotted Osage Indians born since July 1, 1907, or after the passage of this act, and to their heirs of Osage Indian blood: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized in his discretion to grant a certificate of competency to any unallotted Osage Indian when in the judgment of the said Secretary such member is fully competent and capable of transacting his or her own affairs.

"SEC. 6. That section 9 of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1906 (34 Stat. L. 539), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'That there shall be a quadrennial election of officers of the Osage Tribe as follows: A principal chief, an assistant principal chief, and eight members of the Osage tribal council, to succeed the officers elected in the year 1928, said officers to be elected at a general election to be held in the town of Pawhuska, Okla., on the first Monday in June, 1930, and on the first Monday in June each four years thereafter, in the manner to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and said officers shall be elected for a period of four years commencing on the 1st day of July following said elections, and in case of vacancy in the office of principal chief or other such officer by death, resignation, or otherwise, the vacancies of the Osage tribal council shall be filled in a manner to be prescribed by the Osage tribal council, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to remove from the council any member or members thereof for good cause, to be by him determined, after the party involved has had due notice and opportunity to appear and defend himself, and said tribal government so constituted shall continue in full force and effect to January 1, 1959.'"

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Indian Affairs reports to amend the amendment of the House of Representatives by inserting in lieu of the House amendment the following:

That section 1 of the act of Congress of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1249), relating to the Osage Indians of Oklahoma, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That all that part of the act of June 28, 1906 (34 Stat. L. 539), entitled 'An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes,' which reserves to the Osage Tribe the oil, gas, coal, or other minerals, covered by the lands for the selection and division of which provision is made in that act is hereby amended so that the oil, gas, coal, or other minerals, covered by said lands are reserved to the Osage Tribe, until the 8th day of April, 1958, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress, and all royalties and bonuses arising therefrom shall belong to the Osage Tribe of Indians, and shall be disbursed to members of the Osage Tribe or their heirs or assigns as now provided by law, after reserving such amounts as are now or may hereafter be authorized by Congress for specific purposes.

"The lands, moneys, and other properties now or hereafter held in trust or under the supervision of the United States for the Osage Tribe of Indians, the members thereof, or their heirs and assigns, shall continue subject to such trust and supervision until January 1, 1959, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress.

"The Secretary of the Interior and the Osage tribal council are hereby authorized and directed to offer for lease for oil, gas, and other mining purposes any unleased portion of said land in such quantities and at such times as may be deemed for the best interest of the Osage Tribe of Indians: Provided, That not less than 25,000 acres shall be offered for lease for oil and gas mining purposes during any one year: Provided further, That as to all lands hereafter leased, the regulations governing same and the leases issued thereon shall contain appropriate provisions for the conservation of the natural gas for its economic use, to the end that the highest percentage of ultimate recovery of both oil and gas may be secured: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as affecting any valid existing lease for oil or gas or other minerals, but all such leases shall continue as long as gas, oil, or other minerals are found in paying quantities.

"Homestead allotments of Osage Indians not having a certificate of competency shall remain exempt from taxation while the title remains in the original allottee of one-half or more of Osage Indian blood and in his unallotted heirs or devisees of one-half or more of Osage Indian blood until January 1, 1959: Provided That the tax-exempt land of any such Indian allottee, heir, or devisee shall not at any time exceed 160 acres."

SEC. 2. That section 2 of the act of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1249), entitled "An act to amend section 3 of the act of Congress of June 28, 1906, entitled 'An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes,'" be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"The bona fide owner or lessee of the surface of the land shall be compensated, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior in connection with oil and gas mining operations, for any damage that shall accrue after the passage of this act as a result of the use of such land for oil or gas mining purposes, or out of damages to the land or crops thereon, occasioned thereby, but nothing herein contained shall be construed to deny to the surface owner or lessee the right to appeal to the courts, without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, in the event he is dissatisfied with the amount of damages awarded him. All claims for damages arising under this section shall be settled by arbitration under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; but either party shall have the right to appeal to the courts without consent of the Secretary of the Interior in the event he is dissatisfied with the award to or against him. The appeal herein authorized shall consist of filing an original action in any court of competent jurisdiction sitting at the county seat of Osage County, to enlarge, modify, or set aside the award, and in any such action, upon demand of either party, the issues, both of law and of fact shall be tried de novo before a jury upon the request of either party. Arbitration, or a bone fide offer in writing to arbitrate, shall constitute conditions precedent to the right to sue for such damages: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall preclude the institution of any such suit in a Federal court having jurisdiction thereof, or the removal to said court of any such suit brought in the State court, which under Federal law may be removed to the Federal court: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to limit the time for any action to be filed to less than 90 days."

SEC. 3. That section 1 of the act of Congress of February 27, 1925 (43 Stat. L. 1008), is hereby amended by adding thereto the following:

"The Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, upon application of any member of the Osage Tribe of Indians not having a certificate of competency, to pay all or any part of the funds held in trust for such Indian: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall, within one year after this act is approved, pay to each enrolled Indian of less than half Osage blood, one-fifth part of his or her proportionate share of accumulated funds. And such Secretary shall, on or before the expiration of 10 years from the date of the approval of this act, advance and pay over to such Osage Indian of less than one-half Osage Indian blood all of the balance appearing to his credit of accumulated funds, and shall issue to such Indian a certificate of competency: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to interfere in any way with the removal by the Secretary of the Interior of restrictions from and against any Osage Indian at any time."

SEC. 4. That section 2 of the act of Congress approved February 27, 1925 (43 Stat. L. 1011), being act to amend the act of Congress of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1249), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Upon the death of an Osage Indian of one-half or more Indian blood who does not have a certificate of competency, his or her moneys and funds and other property accrued and accruing to his or her credit and which have heretofore been subject to supervision as provided by law may be paid to the administrator or executor of the estate of such deceased Indian or direct to his heirs or devisees, or may be retained by the Secretary of the Interior in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, under regulations to be promulgated by him: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall pay to administrators and executors of the estates of such deceased Osage Indians a sufficient amount of money out of such estate to pay all lawful indebtedness and costs and expenses of administration when approved by him; and, out of the shares belonging to heirs or devisees, above referred to, he shall pay the costs and expenses of such heirs or devisees, including attorney fees, when approved by him, in the determination of heirs or contest of wills. Upon the death of any Osage Indian of less than one-half of Osage Indian blood or upon the death of an Osage Indian who has a certificate of competency, his moneys and funds and other property accrued and accruing to his credit shall be paid and delivered to the administrator or executor of his estate to be administered upon according to the laws of the State of Oklahoma: Provided, That upon the settlement of such estate any funds or property subject to the control or supervision of the Secretary of the Interior on the date of the approval of this act, which have been inherited by or devised to any adult or minor heir or devisee of one-half or more Osage Indian blood who does not have a certificate of competency, and which have been paid or delivered by the Secretary of the Interior to the administrator or executor shall be paid or delivered by such administrator or executor to the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of such Indian and shall be subject to the supervision of the Secretary as provided by law."

SEC. 5. The restrictions concerning lands and funds of allotted Osage Indians, as provided in this act and all prior acts now in force, shall apply to unallotted Osage Indians born since July 1, 1907, or after the passage of this act, and to their heirs of Osage Indian blood, except that the provisions of section 6 of the act of Congress approved February 27, 1925, with reference to the validity of contracts for debt, shall not apply to any allotted or unallotted Osage Indian of less than one-half degree Indian blood: Provided, That the Osage lands and funds and any other property which has heretofore or which may hereafter be held in trust or under supervision of the United States for such Osage Indians of less than one-half degree Indian blood not having a certificate of competency shall not be subject to forced sale to satisfy any debt or obligation contracted or incurred prior to the issuance of a certificate of competency: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized in his discretion to grant a certificate of competency to any unallotted Osage Indian when in the judgment of the said Secretary such member is fully competent and capable of transacting his or her own affairs.

SEC. 6. All just existing obligations of restricted Osage Indians outstanding January 1, 1929, when approved by the superintendent of the Osage Agency, shall be paid out of the money of such Indian appearing to his credit, in addition to his quarterly allowance: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to interfere in any way with the granting of a certificate of competency by the Secretary of the Interior, as provided for by existing law, at any time after the payment of all of his or her just debts (as herein provided) which have been presented to and approved by the superintendent of the Osage Indian Agency.

SEC. 7. That section 9 of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1906 (34 Stat. L. 539), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That there shall be a quadrennial election of officers of the Osage Tribe as follows: A principal chief, an assistant principal chief, and eight members of the Osage tribal council, to succeed the officers elected in the year 1928, said officers to be elected at a general election to be held in the town of Pawhuska, Okla., on the first Monday in June, 1930, and on the first Monday in June each four years thereafter, in the manner to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and said officers shall be elected for a period of four years commencing on the 1st day of July following said elections, and in case of vacancy in the office of principal chief or other such officer by death, resignation, or otherwise, the vacancies of the Osage tribal council shall be filled in a manner to be prescribed by the Osage tribal council, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to remove from the council any member or members thereof for good cause, to be by him determined, after the party involved has had due notice and opportunity to appear and defend himself, and said tribal government so constituted shall continue in full force and effect to January 1, 1959."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill relating to the tribal and individual affairs of the Osage Indians of Oklahoma."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee to the House amendment.

The amendment to the House amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred, as follows:

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 5881) authorizing H. L. Cloud, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Canadian River suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Francis, Okla.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. METCALF:

A bill (S. 5882) granting a pension to Eliza Swan (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 5883) granting an increase of pension to Sarah M. Lewis (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 5884) granting an increase of pension to Hannah M. Mather (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5885) granting an increase of pension to Flora P. W. Hunt (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GOFF:

A bill (S. 5886) providing for the advancement on the retired list of the Army of Col. D. B. Devore (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. E. JONES

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 5887) for the relief of H. E. Jones; to the Committee on Claims.

Subsequently Mr. BLACK, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 5887) for the relief of H. E. Jones, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1922) thereon.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 17223, the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

On page —, line —, insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to use not to exceed the sum of $2,000 from the tribal funds of the Wichita and Affiliated Bands of Indians of Oklahoma in the Treasury of the United States, upon proper vouchers to be approved by him, for costs and expenses already incurred and those to be incurred by their duly authorized attorneys in the prosecution of the claims of said Indians now pending in the Court of Claims, Docket No. E–542, including expenses of not exceeding two delegates from said bands of Indians, to be designated by the business committee representing all said bands, who may be called to Washington from time to time with the permission of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on business connected with said claims, said $2,000 to remain available until expended."

Mr. EDGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 17223, the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

On page —, line —, insert the following:

"For services performed in connection with the work in the Senate Library and Document Room, as follows: To James Payne, $210; to Richard Blount, $210; in all, $420."

Mr. HARRIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 17223, the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

On page 64, strike out lines 3 to 11, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For increasing the enforcement force, $24,000,000, or such part thereof as the President may deem useful, to be allocated by the President, as he may see fit, to the departments or bureaus charged with the enforcement of the national prohibition act, and to remain available until June 30, 1930."

Mr. BROOKHART submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 17223, the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

Strike out, beginning on page 150, line 11, and ending on page 152, line 14, and insert the following:

"Provided, That section 13 of the classification act of 1923 as amended by the act of May 28, 1928, is hereby amended by providing, effective on the 1st day of the month succeeding the enactment of this act, one additional salary rate as a maximum rate, which will add one increment or step-up in each of the professional and scientific grades from 1 to 5, inclusive; all grades of subprofessional service; clerical, administrative, and fiscal services, from 1 to 12, inclusive; and the custodial service, grades 2 and 4 to 10, inclusive: Provided further, That in the clerical-mechanical service, the rate of compensation for classes of positions in grade 1 shall be 55 to 60 cents an hour; grade 2, 65 to 70 cents an hour; and grade 3, 75 to 80 cents an hour: Provided further, That the heads of the executive departments and independent establishments pursuant to authority to adjust the pay of certain employees in the departmental and field service shall, effective the 1st day of the month succeeding the passage of this act, readjust the compensation of the grades of the departmental services herein named and the corresponding field service positions, so that employees whose positions were affected by the act of May 28, 1928, and who did not receive an increase in salary the equivalent of two steps, or salary rates in their respective grades shall be given such additional step or steps or salary rate or rates within the grade as may be necessary to equal such increase: And provided further, That there is hereby appropriated out of the Treasury from any moneys not otherwise appropriated sufficient sums to readjust the salaries as herein directed during the remainder of the fiscal year 1929 and during the fiscal year 1930."

PROPOSED CONFERENCE FOR LIMITATION OF ARMIES

Mr. TYDINGS submitted a resolution (S. Res. 338), which was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas 62 nations, through their representatives, are now signatory or have expressed their willingness to adhere to a treaty outlawing war as an instrument of national policy, wherein said nations have agreed to settle all disputes, no matter how they may arise, by pacific means; and

Whereas many of the governments of the world, though actually at peace, are now maintaining standing armies to the extent of one soldier for every 250 men, women, and children, or less, with active reserves and supplementary troops in even higher proportion; and

Whereas the continuance of these large military establishments on land is unnecessary in times of peace, is in contradiction of the spirit of said treaty, and creates distrust and fear in the people of one nation for those of another nation, and seriously calls into question the integrity of the treaty itself; and

Whereas in order to achieve the highest confidence in said treaty and to accomplish its purposes the causes for fear and distrust must first be eliminated; and

Whereas curtailment of armies, reserves, and supplementary troops can not be hoped for unless all the nations maintaining them effect such curtailment simultaneously: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested to send an invitation to every nation which has, in whole or in part, been signatory to the treaty outlawing war, ratified by the Senate of the United States on January 15, 1929, requesting said nations to send duly authorized delegates to an international conference for the purpose of agreeing by treaty to a limitation of size, in accordance with the population, by said nations attending said conference, of standing armies, active reserves, and supplementary troops.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE BANKING AND CURRENCY COMMITTEE

Mr. NORBECK submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 340), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized during the Seventy-first Congress to send for persons, books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expensse thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

ST. PETERSBURG HARBOR, FLA. (S. DOC. NO. 229)

Mr. JONES submitted a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, submitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate Committee on Commerce, a report from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, relative to a review of reports heretofore submitted on St. Petersburg Harbor, Fla., with a view to determining whether any modification should be made in any existing project, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed with an illustration.

ADMINISTRATION OF EMERGENCY OFFICERS' RETIREMENT ACT

Mr. TYSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document the decisions of the Attorney General of the United States and of the Comptroller General relating to the administration of the emergency officers' retirement act. I have already had inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 21, 1929, two opinions of the Attorney General, and in the RECORD of February 7, commencing at page 3036. Senators will find opinions of the Comptroller General. Since that date, on February 11, further opinions of the Comptroller General affecting the administration of the law have been rendered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRACTICE OF THE HEALING ART IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. COPELAND submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3936) entitled "An act to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language inserted by the Houses insert the following after the letters "tion," in line 5, page 38: "and practitioners of clystertory treatment"; and the House agree to the same.

ARTHUR CAPPER,
A. H. VANDENBERG,
ROYAL S. COPELAND,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

FREDK. N. ZIHLMAN,
FRANK L. BOWMAN,
THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

On February 23, 1929:

S. 1500. An act for the relief of James J. Welsh, Edward C. F. Webb, Francis A. Meyer, Mary S. Bennett, William McMullin, jr., Margaret McMullin, R. B. Carpenter, McCoy Yearsley, Edward Yearsley, George H. Bennett, jr., Stewart L. Beck, William P. McConnell, Elizabeth J. Morrow, William B. Jester, Josephine A. Haggan, James H. S. Gam, Herbert Nicoll, Shallcross Bros., E. C. Buckson, Wilbert Rawley, R. Rickards, Jr., Dredging Co.

On February 25, 1929:

S. 1618. An act for the relief of Margaret W. Pearson and John R. Pearson, her husband;

S. 3848. An act creating the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission and defining its purposes and powers;

S. 5179. An act to improve the efficiency of the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 182. Joint resolution for the relief of farmers in the storm and flood stricken areas of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, and Alabama.

ADDRESS OF ASSOCIATE JUSTICE HARLAN F. STONE

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the able address delivered by the Hon. Harlan F. Stone, Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court, at the semicentennial meeting of the American Bar Association at Seattle in July, 1928.

Mr. Justice Stone's address was entitled "Fifty Years' Work of the United States Supreme Court." Among other subjects, the able jurist deals with the effect of certain devices proposed to limit power of the court to declare statutes unconstitutional, how the court does its work, the value of dissenting opinions; in a word, the address is an excellent résumé of the last 50 years of the work of the United States Supreme Court.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

FIFTY YEARS' WORK OF THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT—GREAT INDUSTRIAL AND COMMERCIAL EXPANSION FOLLOWING INITIAL STAGES OF CIVIL WAR RECONSTRUCTION HAS FURNISHED MOST OF THE GREAT QUESTIONS BEFORE THE COURT IN THE LAST 50 YEARS AND THE FACT MATERIAL OUT OF WHICH HAVE COME THE SIGNIFICANT DEVELOPMENTS IN CONSTITUTIONAL AND PRIVATE LAW—FAR-REACHING DECISIONS UNDER COMMERCE CLAUSE AND APPLYING PROVISIONS OF FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT—EFFECT OF CERTAIN DEVICES PROPOSED TO LIMIT POWER OF COURT TO DECLARE STATUTES UNCONSTITUTIONAL—HOW THE COURT DOES ITS WORK, ETC.

By Hon. Harlan F. Stone, Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court

When, in an amiable and unguarded moment, I accepted Mr. Strawn's invitation to speak here this evening, I fear I did not appreciate how difficult it is for a judge to make an address not wholly devoid of human interest, and at the same time avoid making it an arsenal from which counsel may, to his utter confusion and undoing, draw ammunition for future conflicts at the bar.

In younger and more innocent days, with no premonitions of the future, I took the time from busy days at the bar to write occasional articles in the law journals on matters of scientific and technical interest, only to experience, in a repentant old age, the unhappy fate of hearing them on occasion cited to me in court in support of both sides of the same question. However much the judge may become accustomed and reconciled to such startling agility of counsel, it requires a larger judicial experience than mine to prepare one to face with equanimity the varying implications which may be drawn by diligent counsel from his own innocent remarks. So if what I am about to say should prove to be more dull and uninteresting than even judicial pronouncements are wont to be, I should like to persuade myself that you would attribute it to a newly developed instinct of self-preservation, cautiously applied with an eye to the future.

In the realm of law it is not the old and settled but the new and unsettled questions which stir the interest and invite discussion; but from all such allurements I turn aside to examine in retrospect some phases of the work of the great court of which I chance to be the youngest and least experienced member.

And it is altogether appropriate that on the conclusion of the first 50 years of the association's existence we should recall some of the more significant developments in the history of the court during the same period. It is worthy of note that the last and in many respects the most striking phase of its history coincides with the life of this association. The first phase embraces that early period when it became established as a court, and by recourse to those methods and processes with which lawyers have been familiar for centuries for the first time in history made all the agencies of a government subject to the supremacy of a constitution. That period ended with the death of the great Chief Justice in 1835.

During the next 40 years the drama of the slavery struggle, the Civil War, and reconstruction occupied the stage of American history. Out of the varying phases of that struggle came the great questions with which the court in that period was called on to deal. Of lesser public interest, but still of vital importance to the progress of the law and to the future of the expanding Nation, were the development by the court during those years of the beginnings of public and private law affecting business corporations and the first steps toward the nationalistic interpretation of the commerce clause of the Constitution.

In 1878, just 50 years ago, a change in the character of the questions to which the court was addressing itself was apparent. Following the initial stages of Civil War reconstruction came the era of railway building, the rise of the business corporation as an instrumentality of business and commerce, and the beginning of the great industrial and commercial expansion of the Nation. This expansion, which was well under way in the early eighties, has continued with accelerated speed and broadening scope down to the present day. In it have originated most of the great questions which have engaged the attention of the court during the last 50 years, and it has furnished the fact material out of which have come the significant developments both of the constitutional and the private law applied by the court during the last phase of its history.

The changing personnel of the court during this, as in earlier periods, gives a note of human interest to an institution which from the beginning has seemed singularly impersonal. Fifty years ago this year the court was presided over by Chief Justice Waite, whom President Grant had appointed to that office two years before. Among the eight Associate Justices were Justice Bradley, Field, Harlan, and Miller, who now, after half a century, still stand out among the great figures of the court. Since then three Chief Justices and twenty-nine Associate Justices have been appointed. Chief Justice Fuller was appointed by President Cleveland in 1888, Chief Justice White by President Taft in 1910, and Ex-President Taft himself became Chief Justice in 1921. The terms of seven Chief Justices, the last, our present Chief Justice, still actively carrying on the duties of his office, have thus spanned the 127 years since the appointment of Chief Justice Marshall, and during the entire history of the court 10 chief justices and 65 associates have sat upon its bench. In 1897, Mr. Justice Field, then 83 years of age, retired from the bench, after a service of 34 years, exceeding by a few months that of Chief Justice Marshall, and exceeding that of Chief Justice Taney, whose death in 1864, in his eighty-eighth year, had closed a service of 28 years. And to-day Mr. Justice Holmes, in his eighty-eighth year, with youthful spirit unabated, is still actively carrying on his work as a Justice of the court, after 26 years of service, and a total judicial service in the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, of which he was formerly chief justice, of more than 46 years.

The last 50 years of the work of the court is represented by the series of official reports extending from the ninety-seventh volume to the two hundred and seventy-sixth volume, now in the press, making 179 volumes in all, a monument to the scholarship, skill, and patient industry of the judges. In these volumes will be found opinions of far-reaching importance which have profoundly influenced the course of development of the American system of constitutional government, and in them we discern those trends of the law which are of especial interest and importance in any attempt to review the progress of the work of the court during the last half century.

Of outstanding importance are the decisions of the court under the commerce clause and the great judgments giving definition and application to the provisions of the fourteenth amendment. Of relatively less moment, but still of the highest importance in any consideration of the development of the law in the last half century, are cases in numerous other widely varying fields of law which during that period have been extended and intensively tilled by the court.

To them, with the time at my command, only brief reference can be made. By the decision two years ago in Meyers v. United States (272 U. S. 52), after more than 137 years of public debate both in and out of Congress, it was settled that the executive power vested in the President by the Constitution included the power to remove an inferior officer appointed by him, and was not subject to limitation by Congress. Of lesser significance, because of the final outcome, but nevertheless attracting wide attention at the time, was the battle over the constitutionality of the Federal income tax, finally settled by the adoption of the sixteenth amendment.

During the last 30 years we have witnessed the striking extension of Federal police power, effected not directly by court actoin but by acts of Congress in the exercise of powers incidental to the constitutional power to tax, to regulate commerce, to make treaties, and finally the power to prohibit trafficking in intoxicating liquors conferred by the eighteenth amendment. The progressive occupation and expansion of this field have enlarged enormously the Federal power and increased correspondingly the number and variety of questions brought to the court for solution. Of great juristic interest also, although not necessarily involving constitutional questions, were the legal battles under the Sherman Act, with their far-reaching consequences to business and industry, the increasing resort to the original jurisdiction of the court in suits between States, and the extension of the equity jurisdiction of the Federal courts for the appointment of receivers for insolvent corporations.

Turning points in the application of the Sherman Act were the Trans-Missouri Freight Association case (166 U. S. 290), the Northern Securities case (193 U. S. 197), the Standard Oil and Tobacco cases (221 U. S. 1 and 106), in which the court declared that only unreasonable restraints were prohibited; United States v. Trenton Potteries Co. (273 U. S. 392), in which the court held specifically what had been implied in earlier decisions, that agreements fixing the prices of commodities sold in interstate commerce are in themselves unreasonable and illegal restraints, regardless of the reasonableness of the price agreed upon. In the Maple Flooring and Cement Manufacturers' Association cases (268 U. S. 563 and 588) it was held that the mere gathering and dissemination by trade associations of information as to the economic status of a trade or business, even though by the operation of economic laws they might indirectly affect prices, were not a violation of the statute when there was no agreement, express or implied, to fix prices or otherwise restrain commerce. The court entered a new field in the enforcement of the act in the Duplex Printing Co. case (254 U. S. 443) and the Bedford Stone case (274 U. S. 37), in which the rule was stated broadly that strikes by labor unions in one State against the use of material prepared by nonunion labor in another were restraints of interstate commerce in such materials and violations of the act.

In the exercise of original jurisdiction in suits between States, in boundary disputes, in suits involving the disposition of public waters, in suits concerning nuisances maintained in one State to the detriment of citizens of another, the court has found it necessary to build up its own system of common law, defining these rights which one State may assert against another.

The development of the doctrine of equity receiverships in cases where there is diversity of citizenship has added an important field to the jurisdiction of the Federal courts and afforded to suitors a more complete remedy than it is possible for State courts to give. For only in the Federal courts is it possible to secure a uniform administration of the assets of insolvent corporations where their property is located in different States, and by making bills for foreclosure ancillary to the bill to appoint equity receivers in insolvency proceedings it has become possible to secure a uniform foreclosure of mortgages of railroad systems and other corporate properties extending into many States.

But it is the decisions of the court under the commerce clause and the fourteenth amendment to which we must recur as representing the most significant developments in the constitutional field. Before 1860 the court had rendered only 20 decisions under the commerce clause, dealing principally with navigation, immigration, slavery, and the liquor traffic. After the Civil War, with the era of railroad building and business depression and the multiplication of business corporations carrying on their business across State lines, there arose the inevitable conflict of interest between local regulation and taxation and the power to regulate reserved to the Federal Government by the commerce clause. By 1870 there had been in all only 30 decisions of the court under this clause, but keeping pace with the rising tide of business enterprise, the decisions numbered 77 by 1880 and 148 by 1890. During these periods, for the first time, cases affecting railroads, telegraph lines, sales of goods across State lines, and taxation affecting commerce predominated.

Great as is the practical wisdom exhibited in all the provisions of the Constitution, and important as were the character and influence of those who secured its adoption, it will, I believe, be the judgment of history that the commerce clause and the wise interpretation of it, perhaps more than any other contributing element, have united to bind the several States into a nation.

Beginning soon after the appointment of Chief Justice Waite and continuing down to the present time there has come from the court the series of decisions defining the powers of the national Government over commerce. They present an impressive record of the application of constitutional principles to the growing needs and interests of the expanding nation. Here, as elsewhere in the application of the Constitution, the problem has been to maintain the national interest and at the same time bring it into an effective harmony with local interests and the principles of local government.

On the whole, essentially local interests have been preserved both in the field of regulation and in that of taxation, but whatever has vitally concerned the free flow of the very lifeblood of the Nation in its commerce has been dealt with on broadly nationalistic lines and step by step brought completely within the power of the Federal Government. This development of the Constitution, culminated perhaps in Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway v. Illinois (118 U. S. 537), holding a State without power to regulate rates within its borders where the commerce was interstate, and in the Minnesota rate case (230 U. S. 352), upholding the Federal power to fix intrastate rates for interstate carriers. Again it was carried to its logical conclusion where the path of the fifth amendment, paralleling the fourteenth, converged with that of the commerce clause when the court held in Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson (154 U. S. 447) that these clauses permit regulation of the rates of interstate carriers by the Interstate Commerce Commission; and in the Second Employers' Liability cases (223 U. S. 1), holding that Congress has power to enact employers' liability acts applicable to carriers in interstate commerce and varying the common-law rules of employers' liability.

With the advent of the automobile, for the first time since the court was organized, there has developed a nation-wide volume of interstate carriage not confined to waterways or to the rails or rights of way of the carriers, but carried on over public highways which are under State or municipal control. This new type of commerce has thus presented to the court for determination an entirely new class of questions, involving the extent of the power of a State in the regulation of its own highways and in taxation for their upkeep to affect this new type of interstate traffic. The improvement of the airplane and growth of interstate carriage by that vehicle of commerce and the use of the radio as an instrumentality of commerce will likewise present questions differing in many respects from those which have heretofore engaged the attention of the court.

In these fields, as in others where inferstate commerce is concerned, it seems clear that the function of the court must continue to be, as in the past, to prevent discrimination and the erection of barriers against interstate commerce, but upon careful scrutiny of every relevant fact and circumstance, to save to the States the regulation and control of all interests peculiarly local which do not infringe the national interest in maintaining untrammeled the freedom of commerce across State lines.

Another group of cases having an important bearing on the business and commercial expansion of the Nation has arisen under the fourteenth amendment, with respect to the power of the several States over foreign corporations. In Paul v. Virginia (8 Wall. 168) the court, speaking by Mr. Justice Field, followed the pronouncement of Chief Justice Taney in Bank of Augusta v. Earle (13 Pet. 519), that corporations are not citizens within the meaning of section 2, Article IV, of the Constitution, which guarantees to the citizens of each State "the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States." From these decisions it followed that a State might exclude a foreign corporation not engaged in interstate commerce from carrying on business within its territory. In Doyle v. Continental Insurance Co. (94 U. S. 535) it was held that the power to exclude included the power to impose onerous conditions upon the privilege of transacting business within the State. It seemed that under the application of this doctrine all the protection of the fourteenth amendment might be withdrawn from a foreign corporation seeking access to a State and not engaged in interstate commerce. But later cases have followed the line of argument advanced in the dissent of Mr. Justice Bradley in Doyle v. Continental Insurance Co., by holding that the power to exclude does not embrace the power to impose unconstitutional conditions upon the admission of a corporation to do business within a State. These decisions have given a different trend to the rule announced in Doyle v. Continental Insurance Co., which it was thought might seriously curtail commerce among the States.

But the great battle ground of the Constitution during the last half century has been the fourteenth amendment. Because of the nature of the rights and immunities secured by it and the character of the social and economic development of the Nation, this amendment, so far as can now be discerned, will continue to be the principal field of constitutional controversy for many years to come. The amendment was adopted in 1866. The first of the decisions handed down under it was that in the Slaughterhouse cases (16 Wall. 36). Although decided something more than 50 years ago, they may appropriately be considered here, because they are more identified with the development of constitutional law in the last than in the earlier period. They were the first of the long series of cases brought to the court under the new amendment, and marked the turn of the tide which, with the strong nationalistic spirit engendered by the Civil War, had set in against the emphasis of State rights.

The opinion of the court declared that, notwithstanding its broad language, the amendment had not transferred the security and protection of the civil rights of citizens of the States from the States to the special care of the Federal Government, but had merely created in addition to State citizenship a new citizenship of the United States. This new citizenship it had clothed with new privileges and immunities of limited character peculiar to it, and these alone were protected by that clause of the amendment which prohibited a State from abridging the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States.

In view of the later judicial history of the amendment it is a noteworthy fact that in upholding, as the court did in that case, a statute of Louisiana granting exclusive monopolistic powers for the maintenance of stockyards and slaughterhouses, it made only passing reference to the due process and equal protection clauses of the amendment which, under later decisions, have become the chief guaranties of civil liberty of the individual as against State action.

It was within the 50-year period with which we are immediately concerned that the decisions of the court have given to the fourteenth amendment its real character as a guaranty against the encroachments of the States upon the liberty of the individual. Due process was held to mean not merely due legal procedure which, in the historic words of Webster in the Dartmouth College case, "hears before it condemns, proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial." But in Davidson v. New Orleans (96 U. S. 97), Mr. Justice Miller, speaking for the court, pointed out that the protection of the clause extended beyond injustices which might be inflicted by an arbitrary procedure to all those which might be imposed by any arbitrary exercise of the power of a State, whatever the form or procedure adopted. Continuing the famous passage from Webster's argument in the Dartmouth College case, which anticipated by a half century the comprehensive interpretation of the due-process clause, "The meaning is that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities under the protection of the general duties which govern society. Everything which may pass under the form of an enactment is not, therefore, to be considered the law of the land. If this were so, acts of attainder, bills of pains and penalties, acts of confiscation, acts reversing judgments, and acts directly transferring one man's estate to another, legislative judgments, decrees, and forfeitures, in all possible forms, would be the law of the land."

It was in Davidson v. New Orleans also that Mr. Justice Miller pointed out the future course of judicial definition and application of the phrase "due process of law." In the absence of a more precise definition in the Constitution itself there was wisdom, he said, "in the ascertaining of the intent and application of such an important phrase of the Federal Constitution, by the gradual process of judicial inclusion and exclusion, as the cases presented for decision shall require, with the reasoning on which such decisions may be founded." Noteworthy monuments marking the boundary drawn by this process of exclusion and inclusion, as it has been plotted by the court, are the opinions of Mr. Justice Matthews and Mr. Justice Moody in Hurtado v. California (110 U. S. 516), and in Twining v. New Jersey (211 U. S. 78), holding that due process was not limited to the due process of the settled usage of the past, but might include new methods of procedure unknown to the common law, provided only that they be in harmony with the accepted underlying principles of such procedure according to the traditions of the common law; that is, that they should be orderly and provide for reasonable notice and opportunity to be heard.

It was thus determined that the constitutional requirement of due process did not bind us rigidly to any rule of the past and that the limitations of the amendment were consistent with the enlightened progress of the law.

A notable step was taken under the fourteenth amendment in Munn v. Illinois (94 U. S. 113), in upholding the legislative power to regulate rates of a business said to be "affected with a public use," and resulted finally in the confirmation of the now firmly established legislative power to regulate the rates of all public utilities. An important limitation on the doctrine was that announced in Smyth v. Ames (169 U. S. 466), that the fourteenth amendment forbids a rate which is confiscatory. The court has thus been called on to solve one of the most difficult and perplexing of economic questions, What is the minimum limit of the rate of return to which the capital invested in a public utility may be restricted before the point of confiscation is reached, and how shall that capital investment be ascertained?

In that and later cases it was pointed out that the value of invested capital could not be computed on the basis of unregulated earnings. To say what the investment value is and to separate it from considerations of an unregulated earning capacity and from the elements of business advantage and opportunity conferred upon it by the franchise of the utility itself constitute the great problem of constitutional rate making, the correct solution of which is of incalculable importance to the future economic development of the Nation.

The interests of the individual guaranteed by the fourteenth amendment are subject, within certain limitations, incapable of a complete or comprehensive definition, to the power of the State government to protect the interests of its society as a whole. For want of a better generalization, we call this power to protect the social or community interest the police power. It is the course of marking out step by step the line which separates the boundary of the immunity of the individual from this controlling interest of the State by the process of inclusion and exclusion which has given rise to the most perplexing questions and to wide differences of opinion. These questions are none the less perplexing and differences emphatic, because with the social and economic changes which take place from generation to generation that boundary line necessarily becomes a shifting one.

All those restraints on the individual which have been found necessary in order to enable modern men to get on together in civilized life or to conserve the health, morals, and stability of modern communities involve some impairment of the individual interest in liberty or property. The extent of that restraint necessarily varies in time and in space. Restraints upon those rights which in primitive and sparsely settled communities might well be regarded as arbitrary and unreasonable may be indispensable to the safety and orderly life of the modern city.

The past 50 years have wrought extensive changes in the daily life of the individual and in the character of his contacts with his fellows. From a people devoted to agriculture, living for the most part in thinly settled communities, we have developed into a great business and industrial civilization. In the course of this transformation there has been a shift of population from country to city, giving rise to a new type of social and economic problem. Mass production in industry, new methods of transportation, and transmission of intelligence have raised problems quite unknown a generation ago. Crowded traffic, congestion in cities, the necessity of restricting the use of the highways, abuses in particular classes of business, or in particular types of community which may be remedied by regulation are only examples of an infinite number of new situations which present almost daily to the court the question, Where does individual right to liberty and property end and the community interest begin?

As civilization becomes more complex and the tension of life in organized society increases, it is inevitable that such new problems should continue to arise and that with changing conditions affecting community life there should be both in point of time and in space some shifting of the line which sets off the valid exercise of the police power from the immunity of the individual. Mr. Justice Sutherland, in speaking for the court, when in Village of Euclid v. Ambler Realty Co. (272 U. S. 365) it recently upheld a city-zoning ordinance, said (p. 336):

"Building zone laws are of modern origin. They began in this country about 25 years ago. Until recent years urban life was comparatively simple, but with the great increase and concentration of population, problems have developed, and constantly are developing, which require, and will continue to require, additional restrictions in respect of the use and occupation of private lands in urban communities. Regulations, the wisdom, necessity, and validity of which, as applied to existing conditions, are so apparent that they are now uniformly sustained, a century ago, or even half a century ago, probably would have been rejected as arbitrary and oppressive. Such regulations are sustained, under the complex conditions of our day, for reasons analogous to those which justify traffic regulations, which, before the advent of automobiles and rapid-transit street railways, would have been condemned as fatally arbitrary and unreasonable. And in this there is no inconsistency, for while the meaning of constitutional guarantees never varies, the scope of their application must expand or contract to meet the new and different conditions which are constantly coming within the field of their operation. In a changing world it is impossible that it should be otherwise. But, although a degree of elasticity is thus imparted, not to the meaning but to the application of constitutional principles, statutes and ordinances, which, after giving due weight to the new conditions, are found clearly not to conform to the Constitution, of course, must fall. * * *

"A regulatory zoning ordinance, which would be clearly valid as applied to great cities, might be clearly invalid as applied to rural communities. * * * Thus the question whether the power exists to forbid the erection of a building of a particular kind or for a particular use, like the question whether a particular thing is a nuisance, is to be determined, not by an abstract consideration of the building or of the thing considered apart, but by considering it in connection with the circumstances and the locality. * * * If the validity of the legislative classification for zoning purposes be fairly debatable, the legislative judgment must be allowed to control."

It was to be expected that the application of a constitutional limitation so vaguely defined, to state action affecting all the varying situations which may arise in our present-day civilization, would give rise to strong differences of opinion, often resulting in decisions by a divided court. These differences usually result, not from any disagreement as to the nature of the formulas which have been developed by the court in the application of the fourteenth amendment, but to differences in the appreciation and appraisement of social and economic conditions and of the relation to them of legislative action to which those formulas are to be applied. There is general agreement that arbitrary and unreasonable legislative action is forbidden; that businesses "affected with a public use" may be regulated, and so on. Differences arise in determining whether particular legislation operates arbitrarily and unreasonably when applied to particular situations, or whether a particular business is so affected with a public use as to be the subject of regulation.

The character of these differences suggests the great importance, in applying the fourteenth amendment to cases as they arise, of the court's being fully informed as to all phases of the particular social conditions affected, the evils supposed to originate in them, and the appropriateness of the particular remedy sought to be applied. Unfortunately, in briefing questions of this character it has been the disposition of the bar very generally to be content with the elaboration of legal formulas and the citation of authorities, without a painstaking examination of the fact situation which has given rise to the constitutional question.

Lawyers who in the presentation of a negligence case would prove with meticulous care every fact surrounding the accident and injury, in this field too often go little beyond the challenged statute and the citation of authorities in supposedly analogous cases. The court is thus often left to speculate as to the nature and extent of the social problems giving rise to the legislative problem or to discover them by its own researches. Intimate acquaintance with every aspect of the conditions which have given rise to the regulatory problems is infinitely more important to the court than is the citation of authorities or the recital of bare formulas.

The extent to which a particular abuse has been the subject of legislative investigation and legislative action in other States or communities than the one immediately concerned, while not decisive of the constitutional question, is often of great importance in determining the nature of the question with which the legislature had to deal and in determining what are appropriate methods of dealing with it. Often the court has brought before it legislation of more or less local application, dealing with what are peculiarly local problems, or, again, new questions growing out of entirely new situations wtihout any adequate presentation of the legislative history or analysis or explanation of the actual situation which produced it.

It is true that the court has often said that every presumption must be indulged in favor of the constitutionality of the legislative action. As is the case with other legal formulas, this presumption may prove to be a prop which will save the plaintiff's case from collapse, but there is no safe or satisfactory reason for his discarding any available data which support presumption.

These differences of opinion as to the scope of the police power in its application to particular social problems have revived in the last 25 years the discussion of earlier days, of the power of the court to declare laws of the States and of Congress unconstitutional. While the exercise of this power has been strongly challenged as judicial usurpation, the history of the judicial function before the adoption of the Constitution, the language of the Constitution itself in Article VI, and the long course of judicial decision, leave that question no longer debatable. Hence, much of the discussion has been addressed to the question, whether the power should be limited and to suggested ways and means of limiting it.

Whatever views one may cherish as to the methods by which constitutional government may be attained in those countries which are homogeneous with respect to their local interests and local government, he can not long reflect upon our own situation and our own history without realizing how impossible it would be to preserve the rights and autonomy of our governments, both State and national, free from encroachment, each upon the other, without resort to the mediation of some impartial body.

When it comes to limiting the power of the court to declare laws unconstitutional, it is important to bear in mind that whatever limitations have been proposed upon the exercise of this power in the protection of the individual from the encroachments of government under the fifth and the fourteenth amendments, must likewise restrict the power of the court to draw the line which marks the separation of the constitutional powers of the States from each other and from the powers of the Federal Government.

The last 50 years of our constitutional history have shown a steadily increasing number of contacts between the operations of State governments and those of the National Government on the one hand and the activities of the several State governments on the other. One finds examples of the first in the exercise of the powers, both State and National, over commerce, intrastate and interstate; in the expansion of the Federal police power within the territorial limits of the States; in the field of taxation wherever either government attempts to extend its taxing power so as to affect the instrumentalities of the other or enter the exclusive field of taxation of the other. We have seen, with increasing frequency, examples of these contacts between State governments in original suits, in which one State seeks the vindication of its sovereign rights as against the other in the only court competent to adjudicate them. Wherever these contacts between the two governments occur, it is inevitable that there should result from time to time real or apparent conflicts of interest which give rise to conflicting views of the constitutional rights and powers of the governments concerned. Governmental action often taken through the agency of statutes may also be taken by the acts of officers whose powers and duties are defined by statutes. It follows that when conflicting claims of governmental right of power are brought to the Supreme Court for adjudication, they must of necessity be resolved in the great number of cases by passing on the constitutionality of some statute, State or Federal.

During the entire history of the court and chiefly during the last 50 years we have seen it at work, sitting as the impartial umpire to settle these controversies between sovereign governments, and it has settled them sometimes by holding that the State, by passing a particular statute, has exceeded its power, and sometimes by holding that Congress, in its legislation, has exceeded the powers delegated to the National Government. Without this method for the peaceable settlement of these controversies upon their merits there could be recourse only to the uncertainties of diplomatic negotiations between the governments concerned or to force.

It is a fact worthy of some comment that in the discussion of the powers of the court to declare statutes unconstitutional, we have been disposed to leave entirely out of account this indispensable function of the court as the arbiter between sovereign governments, and we have taken little thought of the effect on its exercise of that function, of the proposals which have been made for limiting its authority to declare statutes unconstitutional. Whether that power should be limited is a political question which I do not discuss, but in a gathering of lawyers it is entirely appropriate that some consideration should be given to the effect of the particular methods of limitation which have been suggested.

The devices proposed for setting limits upon the exercise of this power have been aimed at giving to statutes a weight which they would otherwise not possess in their competitive struggle with the provisions of the Constitution. They have been of two kinds. It has been suggested that a statute might be made to prevail over constitutional objections if it were passed by the legislative body twice. It has also been suggested that if a statute whose constitutionality was contested were upheld by the vote of a minority of two or three of the members of the court, it should become law despite all constitutional objections.

When any such device is applied to the function which the court exercises as the arbiter between the rival claims of governments or the separate branches of the National Government, the question at once arises, Shall it be applied equally to statutes passed by Congress and to statutes passed by State legislatures, or shall it be applied to only one, the acts of Congress? If applicable only to one, it is apparent that the sovereign State and the National Government no longer stand on a plane of equality in matters of constitutional right or immunity, but the way is opened for the gradual curtailment of the constitutional powers granted to or reserved by one through the enactment of statutes by the other, which, whenever their constitutionality is assailed, have greater weight before the court than the Constitution itself.

But if the device of the weighted statute were to be applied both to the acts of Congress and to State statutes in the field of the conflict of powers of government under our dual system, then each would be given the opportunity to extend its own constitutional power in particular fields at the expense of the other by the enactment of statutes which, before the Supreme Court, must be given a weight greater than is given to other forms of governmental actions or to the provisions of the Constitution itself.

But governments do not always exercise their sovereign powers through the enactment of statutes. Under our system they may act with equal competency through the executive or the judicial power, and such action when it is supported by the Constitution is as authoritative as if the Government spoke through legislation alone. The consequence of these proposals therefore would be to give a weight and effect to the legislative action which would not attach to other forms of governmental action when it is asserted that both are sanctioned by the Constitution.

In a controversy between States, founded upon diverse claims of constitutional right, greater weight must needs be given to the statute of one than to the executive action of the other, merely because governmental action in one case has found expression in a statute rather than through some other equally competent agency.

The same inequality between the different types of responsible governmental action would occur with respect to the three branches of the National Government. Under such a scheme the executive action of the President or the judicial action of courts, each founded upon a claim of constitutional right, would have less weight than the action of the legislative branch. In practice the device of the weighted statutes could only operate to effect a gradual transfer of constitutional powers from the executive and judicial branches of the Government to the legislative.

These are but illustrations in somewhat elementary fashion of the truth that under our system of the distribution of constitutional powers, the power vested in one branch or agency of the Government can not be subtracted from one litigant without adding to that of the other, and that giving artificial weight to one form of governmental action wherever it comes into conflict with the other forms, or with the Constitution itself, can only result in an inevitable shifting of governmental powers as they have been distributed by the Constitution. And that redistribution of power would take place, not as the result of judicial action based on the provisions of the great document itself but by increasing the power of one at the expense of the other by resort to its own legislative action.

The progress of the court to its present position as the acknowledged arbiter between conflicting claims of governmental power is in itself an interesting chapter of constitutional history. That it has attained to that position is not due alone to the fact that its great powers were conferred upon it by a written constitution. It is due quite as much to the position which it early assumed and has always maintained of independence from every external influence, and to thoroughness and fidelity in the performance of its judicial labors.

When the court was organized it would have been easy for it to have fallen into a condition of dependence on the other great branches of the Government. That such was not its fate is due to its adherence to the tradition of independence of English and American courts and the complete realization of the fact that irrespective of whether it deals with the right of private litigants or the rights and powers of governments, a court is not truly a court unless it acts with complete independence.

If time would permit, it would be interesting to refer to the repeated decisions of the court in the past 50 years, where, as in earlier periods, its action has shown the complete detachment of its judges from all external influences. Where the court has divided the divisions have not been along party or political lines, but have rested on more fundamental differences of legal and political philosophy. And so it may be said, with the support of its entire history, that the position of the court as the controlling influence which holds each of the governments in our system and each branch of the National Government moving within its own orbit, with general acquiescence in the fairness and justice of its judgments, has been due more to its steadfast adherence to the best traditions of judicial independence than to any other cause.

But if throughout its history judicial independence has been the pole star by which the court has shaped its course, a prodigious industry and the exhaustive scrutiny of the facts and law of each case have been the motive power behind its judgment. It is only since the Civil War that its docket has become crowded with cases and that the growth of the country and expansion of all governmental activities, both State and National, have steadily increased the pressure of work upon the judges.

Very remote seem the days when the court adjourned for lack of business, and when the first Chief Justice resigned in order that he might find more active occupation as Governor of New York. The jurisdictional act of May, 1925, limiting appeals and writs of error and enlarging the discretionary jurisdiction of the court, was passed in the hope of relieving the pressure on the court and enabling it to catch up with its docket. Since its enactment steady progress has been made. For the first time in many years there has been a progressive reduction in the number of cases awaiting action by the court. In the October term of 1927, which came to its close in June, 1,049 cases were placed on the docket, of which 17 were original causes. Of this total number, 859 were disposed of during the term. Of those 365 cases were on the merits and 492 were on petition for certiorari—about 100 of which you may be surprised to learn were granted. In addition to the cases regularly appearing on the docket a large number of motions were heard and disposed of by the court as made. At the close of the term there were only 190 cases on the docket instead of 295, as at the close of 1926 term, and of these 44 were applications for certiorari, so that when the court adjourned in June there were only 126 cases on the docket awaiting the disposition of the court on their merits. There is now reasonable ground for the expectation that by the end of another term the court may be able to hear cases on their merits as soon after they are docketed as counsel are prepared to present them.

This is greatly to be desired, not that the court may be relieved of a heavy burden of labor, but that it may be able to make better disposition of its time. Time, which has hitherto been given to relatively unimportant matters, it is hoped may now be devoted to cases of far-reaching public importance. We ought not to be completely absorbed in the technique of the law. Who could listen to those inspiring addresses which we heard yesterday and for a moment suppose that law could exist and function separate and apart from science or from adequate understanding and appreciation of the significant facts of modern life which affect social right? The questions which come to us are rooted in history and in the social and economic development of the Nation. To grasp their significance our study must be extended beyond the examination of precedents and legal formulas, by reading and research in fields extralegal, which, nevertheless, have an intimate relation to the genesis of the legal rules which we pronounce. If we attain that much to the desired end, it will be through the aid of the jurisdictional act of May, 1925, and by more faithful observance by lawyers of the rules regulating arguments and the preparation of briefs, and especially the preparation of applications for certiorari, which I commend to your thoughtful consideration.

It may be of interest, and in some measure reassuring to members of the bar, if I devote a few moments to describing how this grist of legal work is ground out week by week during the term. There has been no change in the method of work in the past 50 years, and so far as I have been able to learn the court's habits of work have undergone little or no change from the beginning. I betray no secrets in describing them. In 1874 Mr. Justice Campbell, in his eulogy of Justice Curtain, and more recently former Justice Hughes, have described the daily work of the court.

Every Saturday the court sits in conference, meeting at noon, just when the call for golf is most alluring. At the sessions of the court during the week the judges have heard arguments in cases on the merits. The time of arguments, as you know, is limited so as to make impracticable decision from the bench in most cases. During the spacious hours of leisure before the court sits at 12, and after it adjourns at half past four, the judges have had opportunity to examine the records in the argued and submitted cases, and to examine the petitions and briefs upon current applications for certiorari. They have also received and examined the papers in the miscellaneous motions affecting the cases which have been docketed. On the day before the conference each judge receives a list giving the cases which will be taken up at the conference and the order in which they will be considered. This list usually includes every cause which is ready for final disposition, including the cases argued the day before the conference, and all pending motions and applications for certiorari.

At conference each case is presented for discussion by the Chief Justice, usually by a brief statement of the facts, the questions of law involved, and with such suggestions for their disposition as he may think appropriate. No cases have been assigned to any particular judge in advance of the conference. Each justice is prepared to discuss the case at length and to give his views as to the proper solution of the questions presented. In Mr. Justice Holmes's pungent phrase, each must be ready to "recite" on the case. Each judge is requested by the Chief Justice, in the order of seniority, to give his views and the conclusions which he has reached. The discussion is of the freest character and at its end, after full opportunity has been given for each member of the court to be heard and for the asking and answering of questions, the vote is taken and recorded in the reverse order of the discussion, the youngest in point of service voting first.

On the same evening, after the conclusion of the conference, each member of the court receives at his home a memorandum from the Chief Justice advising him of the assignment of cases for opinions. Opinions are written for the most part in recess, and as they are written they are printed and circulated among the justices, who make suggestions for their correction and revision. At the next succeeding conference these suggestions are brought before the full conference and accepted or rejected, as the case may be. On the following Monday the opinion is announced by the writer as the opinion of the court.

In the preparation of opinions it has been from the beginning the practice to state the case fully in the opinion. This practice gives a clarity and focus to the opinion not otherwise attainable, and has added in no small degree to the prestige and influence of the court. In recent years there has been a trend toward brevity and directness in the judicial style which without sacrifice of the essentials of the opinions has, I believe, enhanced their value as expositions of legal science.

In the first reported opinion of the court, Georgia v. Brailsford (2 Dall. 402, 415), a dissenting opinion was written, a practice which has been continued from time to time throughout the history of the court. In the last 50 years there have been some notable instances of the dissenting opinion ultimately becoming the prevailing opinion of the court. Notwithstanding the ideal of certainty in the law, the dissenting opinion is not without its value even though it never secures the adherence of a majority. One can not trace the path of the law without becoming convinced that its course is very different from what it would have been if uninfluenced by the considered and powerful dissents of able judges.

An interesting and, I am inclined to believe, important feature of court's method of doing its work is that every decision, even of a motion, is a nine-judge decision. No one knows in advance of the vote and the assignment of the case by the Chief Justice who will write the opinion. No judge, more than another, is expected to advise his associates with respect to any case.

The method of dealing with motions and applications for certiorari is in no wise different. The popular impression that the work of examining these applications is divided up among the judges is not true. Every motion and every petition, with papers supporting it, is examined by each judge of the nine and he comes to conference with a memorandum, often written out in his own hand, embodying the results of his investigation of each application.

Petitions for certiorari are granted on the affirmative vote of four of the nine judges. This part of the court's work is very laborious. At the opening of the last term there were awaiting disposition 228 applications for certiorari, which had accumulated during the summer vacation. At the end of the first seven weeks of the term these applications had been taken up and disposed of in addition to the current work of hearing and disposing of argued and submitted cases and the preparation of opinion.

Of course, so heavy a burden of work could not have been disposed of in so brief a time if all the judges had not spent some of the summer in examining the accumulations of applications for certiorari. Nor would such a continuous burden of work as I have described be supportable were it not for the very great skill of the more experienced judges in reading records and getting quickly to the essential points in each case, nor, indeed, if it were not for the extraordinary and abiding interest which attends it.

He would indeed be a rash prophet who would venture to predict the course of judicial decision in the next 50 years. Could we have a vision of the future social and economic development of America, it would perhaps be possible to indicate with reasonable certainty the line along which it must proceed. But that vision is denied to us except dimly. From the history of the court we know that firm adherence to its established traditions of judicial independence and of performance of judicial duty with painstaking thoroughness and fidelity are the strongest assurance that it will meet and sustain the responsibility of the future. Often unjustly and unreasoningly attacked, those attacks have left no scar. The faithful performance of the great work of the court day by day and year by year has won to it deserved confidence in its disinterestedness and stability as an institution, and brought it to an undisputable triump over hasty criticism and the dissatisfaction of the moment. Those who bear its responsibilities now and in the future will do well to ponder this significant fact and to recall as well that in the course of its long history the only wounds from which it has suffered have been those which, in the words of former Justice Hughes, were "self-inflicted."

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I very much desire to enlist the attention of the Senate, because my experience has been that if we can once get the attention of Senators a great deal of time is saved; otherwise questions are asked with reference to matters that have once been stated.

I am calling the attention of the Senate to the report of the committee on what is known commonly as the Vare case. I think I can best present the subject by briefly referring to the proceedings of the Senate and the various steps taken by the committee.

On May 19, 1926, the Senate adopted a resolution creating the special committee and directing it to investigate the expenditures in the senatorial primaries and general election of that year. The committee proceeded with its business, and hearings were held at various dates, beginning on July 3 and extending to July 26, 1926. All of the candidates for the Senate in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania were notified of the proceedings of the committee, and appeared and testified, and had the privilege of representation by counsel. The fullest opportunity to be heard touching all matters connected with the primary election was afforded to all of the parties who were concerned. Mr. VARE appeared in person, and testified at length, as appears on pages 492 to 526 of volume 1 of the hearings. He was represented at that time by an attorney, Mr. Harry A. Mackey.

On December 22, 1926, the committee reported to the Senate its findings of fact touching the Pennsylvania primary.

On January 10, 1927, there was filed in the Senate a certificate of election of Mr. VARE, signed by Governor Pinchot. On the same day the Senate adopted Senate Resolution No. 324 directing the committee to take possession of the records of the general election held on the 2d day of November, 1926.

Election records were promptly secured by the committee from Allegheny County and Philadelphia, the documents being turned over without any protest from those two counties. There was, however, resistance made in other counties, which resulted in certain court proceedings being had in order to secure or attempt to secure the records of the election.

These proceedings carried us along until late in the session of 1927. It will be recalled that an attempt was made by the committee to have adopted a resolution formally extending its powers so that during the recess no challenge would be made of its authority. At the time it was made necessary, largely by the resistance offered to the securing of the election returns and paraphernalia without which the committee could not proceed as it intended to proceed with the taking of oral testimony. When that resolution was offered, resistance was made in the Senate, and the debate was carried on until the Senate was obliged to adjourn under the law. The result was what had been anticipated namely, that, while the committee had no doubt of its legal authority to proceed, it was perfectly manifest that it would be resisted at every step and that it would not be able to make any real headway.

I think I may say in passing that the circumstances show that the resistance in Pennsylvania was made by Mr. VARE's friends and that the resistance in the Senate to the extension of the power of the committee was also made in his behalf and, in my opinion, fully at his instance.

That brought us to an impasse, and during the summer practically nothing could be done.

When the Congress reassembled in December, 1927, within four days after reassembling, the Senate adopted a resolution to which I challenge particular attention, especially to the last paragraph or two, because it has much to do with the action the Senate may see fit to take at this time. That resolution read:

Resolved, That the claim of the said WILLIAM S. VARE to a seat in the United States Senate is hereby referred to the said special committee of the Senate, with instructions to grant such further hearing to the said WILLIAM S. VARE and to take such further evidence on its own motion as shall be proper in the premises, and to report to the Senate within 60 days if practicable; and that until the coming in of the report of said committee and until the final action of the Senate thereon the said WILLIAM S. VARE be, and he is hereby, denied a seat in the United States Senate: Provided, That the said WILLIAM S. VARE shall be accorded the privileges of the floor of the Senate for the purpose of being heard touching his right to receive the oath of office and to membership in the Senate.

On the same day another resolution was submitted, which was agreed to on the 13th of December. That resolution declared, in substance, that resolutions creating the committee, including Senate Resolution 324 and subsequent resolutions conferring authority upon the committee, had continued in full force and effect since the respective dates of their adoption by the Senate and do now as then express the will of the body.

The resolution further recited:

The committee shall continue to execute the directions of the said several resolutions relating to the said committee and until the Senate accepts or rejects the final report of said committee or otherwise orders.

As a result of these resolutions the proceedings of the committee, of which the Senate had notice, and of agreements which were made between the parties, the election records were finally delivered to the committee on the 20th day of February, 1928. The committee thereupon proceeded to an examination of the records. At the same time the Committee on Privileges and Elections hearing the contest between Mr. Wilson and Mr. VARE proceeded with its work.

The representatives of both committees and of Mr. Wilson and of Mr. VARE were constantly present and given all the privileges usually accorded, and were allowed to examine all of the election records and documents.

Mr. President, one of the resolutions that was adopted was known as the Norris resolution. It was adopted on the 8th day of January, 1927, and to that resolution I challenge the attention of the Senators present. It read:

Whereas on the 10th day of January, 1927, there was filed in the Senate an official communication from the then Governor of Pennsylvania, made and delivered to the Senate in pursuance of law, the following certificate:

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
GOVERNOR'S OFFICE,
Harrisburg, January 8, 1927.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith the returns of the election of United States Senator, held on November 2, 1926, as the law of this Commonwealth directs.

I have the honor also to inform you that I have to-day signed and by registered mail delivered to Hon. WILLIAM S. VARE a certificate which is as follows:

"To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

"This is to certify that on the face of the returns filed, in the office of the secretary of the Commonwealth of the election held on the 2d day of November, 1926, WILLIAM S. VARE appears to have been chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Pennsylvania a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years beginning on the 4th day of March, 1927."

The form of words customarily used for such certificates by the governors of this Commonwealth and the form recommended by the Senate of the United States both include certification that the candidate in question has been "duly chosen by the qualified electors" of the Commonwealth.

I can not so certify, because I do not believe that Mr. VARE has been duly chosen. On the contrary, I am convinced, and have repeatedly declared, that his nomination was partly bought and partly stolen, and that frauds committed in his interest have tainted both the primary and the general election. But even if there had been no fraud in the election, a man who was not honestly nominated can not be honestly entitled to a seat.

The stealing of votes for Mr. VARE, and the amount and the sources of the money spent in his behalf, make it clear to me that the election returns do not, in fact, correctly represent the will of the sovereign voters of Pennsylvania.

Therefore I have so worded the certificate required by law that I can sign it without distorting the truth.

I have the honor to be, sir,

Very respectfully yours,

GIFFORD PINCHOT, Governor.

The resolution then proceeded:

Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the expenditure of such a large sum of money to secure the nomination of the said WILLIAM S. VARE as a candidate for the United States Senate prima facie is contrary to sound public policy, harmful to the dignity and honor of the Senate, dangerous to the perpetuity of a free government, and, together with the charges of corruption and fraud made in the report of said committee, and substantiated by the evidence taken by said committee, and the charges of corruption and fraud officially made by the Governor of Pennsylvania, prima facie taints with fraud and corruption the credentials of the said WILLIAM S. VARE for a seat in the United States Senate; and be it further

Resolved, That the claim of the said WILLIAM S. VARE to a seat in the United States Senate is hereby referred to the said special committee of the Senate, with instructions to grant such further hearing to the said WILLIAM S. VARE and to take such further evidence on its own motion as shall be proper in the premises, and to report to the Senate within 60 days if practicable; and that until the coming in of the report of said committee and until the final action of the Senate thereon the said WILLIAM S. VARE be, and he is hereby, denied a seat in the United States Senate: Provided, That the said WILLIAM S. VARE shall be accorded the privileges of the floor of the Senate for the purpose of being heard touching his right to receive the oath of office and to membership in the Senate.

Mr. President, the committee promptly notified Mr. VARE that it would proceed with this business. The election papers were received, finally, about the 20th day of February, 1928. The committee appointed Mr. Clapp, a prominent lawyer of Philadelphia, to represent it. He organized a corps of assistants. All of them were sworn faithfully to examine the election records and truthfully to report their findings. At the same time Mr. VARE was notified and was represented by his attorney and by persons selected for the purpose by him; and it is fair to say that Mr. VARE's representatives saw all of the papers and had an opportunity to know what papers were being examined by the representatives of the committee.

One witness only was produced to testify orally—Mr. Charles Edwin Fox. Mr. Fox testified in the presence of Mr. VARE and Mr. VARE's attorney, and was cross-examined at length by these attorneys. With the exception of the compilation of the reports of those who had been examining the documents, the committee regarded the testimony at that time closed, unless Mr. VARE or his counsel desired to be further heard.

Mr. Fox's testimony was to the general effect that an organization existed, and had existed for years, in Philadelphia; that it had been engaged in almost every conceivable form of fraud and illegal practices and irregularities; that this organization for a number of years had been under the control of WILLIAM S. VARE; that the organization was largely self-perpetuating, and was the same organization which conducted the 1926 election.

At the conclusion of Mr. Fox's testimony this statement was made by the chairman of the committee:

That ends this particular hearing. I do not know whether the committee will take any other testimony or not. We may, after consideration. I have not talked with the committee. That ends this particular hearing, unless Mr. VARE or Mr. Wilson has something he desires to present.

Mr. VARE. No, sir; nothing.

The committee then regarded the testimony as closed except for the report of the committee. At least, that was the impression the chairman had, and I think it was the general impression of the committee.

That was on May 8, 1928. However, after consideration the committee concluded to call Mr. VARE formally before it to ascertain specifically whether he had anything to offer, and on May 16 notified him, as follows:

The special committee appointed pursuant to Senate Resolution 195 will be prepared at 10 o'clock, Saturday morning, May 19, 1928, to consider any matter you may desire to submit it.

Will you please advise us at the earliest possible moment whether you will desire to appear or be represented before the committee?

In reply to that, the committee received a letter from Mr. VARE, as follows:

I am unable to come to Washington to-morrow. My Philadelphia doctor advised me to come to Atlantic City, and I was compelled to have Atlantic City doctor attend me to-day. I welcome this, the first opportunity I have had to appear before the Reed committee to explain my primary campaign.

I do not wish to say anything harsh; but he had been before the committee, he had testified at length, and he had had abundance of opportunity.

The letter continues:

I regret this attack of acute indigestion prevents my attendance. I am hopeful that the committee will withhold judgment and fix a date after I have recovered from illness that I might appear before the committee and give full and complete information.

The committee assembled, and Mr. Francis S. Brown, an attorney representing Mr. VARE, appeared and said:

I do not know what testimony would be required here in this investigation. As I understand, a statement has been submitted to you—to this committee—covering the expenditures and how the money was expended, and all that. I do not know what else he can add to it.

Counsel further stated that he had been consulted only very recently regarding the controversy in question. Thereupon the committee decided that it would give further time to Mr. VARE in order to allow him to recover from this attack of acute indigestion, and the following statement was made:

The committee recognizes the fact that Mr. VARE is ill and unable to be here, and that we ought to grant any reasonable indulgence, but we desire to close this matter up. I will ask you to communicate with Mr. VARE and find the earliest time that he can be here, and advise me, as chairman of the committee, just as soon as you can; and the committee will stand in recess subject to the call of the chairman. We will give you notice in advance of a meeting.

The committee expected that notice; and, while the members of the committee had gone home, we were prepared by subcommittees to proceed with the testimony.

The committee received no communication whatever from Mr. VARE until November 28, 1928, when the chairman received the following letter from Mr. VARE:

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., November 28, 1928.

Hon. JAMES A. REED,

Chairman Special Committee on Campaign Expenditures,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR REED: Shortly before the adjournment of Congress you will recall I was stricken by sickness, and your committee graciously excused my appearance before you at that time. After partial recovery, but against the advice of my physician, I went to Kansas City convention, as I had been elected a delegate, and I am now paying the price. The trip, instead of helping me, as I had hoped, injuriously affected my health until, on August 1, I suffered a stroke, paralyzing my left side, leg, and arm.

Of course, I do not need to go into details as to the result of a stroke. Suffice it to say that I am now slowly recovering, but I am still confined to my summer home at Atlantic City. My physicians advise me that I must have absolute rest and quiet if I am to make further progress toward recovery. In fact, they have warned me that any undue exertion at this time, physical or mental, might be attended with disastrous results.

I had hoped, upon the reassembling of Congress, to be able to comply with any request of your committee to appear before you, but that is, in my present condition, physically impossible.

I am grateful for your consideration and, with assurance of my regards, I remain,

Very truly yours,

WM. S. VARE.

Accompanying that, or immediately succeeding that letter, was a certificate from the physicians of Mr. VARE describing his condition. To epitomize this, and not to weary the few Senators who seem still to be interested in this case, the substance of the doctors' certificate was that Mr. VARE was in a very serious condition, that he could not appear and testify; but it further appeared, in part in the letter, and in part in subsequent testimony, that within a very few days after Mr. VARE had obtained his continuance he had attended the Republican convention in Kansas City, and from that time until the 1st day of August had been capable of going about the city of Philadelphia and attending to his usual affairs. During all that interval he failed to notify the committee that he could appear, although he had been expressly requested to give the earliest possible notice. Accordingly, during all this time he allowed to elapse he could have appeared to present his further evidence, if he had any to offer.

When the committee assembled, and this application for further continuance was made, the committee, after consultation, concluded that it ought to proceed with this business, and so notified Mr. VARE and his counsel. Thereupon a request was made that they be furnished with the findings of the representatives of the committee. That was on January 24, 1929, and the substance of the findings of the representatives of the committee was furnished, and, in addition thereto, the work sheets which had been used to compile the various data were submitted to the counsel for Mr. VARE.

On January 24, after all that had been done, Mr. VARE's counsel appeared and made no further application for continuance. They stated that they were ready to proceed, but one of them did state that Mr. VARE was still in ill health, that he could not appear, and that no assurance could be given as to when he could appear. Indeed, the intimation was rather broad that the time would be very indefinite, to state it in the mildest possible terms.

One of the physicians of Mr. VARE was put upon the stand, and the substance of his testimony was and is that Mr. VARE suffered a paralytic stroke, that he was confined to his bed practically all of the time, that he could not talk with his lawyers with reference to this case, that any sort of excitement or agitation of any kind was likely to produce very serious results, and no assurance could be given as to when he would recover, if, indeed, he would ever recover.

After all this delay the counsel for Mr. VARE addressed the committee and presented an argument which he afterwards reduced to the form of a brief, in which he attacked certain findings of the committee and in general made an argument in favor of Mr. VARE. That brief is printed and submitted here for what persuasive power it may have, and it was replied to in a brief of Mr. Clapp, which is also appended to the report.

I will say that it seemed a very strange thing to the committee that it should have been asked to continue this case for months and then, when it came to the final hearing, the only evidence produced was the affidavits of about 37 people out of some 2,018 whose signatures to the registration lists were reported to us by experts to have been written by other than the ostensible signers. These 37 people testified they had signed their own names. That was all the evidence introduced after all this delay, and in addition to it was an argument of counsel—sometimes I thought drawing correct conclusions and sometimes very incorrect conclusions—but all of that was analyzed by Mr. Clapp.

Mr. President, that creates this sort of situation. The Senate, by the Norris resolution, commanded the committee to give Mr. VARE a hearing. The committee endeavored to give him that hearing, and the committee is unanimous in its opinion that if he had availed himself of his opportunities he had abundant time to appear and present his case. So the committee has brought in its final report. I think I ought to say that I believe the Senator from Utah is still of the opinion—I think I may say more in charity and more with the purpose of resolving every possible doubt in favor of Mr. VARE—that perhaps the committee should be continued. He has stated his views in a separate paper.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. KING. I regret that I am not in entire accord with my brethren who have had the consideration of this important case. I agree with the statement just made by the Senator from Missouri that opportunity was afforded Mr. VARE to present his case. That, of course, was anterior to the serious illness from which he is now suffering. I think the evidence is conclusive that since the paralytic stroke of August 1 of last year Mr. VARE has been utterly incapacitated from a proper consultation with his counsel or undertaking any activity requiring physical or mental effort.

One other observation—and I hope the Senator will pardon me. I regard some of the most important testimony in this record as that which was presented to the committee in detail, perhaps after Mr. VARE was ill, as to which he, Mr. VARE, has not had full opportunity, in my opinion, to answer the same. When the Senator from Missouri concludes I may amplify these brief remarks.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I think that is in accord with what I was trying to say. I was not saying it quite so lucidly.

It is important to remember that the only testimony introduced after Mr. VARE's sickness was the conclusions of the examiners of the documents, and that examination was conducted also on behalf of Mr. VARE by his own representatives, as well as by the representatives of the committee, and while Mr. VARE's examiners did not submit their findings or their work sheets to our examiners, we did submit to Mr. VARE's counsel, and any other persons he desired to call in, the work sheets of the committee's examiners.

My own view—and I do not care to enter into any discussion of it—is that that was a matter for the examination of experts and of counsel, and that Mr. VARE had an abundance of both, and that he could not have added, under the circumstances, in the slightest degree to the mere exposition of the contents of a written instrument which was before the committee.

Assuming to be correct the conclusions of the majority of the committee—that is, of all of the committee except the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]—to the effect that there is nothing further for the committee to do, that it has fully afforded Mr. VARE the opportunity of a hearing, and also that there is no showing or pretense of a showing that he will ever at any time be able to appear before the committee, the committee regards its labors as concluded. It has done all that it can do, all that in reason it ought to be asked to do, and all, I think, it could ever do if it were continued in existence for years.

First, I do not think there is anything to submit; second, I think everything has been submitted; third, I think if there were something to submit which Mr. VARE knew of personally, he is as well prepared to furnish it now as he ever will be, notwithstanding his present physical condition.

Mr. President, I am going to ask for a quorum myself now. This is not a personal matter to me. I want the Senate to hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fess	McMaster	Simmons
Barkley	Frazier	McNary	Smith
Bayard	George	Mayfield	Smoot
Bingham	Gerry	Metcalf	Steck
Black	Glass	Moses	Steiwer
Blaine	Glenn	Neely	Stephens
Blease	Goff	Norbeck	Swanson
Borah	Gould	Norris	Thomas, Idaho
Bratton	Greene	Nye	Thomas, Okla.
Brookhart	Hale	Oddie	Trammell
Broussard	Harris	Overman	Tydings
Bruce	Harrison	Phipps	Tyson
Burton	Hastings	Pine	Vandenberg
Capper	Hawes	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Caraway	Hayden	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mont.
Copeland	Heflin	Reed, Pa.	Warren
Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.	Waterman
Curtis	Jones	Robinson, Ind.	Watson
Deneen	Kendrick	Sackett	Wheeler
Dill	Keyes	Schall
Edge	King	Sheppard
Edwards	McKellar	Shortridge

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I beg Senators to attend to this important question for a moment. I assure them that I am not asking for a personal hearing. If I wanted that I would know how to get it. I would just start some sort of a row here. I appreciate the fact that many committees are meeting, but this is an important matter that must be disposed of in some way by the Senate. I think at this session some action should be taken.

I repeat that in the opinion of the committee Mr. VARE has been given every opportunity to be heard and that there is no evidence whatever that he will ever be in any better condition than he is now. We tried to elicit from his physicians a direct statement on that point, but were unable to do so. Accordingly, the committee regards its labor as concluded. Now the question comes, what is the Senate going to do?

The majority of the committee accordingly reported:

From the foregoing facts and conclusions, including those previously reported, it is the opinion of the committee that WILLIAM S. VARE is not entitled to a seat in the United States Senate.

The committee, however, directs attention to the terms of Senate Resolution No. 2, of the Seventieth Congress, agreed to on December 9, 1927, and respectfully submits that, in view of the present physical and mental condition of the said WILLIAM S. VARE, it is for the Senate to determine what action is proper in the premises.

That is the report of the majority.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] concurs in this language:

The records show that in August, 1928, Mr. VARE suffered a paralytic stroke, since which time he has been unable to appear before the committee of the Senate. The record also shows that he is still in a serious physical condition as a result of such stroke. It also appears that he desires to come before the committee and testify and speak in his own behalf and perhaps offer additional testimony.

The record, as it now stands, would warrant action by the committee adverse to the right of Mr. VARE, after being sworn in, to retain his seat in the Senate; but in view of his serious physical condition and his desire to be heard by the committee and perhaps offer further testimony, I am unwilling to close the case and submit a final report to the Senate.

But there is the concurrence of all members of the committee that, as the record stands now, Mr. VARE is not entitled to his seat.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. KING. I take the position that Mr. VARE is entitled to be sworn in, regardless of the final action of the Senate.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That has been the Senator's position from the first; but I have just read his language. The Senator thinks he is entitled to be sworn in, but on the record as it now stands that he ought to be ousted immediately after being sworn in.

Mr. KING. I take the position that the Senate would be warranted in denying him his seat.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is the same thing in different language.

Mr. President, the Senate has solemnly declared that Mr. VARE is not entitled to his seat unless upon a further hearing it should appear that he was entitled to the seat. That hearing has been had, as far as this committee could give it, and I think as far as any committee could ever give it. The question now is whether the Senate desires to proceed and adjudicate this case or whether the Senate is inclined to take the view that it wants to grant Mr. VARE further time to appear before the Senate. The committee has brought in no resolution. We submit to the Senate our findings, the result of our long and arduous labors.

Now, I want to say a word for myself; and for what I shall say no one is responsible except myself. It is my solemn judgment that Mr. VARE has utterly failed to meet the charges or to meet the evidence which has been adduced against him. It is my solemn judgment that an unspeakable condition of affairs existed in the primaries and election in the State of Pennsylvania. It is my solemn judgment that Mr. VARE was guilty of conduct which warrants a refusal of his seat. It is my solemn judgment also, however afflicted Mr. VARE may be, under the conditions which exist, having regard to the fact that Pennsylvania is entitled to have full representation and that the country is entitled to full representation in the Senate, if we are to follow the strict line of duty, we ought to proceed with this business.

But, Mr. President, there is a human side to the case. If Mr. VARE were well and on his feet, if he were able to come here and defend himself, I would insist upon the disposition of the case, even though it was to the exclusion of all other business during the session. But I am, to state it frankly, torn between two conflicting ideas. One is the cold, plain line of duty as I see it. The other is sympathy for an afflicted man and a feeling that I can not insist upon at least leading in a fight against a man who is now helpless. It is a difficult proposition to face. In my early youth, when I encountered no danger by conflict, I had a great many fights, but I never was able to hit a boy when he was down, and I just can not do it now. But the question is before the Senate. If a resolution is brought in to render final judgment in this case, I shall vote for it because it is my duty; but if it is not brought in, I shall not insist upon it and will let another Senate at another time finally dispose of the case.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, when the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] shall have left the Senate, the Senate will be the poorer for his going. We all know his ability as a lawyer. Whether we agree with him or not—and it has been my misfortune seldom to have agreed with him—I have admired the great talent that has characterized his work. I know, Mr. President, that his heart is now serving him as well as his head, as it has always served him; and that we will remember the fairness of his remarks to-day as we will remember also the great service that he has rendered his country. His decision is right, Mr. President. Mr. VARE, whether he be right or wrong in this controversy, is at this moment helplessly paralyzed; and whether we may approve of him or disapprove of him, whether we may approve his conduct or disapprove it, whether we may intend to vote for him or against him when his case comes up for decision, I do not believe that the country would give its approval to our action if, having promised Mr. VARE the rights of this floor to speak in his own behalf prior to our judgment on his case, we now in the moment of his paralytic stroke and his affliction should withdraw from him the right that we then gave him and should pass judgment on him in his absence without having heard whatever he may have to say on the merits of his case. Mr. President, I myself do not care to enter into an analysis of the report or to discuss the facts of the case until the time comes when Mr. VARE can be here to speak for himself. Then I myself may have something to say about the case.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who is detained from the Senate on the business of the Senate, it is my intention to submit a resolution dealing with the report just presented by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] for the select committee of the Senate and also foreclosing the question as to the right of Mr. VARE to a seat in the Senate. The question has been pending for a long time. There is no Senator who would desire to preclude one claiming a seat in this body from the opportunity for a full hearing. The right of hearing inheres in our system of jurisprudence, and it is particularly appropriate that that right shall be preserved, even in the face of what appears to be overwhelming evidence justifying a conclusion touching the matter in controversy.

In view of the statement made by the Senator from Missouri and that just submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania, fully realizing the importance of the question to the public, I have no disposition to press a conclusion touching the resolution which I am about to submit. Nevertheless it is a question which the Senate should consider.

We all sympathize with Mr. VARE in the misfortune that has befallen him, in the illness from which he is suffering, and certainly no one who is possessed of the usual sympathies which characterize men in the positions which we occupy would desire to prevent him from having the fullest opportunity to assert a right that has been challenged and a right of fundamental importance in our system of government. I shall present the resolution to which I have referred, have it read, and ask that it lie over under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Arkansas for the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 339), as follows:

Whereas on the 17th day of May, 1926, the Senate passed a resolution creating a special committee to investigate and determine the improper use of money to promote the nomination or election of persons to the United States Senate and the employment of certain other corrupt and unlawful means to secure such nomination or election; and

Whereas said committee, in the discharge of its duties, notified WILLIAM S. VARE, of Pennsylvania, then a candidate for the United States Senate from that State, of its proceedings, and the said WILLIAM S. VARE appeared in person and by attorney before said committee while it was engaged in making such investigation; and

Whereas the said committee, in its report to the Senate (Rept. 1197, pt. 2, 69th Cong.), found that the evidence, without substantial dispute, showed that at the primary election at which the said WILLIAM S. VARE was alleged to have been nominated as a candidate for the United States Senate there were numerous and various instances of fraud and corruption in behalf of the candidacy of the said WILLIAM S. VARE; that there was spent in behalf of the said WILLIAM S. VARE in said primary election by the said WILLIAM S. VARE and his friends a sum of money exceeding $785,000; and that the said WILLIAM S. VARE had in no manner controverted the truth of the foregoing facts, although full and complete opportunity had been given him not only to present evidence but arguments in his behalf; and

Whereas in the consideration of said report, on the 9th day of December, 1927, the Senate, by solemn declaration declared "that the expenditure of such a large sum of money to secure the nomination of the said WILLIAM S. VARE as a candidate for the United States Senate prima facie is contrary to sound public policy, harmful to the dignity and honor of the Senate, dangerous to the perpetuity of a free government, and, together with the charges of corruption and fraud made in the report of said committee, and substantiated by the evidence taken by said committee, prima facie taints with fraud and corruption the credentials of the said WILLIAM S. VARE for a seat in the United States Senate"; and thereupon the Senate referred the claim of the said WILLIAM S. VARE to a seat in the United States Senate to the said committee, with instructions to grant such further hearing to the said WILLIAM S. VARE and to take such further evidence on its own motion as it deemed proper in the premises; and

Whereas the said committee, having complied with the direction of the Senate, has made a further report to the Senate (Rept. 1858, 70th Cong., 2d sess.) of its doings in the premises. From said report and the evidence taken by the committee it appears that the evidence as to fraud and corruption in said primary election has not been refuted, and the same stands as it did when the committee filed its partial report to the Senate (Rept. 1197, 69th Cong.); and

Whereas in addition to the investigation made by the said committee concerning the said primary election, said committee has also investigated the alleged election of the said WILLIAM S. VARE to the United States Senate at the general election held November 2, 1926, and in such investigation has discovered various and numerous instances of fraud and corruption occurring at said general election in behalf of the candidacy of the said WILLIAM S. VARE for a seat in the United States Senate; and

Whereas the said committee, from the foregoing facts and conclusions, including those previously reported in regard to said primary election, has reported to the Senate (Rept. 1858, 70th Cong., 2d sess.) that the said WILLIAM S. VARE is not entitled to a seat in the United States Senate: Therefore be it

Resolved—

(1) That the said report (S. Rept. 1858, 70th Cong., 2d sess.) be, and the same is hereby, approved and adopted.

(2) That the said WILLIAM S. VARE be, and he is hereby, denied a seat in the United States Senate; and

(3) That the said committee, in accordance with its suggestion in said report, be continued in office during the interim between the final adjournment of the Seventieth Congress and until the convening of the first session of the Seventy-first Congress, and thereafter during the life of said Congress, unless sooner discharged by the Senate; and that Senate Resolutions 195, 227, 258, and 324 of the Sixty-ninth Congress and Senate Resolutions 2 and 10 of the Seventieth Congress be, and the same are hereby, continued in full force and effect to the same extent as though herein fully set forth until said committee is finally discharged.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie over, under the rule.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question. The resolution, if I understand it, would if it should be adopted deny Mr. VARE a seat in the Senate. Is it the view of the Senator that the committee, unless it is continued until another Congress, dies with the expiration of the present Congress? If that should be the view of the Senate, then if this resolution is not acted upon before March 4 it will be necessary to have a resolution offered that will continue the committee until final report shall have been submitted by it. May I add that in my opinion the committee needs no further authority from Congress to continue its existence. It now has the authority to function until its labors are concluded and its final report has been presented to the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, the Senator has raised a very ancient question and a somewhat difficult one. I think it is covered by a resolution presented to the Senate by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and that the authority of the committee will continue until the committee shall have been discharged by the Senate. As on a former occasion, however, to save collateral controversies and disputes as to the authority of the committee, a provision was incorporated in the resolution which I have submitted on behalf of the Senator from Nebraska continuing it.

The resolution which the Senate adopted and which was presented by the Senator from Missouri contains this provision:

And that the said special committee appointed pursuant to Senate Resolution 195 of the Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, shall continue to execute the directions of the said several resolutions relating to the said committee until the Senate accepts or rejects the final report of the said special committee or otherwise orders.

Mr. KING. As I understand that was adopted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That resolution was agreed to and is the law under which the special committee is now proceeding. So, I myself do not think there is any occasion for the adoption of that clause in the resolution which expressly continues the committee; at least I do not now see any occasion for it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the Senator is right. The only reason I rose to propound the inquiry was because of the recitation in the resolution just submitted that the committee should be continued.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is fair to state that the provision which I have just read was incorporated in the resolution for the express purpose of making clear and relieving from all doubt any question as to the right of the committee to continue its action and study of the subject until final disposition.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. DILL. What will be the status of the report of the committee that has been made and is now on file if not acted upon at this Congress? Will that report stand, or will a new report be made?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. While this resolution calls for the approval and adoption of the report, as the Senator well knows, no action on the report as such is required under the usual procedure of the Senate.

Mr. DILL. But the question in my mind was this: If no action is taken on the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska, and the Congress ends, as it will, on the 4th of March, when we meet in the next session of Congress will the committee be under the duty of filing a new report, or will this report stand?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Oh, no; I think it will not have to file a new report. My mind is clear on that.

Mr. DILL. The report does not die?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator is through, I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I shall be glad to answer it.

Mr. KING. In view of the position of the Senator from Pennsylvania at a previous session of Congress, with respect to the power of the committee and its authority to continue after the adjournment of that session, I should like to ask the Senator if he now contends that the Reed committee dies with the death of this Congress on the 4th of March?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No, Mr. President; I do not. In the former case I tried to state my position as being this: That the Senate undoubtedly has power to create a committee and make it continuing from one Congress to another. I took the position then that the Senate had not done so; but in the resolution which has just been read by the Senator from Arkansas I feel very sure that the Senate has done so, and that this special committee does continue in power over the coming change in the Congress.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that there was a sharp conflict in regard to the matter to which he has just referred. The position was taken by a number of Senators, among them the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], and the members of the committee, that the committee had full authority to continue the investigation ordered by the Senate, notwithstanding the adjournment of Congress, and that no further authority was required in order that they might continue their work until it was finished and a final report submitted. I think, with all due respect to my able friend from Pennsylvania, that his position and that of those who supported that view, including the present occupant of the chair [Mr. FESS in the chair], was not the correct one.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Be that as it may, Mr. President, I think we are all agreed that there can be no question about the continuance of the committee now; and in further answer to the Senator from Washington——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Neither can there be any question about the continuance of the issue underlying the committee's report.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; that is just what I was going to answer.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Before Mr. VARE can take his seat there must be affirmative action by the Senate entitling him to do so.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I think there is no question about that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And before he can be finally rejected a resolution must be adopted similar to that which has been proposed.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. But the report of the committee is advisory to the next Senate as well as it is to this one, and its conclusion could be adopted by the Senate of the Seventy-first Congress just as well as by the present Senate, or it could be adopted by the One hundred and seventieth Congress, for that matter. It lies in our files as advice to the Senate, and continues to have that power.

Mr. President, unless there is something further that is desired, I have another matter that I want to bring up.

Mr. REED of Missouri. In connection with this?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I should like to conclude this matter.

Mr. President, it seems to me quite manifest that in all probability the Senate will not take action on this case at this session; but, whether they do or not, I think it still remains a matter that compels the continuance of the committee. There is pending a case which was brought by the committee on behalf of the Senate, known as the Cunningham case. It is before the United States circuit court of appeals. The Senate and the committee are represented by former Attorney General Wickersham.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. KING. The matter is now being carried to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well. When that case is decided it will be necessary for the committee to attend to the business of settling the expenses that may be incident to the appeal. For that reason it is necessary to have the committee continue in existence. That business can not possibly be wound up while I am a Member of the Senate; and, accordingly, Mr. President, I move that I be discharged from further service in connection with the committee, and that the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] be substituted in my stead.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. KING. I think that course should not be determined upon so long as the question is not decided as to whether there will be a vote upon this resolution. If it is understood now that no further action upon the report is to be taken during this session, then I shall be glad to support the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I may say to my brother that in any event it will be necessary to have some one on the committee because of the Cunningham case. That can not be settled at this time.

Mr. KING. What I had in mind was this: If this matter is to be further discussed or considered before adjournment, I think the Senate should have the benefit of the Senator's views as chairman of the committee and the prestige which his position on the committee would give to the report—although that is not necessary—because of the high standing of the Senator and the knowledge of his views on the questions involved. As soon as it is understood that the report will lie over and not be further considered prior to adjournment, then I shall be very glad to have the motion offered by the Senator adopted.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, if any member of the committee with which I have been serving feels that way, I will withdraw my request for the present; but it will be necessary, or at least desirable, that some one be appointed in my stead before this session adjourns, and I beg to suggest the distinguished senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator that before this Congress adjourns the committee should be filled by reason of the departure from the Senate of the chairman of the committee, the senior Senator from Missouri; and before we do adjourn, if no action is taken upon the resolution, I shall be very glad to see the Senator from Arkansas named as a member of the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have not said that I would accept service on the committee, thanking both the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, before we leave this subject I desire to ask a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I did not hear the full discussion. As I understand, the present status of the matter is that the committee has made a preliminary report on the Vare case?

Mr. KING. I think it has been denominated by some member of the committee a final report.

Mr. SMITH. If this report be final, what function will the committee perform if continued?

Mr. KING. I should modify that statement in this way—final in the sense that it is a finality with respect to recommendations touching the Vare case and the right of Mr. VARE to retain his seat; but the report asks that the committee be continued because of the pendency of an action in the circuit court of appeals which is being carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, growing out of one question involved in this case.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The report is not final in the strict sense of the term, because the committee's statement shows the necessity for further action by the committee.

Mr. SMITH. So that the present report may be modified in material respects by subsequent action of the committee?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as a member of the committee, my view is that the majority report is the report of the committee. It is possible that if the report is not acted upon the committee might modify it before final action is taken by the Senate. That would probably be the result if Mr. VARE should be able to appear before the committee and present testimony that would cause the committee to modify or change its conclusions upon questions involved in the case. The committee, I think, would have the right to withdraw its report, or at least to file a supplemental one, modifying the terms of the report now before the Senate, so that it would express their views and conclusions.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, on page 15 of the committee report submitted by the Senator from Missouri this morning is the following language:

> There is still pending before the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Third Circuit, the habeas corpus proceedings of Thomas W. Cunningham, in which your committee and the Senate is represented by the Hon. George W. Wickersham, and which involves the right and power of the Senate to enforce its orders. In order to make a proper report to the Senate in this matter, and to take such further action with reference to the said Thomas W. Cunningham as may be deemed necessary, it is advisable that the committee continue to exist until the final disposition of the said case.

My view of the matter is that during its future existence the committee would not be precluded from submitting to the Senate any further finding that it might make; but to all intents and purposes the report is final in so far as the right of Mr. VARE to a seat in the Senate is concerned.

Mr. SMITH. Now, Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arkansas a question? The recommendation of the committee is adverse; that Mr. VARE is not entitled to his seat. In case of a vote, that would not preclude a vote as to whether he should be seated and then the report adopted; or, if the report is adopted, does it preclude a vote on whether or not Mr. VARE should be entitled to be brought in?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. My impression is that action by the Senate would come in the form of a resolution expressly declaring that WILLIAM S. VARE is entitled to a seat in the Senate or is not entitled to a seat in the Senate. The resolution which I have presented is that he is not entitled to a seat in the Senate.

Mr. SMITH. I wanted to make that inquiry so that I would know clearly the situation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The resolution that has been presented does not contemplate that Mr. VARE shall first be seated and then immediately be unseated.

Mr. SMITH. It was not my purpose to know whether it contemplated that; but I should like to have an opportunity to have the question so put that I might not prejudice my vote by voting against his being seated as a final expression on my part; but I should like to have an opportunity to vote on what I consider the constitutional right of a State and an individual to be seated, and then I should like to be given the opportunity to decide, from the facts brought out by the committee, as to whether or not I should vote to have him continue to occupy the seat.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think I need hardly state to the Senator from South Carolina that he can secure that opportunity by simply offering a substitute for the resolution presented by me or the Senator from Nebraska. As suggested by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], the Senate has voted heretofore once; but if the Senator from South Carolina wants to vote on the matter again, he can do so by offering a resolution to that effect.

Mr. SMITH. I was hoping that there might be an opportunity to act on the case without that being done. Perhaps that may be done before the final vote is taken.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I myself have no sympathy whatever with the proposal just made by my friend from South Carolina. So far as I am concerned, I will not be a party to a proceeding, after the course this matter has taken, first to seat Mr. VARE, with the understanding that he is to be immediately unseated. I think that would be——

Mr. McKELLAR. It would serve no useful purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It would serve no useful purpose, and would be absurd, meaning no disrespect to my friend from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. I understand; but what we may do now may be a precedent for to-morrow and hereafter, and our unseating Mr. VARE instanter might be invoked as a precedent in a case when the circumstances were not sufficient to justify our unseating the incumbent.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I suggest that we have already made that precedent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield further, and if so, to whom?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. I understand that we have in one case established that precedent, but repeating it from day to day might strengthen it.

Mr. McKELLAR. We have done it twice.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator from Utah will allow me, I want to state that I have no more taste and no more tolerance for the orgies that have been brought out in several of these cases than any other Senator, but I do not want to establish a precedent that might be invoked to the disaster of States and individuals. I do not want to be a party to establishing a precedent which it is not necessary to establish in order to carry out what we can do constitutionally, sanely, and soundly.

Mr. BRATTON. We have already established that precedent once.

Mr. SMITH. I understand we have established it one time, but why repeat a wrong a half a dozen times?

Mr. BRATTON. It is a question whether it is wrong.

Mr. SMITH. It is, in my opinion.

Mr. McKELLAR. We not only made the precedent in the Vare case but we made it in the Smith case.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, many tributes have been paid to the Senator from Missouri, not only in the Senate but throughout the country. His ability, courage, and devotion to what he conceives to be right have given to him a deservedly great reputation. His long service in the United States Senate has afforded him opportunities to render valuable service to his country. His voluntary departure from the Senate will be a great loss, not only to the legislative branch of the Government but to the entire country.

During my 12 years of service in the Senate I have learned to admire the Senator and to appreciate the arduous and effective work which he has performed in the interest of the public. He has been a defender of the Constitution, and has lifted his eloquent voice in defense of individual rights and the rights of local self-government.

In the investigation of the so-called Vare case the Senator from Missouri has borne the heaviest part of the burden, which the Senate by its direction imposed upon the special committee.

I am not in entire accord with members of the committee, as their views are expressed in the report just submitted by the Senator from Missouri as chairman of the special committee. The Senator in submitting the report has referred to a statement made by me and incorporated in the report. On page 15 of the report it reads:

> All of the members of the committee concur in the foregoing report.

Then follows the statement—

> But in addition thereto Senator KING presents the following statement, giving his individual conclusions.

I do not fully agree with all the conclusions contained in the report or with that part of the report which states, in effect, that Mr. VARE should be denied his seat in the Senate without having been sworn in and that the case should now be closed.

I have upon former occasions, and in a number of cases which have come before the Senate, taken the position that persons presenting themselves to the Senate armed with proper certificates from sovereign States were entitled to be sworn in, even though the situation was such as to call for their subsequent exclusion from the Senate.

First, let me read from the report the paragraphs which I prepared and which are found therein:

> The record shows that in August, 1928, Mr. VARE suffered a paralytic stroke, since which time he has been unable to appear before the committee or the Senate. The record also shows that he is still in a serious physical condition as a result of such stroke. It also appears that he desires to come before the committee and testify and speak in his own behalf and perhaps offer additional testimony.
>
> The record as it now stands would warrant action by the committee adverse to the right of Mr. VARE, after being sworn in, to retain his seat in the Senate; but in view of his serious physical condition and his desire to be heard by the committee, and perhaps offer further testimony, I am unwilling to close the case and submit a final report to the Senate. In my opinion a further reasonable time should be given Mr. VARE to present his case to the committee.

I shall not at this time attempt to discuss the case or to analyze the testimony which has been submitted. I have felt that Mr. VARE should have full opportunity to present to the committee any evidence which he might have bearing upon the report made by Mr. Clapp and others, agents of and representing the committee. The facts found by them have had an important bearing upon the conclusions which I have reached. These facts, in my opinion, might very well be the controlling factor in determining the action of the Senate upon the question of Mr. VARE's right to a seat in the Senate. It is my opinion that in view of Mr. VARE's serious illness, and the importance of the facts submitted by Mr. Clapp, that the former should be given an opportunity to present to the committee his views upon these facts, and to submit by way of answer or reply thereto any pertinent evidence he desires to offer.

The action of the Senate in denying Mr. VARE the right to take the oath of office as Senator was based upon the testimony taken by the committee dealing almost exclusively with the primary election. The subsequent investigation by the committee related largely to the general election and the charges of fraud and corruption in connection therewith.

I might add that the record shows that in the primary election Mr. VARE personally expended $71,438. This sum was used exclusively by him in sending out letters to the voters of Pennsylvania. My recollection is that he sent two letters or circulars to many of the voters of his State, the cost of each letter or circular, including postage, and so forth, being 6½ cents. The record also shows that Mr. Pinchot and his organization spent $187,029 and that the so-called Pepper-Fisher organization expended $1,804,979. There are doubtless some fair-minded persons who would question whether the expenditures in the primary election were sufficient ground for refusing Mr. VARE a seat in the Senate. The question has sometimes been asked what would have been the situation if the principal opponent of Mr. VARE had been nominated instead of Mr. VARE, in view of the fact that the organization with which the former was connected expended considerably more than double the amount expended by the Vare-Beidelman organization.

Senators will recall that there was a bitter contest in Pennsylvania between factions in the Republican Party for control of the Republican machine. There was the so-called Mellon organization, which the record shows sought to wrest control of the Republican Party organization in the State from the so-called Vare organization.

Under the laws of Pennsylvania most of the party leaders, including the precinct, county, and district chairmen, are elected at the same time the general primary election is held. In the primary election at which Mr. VARE received the nomination for Senator there were more than 3,000 of these political officers to be elected. Congressmen, and also the State ticket, including members of the legislature, judges, and so forth, were to be elected. It is somewhat difficult to determine just what part of the amount expended in the election should be charged against the senatorial and congressional candidates, and because of this difficulty it is the view of many that under conditions such as are shown in this election the senatorial candidates should be charged with the entire amounts expended by the organizations or groups with which they were respectively identified.

I have sometimes felt that it is unfortunate that elections for Senators and Congressmen are not held at different times from State elections. If this were done it would be very easy to determine just what was expended for the election of Senators and Congressmen. I might add that Mr. Beidelman was a candidate for governor upon a platform demanding repeal of the law which exempted certain corporations in the State of Pennsylvania from taxation. It is obvious that an issue of this character would arouse the opposition of corporations which were favored under the law freeing them from the burdens of taxation. And it is quite certain that such beneficiaries gave their support to the so-called Fisher-Pepper organization.

It is quite likely that contributions and expenditures were made in behalf of Beidelman by persons not concerned in the election of Mr. VARE and that support was given to Mr. Fisher by persons who were not particularly concerned in the election of Mr. Pepper. However, in this election, with all of these conflicting interests, currents and cross-currents, the expenditures by the triangular groups were, so to speak, thrown into one hopper and ascribed to the three senatorial candidates. This situation calls for a fair and just appraisal of the situation and the factors involved.

Mr. President, just a word in view of the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the questions submitted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. As I stated a moment ago I have taken the view that when a person presents himself with a certificate of a sovereign State, he should be permitted to take the oath of office. There are many precedents in support of this view. I concede that there are some opposing precedents. A number of years ago this question was sharply raised in the House of Representatives. Majority and minority reports were filed in the case to which I refer.

The minority report was prepared by Representatives Littlefield, of Maine, and De Armond, of Missouri, and in my opinion it contains one of the ablest discussions ever presented upon this important question. In it the contention was made that a Representative-elect, having the certificate of his State, was entitled to be sworn in. The precedents were examined and the question elaborately argued. Some of the great lawyers of the House supported this view although a majority of the Members declined to follow it.

Mr. President, I have given this case most serious consideration realizing as I do its importance, not only to Mr. VARE but to the people of his State and the United States. After weighing all the facts, I have reached the conclusion that it would not be proper or right to close the case at this time. In my opinion it should be continued, and Mr. VARE given further reasonable time to appear and present his views to the committee and to the Senate, and also to adduce any pertinent testimony that he may have to offer relating to the matters embraced in the findings of Mr. Clapp, the committee's representative. Important as the question of expenditures is in determining the issues involved, I regard the charges of fraud and corruption in the city of Philadelphia in the primary as well as in the general election, as of greater importance in the final determination of the question before us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) authorizing an investigation and survey for a Nicaraguan canal.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I have listened to the argument of the Senator from Utah for the past few moments, and I want to say that it is the very kind of argument that Mr. VARE would wish to have presented in his behalf. I have great respect for the Senator from Utah and his views and for the study he has made of the question, but if the viewpoint expressed by him here is to be accepted by the Senate, then all that a man running for office need to do is to have whatever money he wants to expend in excess of what he should spend handled by some committee that has charge of the party ticket as a whole, and then he can come in and say, "I do not know how much of this was spent for me and I do not know how much was spent for several hundred other candidates."

It is a dangerous proposition. It is a dangerous suggestion. If it is recognized and accepted by the Senate, it strikes at the very heart of the idea of controlling campaign expenditures. I not only disagree with it most radically, but I think it would be a most unfortunate thing if the Senate by any action, either a committee report or in any other way, lent countenance to the idea that a man can not be held accountable for the money spent in his behalf, because it is spent by some organization that may be supporting other candidates.

Mr. President, I shall not enlarge upon the discussion now, but I did want to say that much at this moment, because I did not want the statement to pass unchallenged.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington misconceives my position. I indicated that I regarded as the most serious question presented in the record, that of fraud and corruption in the primary and general elections. I believe that the expenditures in the primary election were too great and can not be justified; but it is a fact that perhaps the greater part of such expenditures were not directly for Mr. VARE or Mr. Pepper, but for the organizations with which they were connected, and because of the struggle between opposing factions in the Republican Party to secure control of the party organization.

MAJ. WALTER REED AND ASSOCIATES

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, from the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably, with amendments the bill (H. R. 13060) to recognize the high public service rendered by Maj. Walter Reed and those associated with him in the discovery of the cause and means of transmission of yellow fever, and I submit a report (No. 1912) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

In a word this is what the bill provides. Back in October, 1900, Dr. Walter Reed took his yellow fever experiment crew to Cuba and did one of the greatest things that had ever been done up to that time in the history of preventive medicine. He found that all existing theories for the cause of yellow fever were wrong, and he proved that it was due to the bite of an infectious mosquito of a particular variety. He could not have proved that fact had it not been for the heroic assistance of about 25 men in his detachment who underwent the most terrible experiments in order to prove that yellow fever was not contagious but was contracted only in this one way.

Some of these men put on the underclothing and night clothing of persons who had died of yellow fever, and for a month slept in the stained and almost indescribable bed clothing of patients who had died of yellow fever. Probably no finer heroism for the benefit of humanity had ever occurred in the history of the world. Others of these men, after the theory of mosquito inoculation had been proved to be probable, exposed themselves to the bite of infectious mosquitoes and when at first they did not fall ill of yellow fever they exposed themselves again and again until they did get it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what is the relief afforded?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It is a House bill and we have amended it only to make the names absolutely correct. It provides that in the Army register there shall be carried as long as they live the names of this group of heroic men who underwent the experiment, and, secondly, that for all of the group there shall be paid the same pension as is now being paid to a considerable number of them by special acts, a uniform pension of $125 a month, which is the amount that has been fixed in those special acts.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Were the special acts passed on account of this service?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; on account of this service only, and there have been a half a dozen of them. It seemed wise to the committee that the group should be treated as a whole.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if the bill includes any provision for any of the widows?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It includes a provision for the widows of two of the men.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I merely want to say that judging from the statement submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania, the measure seems to be meritorious, and I shall give it my hearty support.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROOKHART in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I merely wanted to say that no braver thing ever was done. No more heroic action ever occurred. Those whom this measure seeks to honor ought to be honored, and honored to the full. I hope that the bill will pass.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am delighted that the Senator from Pennsylvania has brought this report to us. I have had pending here for some time, as the Senator knows, a similar bill, S. 3364. I am happy that this act of justice is to be done to-day. Certainly we should do honor to those men who risked their lives in order that science and humanity might benefit. Thousands of lives have been saved through their sacrifices. All honor to Reed and his brave associates!

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, some time ago I introduced into the RECORD an article relating to this matter and especially relating to Mr. Levi E. Folk, of South Carolina, who was one of the young men who went through this ordeal and stayed in it from the beginning to the end. I hope the bill will be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments of the Committee on Military Affairs were, on page 1, line 10, after the name "Agramonte," to strike out "John H. Andrus" and insert "James A. Andrus"; on page 2, line 1, after the name "Covington," to strike out "William H. Deans" and insert "William H. Dean"; in line 2, to strike out "Wallace Forbes" and insert "Wallace W. Forbes"; in the same line, strike out the name "P. Hamann" and insert "Paul Hamann"; in line 4, to strike out "William Olson" and insert "William Olsen"; in line 5, before the name "R. P. Cooke" to insert "Doctor"; in the same line, strike out "Thomas H. England" and insert "Thomas M. England"; and on page 3, line 5, after the word "Private," to strike out "John H. Andrus" and insert "James A. Andrus," so as to make the bill read:

